Israel Plummer was silent with surprise and sympathy. He wanted to say something by way of comfort, but he did not know how. However he did the first thing which came into his mind, which certainly was the best thing. He climbed down out of his buggy and carefully tied old Fan to the hitching-post, although the good creature had not been known to walk off unbidden for many years. Then he sat down on the wooden horse-block beside Jonas and put his big, red hand on his knee.

"I hain't no words to comfort ye, Jonas," he said; "I reckon nothing I could say would ease you up a mite, but you know I'm powerful sorry for ye." After a moment's silence he continued, "'The Lord gave, an' the Lord hath taken away,' Jonas, you know that."

"I know that," replied Jonas in his broken voice, "but I can't just yet bring myself to say, 'Blessed be the name of the Lord.' I've tried to lead an upright life for forty years an' serve Him to the best of my ability, an' I think I may say I've been a consistent church member, too; but this here's an awful blow to me, Israel, an awful blow."

"I know it—I know it," replied Israel Plummer, "it's certain sure an awful loss to have the companion of your life took away so sudden. It's hard—it's hard, but try to be resigned. Think of how it's been your stiddy an' constant aim to make her happy an' comfortable. Think of how you've always tried—as I believe you have, Jonas,—to ease her work to her an' make her life a happy one. Think of how—"

But Jonas interrupted him with his mournful voice. "Israel," he said, wiping his eyes with the red bandana, "you mean well. You're a good man an' a good neighbor, an' a friend for forty year. But you don't reelize what you're sayin.' I was good to Mis' Dodge, in a way. I did do my duty by her in many ways, but what cuts me now like a two-edged sword is that I didn't let on to her how much I thought of her. I didn't somehow think of it, an' kissin' ways an' pettin'—I dropped 'em 'bout the time the honeymoon was past. Hundreds of times in all these years—yes, hundreds—I might have made her go ridin' with me when I had to drive somewhere five, ten or twenty miles, an' I'd oughter done it. She always loved to ride. An' sometimes I'd look back an' ketch sight of that wishful look in her eyes when I'd drive off alone, an' I'd know by them eyes she wanted to go, too. But I had that foolish notion—that wicked notion—that women's place was to home, an' not gaddin' around the country just fer the sake of gaddin.' An' I'd think, too, the neighbors would say it looked foolish for us old married folks to act like a young feller an' his girl, forever a-goin' buggy-ridin'."

It seemed to comfort the stricken man to talk, and Israel Plummer, according to his usual custom, picked up a stick and proceeded to whittle. His bent face was full of sorrow and genuine sympathy for his old neighbor.

Jonas went on presently: "Strange how every little thing comes back to me now! I recollect one morning years ago—it was in May an' the prettiest mornin' I ever see, I do believe—all apple blossoms an' blue sky an' bird-song—I had to drive the colts over to Millville on business, fourteen mile, you know, an' I left her a-standin' at the gate. She always watched me out of sight, an' such a wistful look in her face, I'll never forget! I'd oughter have stopped an' made her fix up a lunch an' come along just to enjoy the pretty mornin', but I didn't. Wicked—cruel—selfish! Yes, sir, that's what I was! Selfish, most of all, though I thought my very eyes of that woman."

"Did you an' her have any conversation before she passed away?" inquired Mr. Plummer, respectfully. "You mebby told her how you'd felt all them years, an' she died peaceful an' happy."

"I did—I did!" cried Jonas. "I sent 'em all out o' the room this mornin' after the doctor left an' I knew she couldn't last. I knelt down there by the bed an' kissed her as I hadn't in many a year, an' I told her all about it; how awful dear she was to me an' always had been, an' how I repented because of the things I had left undone. I mentioned everything an' asked her to overlook it all. I shed tears, bitter tears, Israel, an' asked her to forgive me every act of mine in the past that was hoggish an' mean an' hateful. An' she did; she put her poor, thin, hard-workin' hand on my cheek an' said to not feel bad—it was all right—she knowed now that I'd cared for her all the time, though she hadn't always been sure. An' there wa'n't nothin' to forgive, she said, an' to never mind, mebby the Heavenly Father would fix it so's we two could go ridin' together in the better land if such things was possible. And it didn't sound no ways disrespectful to the Lord to hear her say that; she said it so solemn-like and trustin'. She died happy, Israel, rejoicing in her Saviour an' turnin' her eyes toward me with her last breath. But it's hard—it's hard. I can't seem to reelize it—I can't seem to have it so."

Mr. Israel Plummer, with a sympathetic moisture in his own eyes, slid his knife into his pocket, rose and untied old Fan. Then he climbed into the buggy—the old, rickety, uncomfortable buggy with which he had been content for a dozen years. He leaned toward Jonas and held out his hand. "Well, Brother Dodge," he said, "just call on me for any service I can render; you know I'll do all I can in this your hour of need. An' I'll go right now an' fetch Mis' Plummer down. She's great at comfortin' an' consolin' in the house of mournin'. Your Lyddy'll need some motherly soul to help her bear up, an' she can stay all night with her as well as not. Good-by, brother, put your trust in the Lord. He'll help you through this time of trial."

The old buggy rattled away up the road, and Jonas, with bowed head and red and swollen eyes, went up the path to the front door, from which floated that which made him shudder—the long, black streamer, which has sent a thrill of agony through a thousand hearts.

The sorrowful, self-accusing words of Jonas Dodge rang in Israel Plummer's ears all the way home and for days thereafter. The funeral was a large one, and people came from miles around to do honor to the timid little woman who had always stayed at home and done her duty. The old minister's sermon was solemn and impressive, and his words of consolation to the mourners were full of love and touching sympathy. Long years of experience with those that mourn had tuned his soul to utter sweet comfort to the bereaved, and on that solemn Sunday afternoon, with the strange hush broken only by the twitter of birds in the apple tree outside the door, his voice, broken by sobs, fell upon the ears of his listeners with such a tenderness that women sobbed aloud, and men were not ashamed of their own tears. In Israel Plummer's soul a resolve was crystallizing, and the honest tears which rolled down his bronzed cheek only sanctified his purpose.

Several days after the funeral Mr. Israel Plummer might have been seen—and was seen by all his astonished neighbors — driving along the highway in a shining new phaeton whose every curve spoke of ease and comfort. Old Fan, in a handsome, nickel-trimmed harness, held her head proudly aloft as though the spirit of her long-departed youth had come to life within her at sight of these marvelous things. People were surprised, to say the least, for Mr. Plummer, with all his good qualities, had the reputation of being "close-fisted," and it was a shock to the community to see the elegance of his new turnout. "He needed a new buggy bad enough," his neighbors said when they discussed the news, "but who'd ever have thought he'd launch out that way, close as he is!"

But Mr. Plummer knew what he was about. When Mrs. Plummer saw him drive up the lane and halt at the side door she ran out in consternation. "Pa Plummer!" she cried, "what does this mean? Whose buggy is that, an' where did that harness come from, an' that beautiful lap-robe? Pa, tell me, what does it mean? It ain't—it can't be ours?"

Mr. Plummer climbed carefully out of the phaeton and quietly tied old Fan to the hitching-post. A broad smile strove to find expression on his face, and finally succeeded. "How do you like it, Isabel?" he said. When had he called her Isabel before! For years and years—ever since the children began to come, it had been only "ma." A slight flush spread over Isabel's thin cheeks. "Like it!" she said slowly, "What made you get it, pa? Wa'n't the other good enough?"

"Not good enough for you, Isabel," he said, coming close to her and awkardly putting his big hand on her shoulder. At that moment Janie, the eldest daughter, came to the door and paused in astonishment, first at the hearty kiss she caught being bestowed upon her mother's cheek and then at the shining phaeton and the new harness.

"Well, I never!" she cried, and she spoke truly. Never in the twenty years of her life had she seen a kiss bestowed upon "ma" by "pa." Never had her eyes beheld so beautiful a turnout in the familiar lane. No wonder she turned an astonished gaze upon her father. Jess and Sue came running out presently to exclaim and wonder and admire, and big, stalwart, sunbrowned John came through the barnyard from the field and stopped short in amazement to see old Fan in her new trappings.

The young folks fell in heartily with "pa's" plan. "To be sure she shall go!" said Janie, energetically. "I guess she's earned it after all these years of hard work and staying at home." And Jess and Sue chimed in, "Pa Plummer, you're a hummer!" And Mr. Plummer only laughed at the unexpected slang.

"You've got to let me use it, too, remember that, sir!" cried Jess, who was never known to stand in awe of her father, "and here's John, thinking this minute how he'd love to take Mertilly Jones riding in that buggy!"

"And you shall, John, my boy!" said Israel Plummer, heartily. "But understand, children," he said with sober meaning, "this rig was bought specially for your mother an' she's a-goin' ridin' with me every time I have to go to town or over to Uncle Silas' or up to county court or down the river to see about my other farm. An' you big, strappin' girls must just take hold an' ease up the housework an' take the responsibility on your own shoulders a good deal. Mebby Lyddy Dodge would have her mother to-day if she hadn't always worked so hard an' stayed to home so close."

And Jess, daring girl that she was, seized Pa Plummer's arm and drew it around the little mother's waist, spread her pretty hands above their heads and cried, "Bless you, my children!"

Los Angeles, Cal.

Lady Henry Somerset's Annual Address Before the National British Women's Temperance Association.

AS we meet here to-day, I recollect that it is the eighth year that I have been called to speak to you at the ingatherings of our great society. It is natural that at these council meetings we should set open the doors leading toward the past, that we should look down the vista of the years, and, warned by defeats, encouraged by achievement, regard events that have gone by in that softened light which falls upon whatever is passed from us forever. Trooping toward us to-day come memories tender with all that time has brought to us of sorrow and joy, of suffering and success, and I realize that as I say the few words that I shall utter here that changes have come over our work that must make this year memorable in the annals of our society. It would be impossible for any of us who look seriously upon the great events which mark life to take lightly the responsibility of our meeting at this hour. It is perhaps a time when the spirit in which we gather may stamp the history of our movement, and I feel sure that every earnest-minded woman has come to this annual council meeting with special prayer that God's direction may hold and guide us, and that the power of His indwelling Spirit may be specially manifest among us.

I do not conceal the fact for one moment that the happiness which has characterized our meetings in other years is absent to-day. That the past year has been especially marked to me by sorrow and by sickness, is known to all, but there are points which have brought unusual responsibility and difficulty, about which I am determined to speak to you to-day, because I believe the truest way of meeting all the circumstances of life is by implicitly trusting each other. I am perfectly aware and at once will admit that to many of you has come through my action, trouble which I would not wish to minimize; that some of my most loyal friends have keenly felt that I have erred in judgment, and that perhaps such error may have shaken faith in me, which was, I fear, given perhaps too ungrudgingly in other years. I had thought that much that I should have said to you to-day would have been spoken by another voice than mine, but God has willed that otherwise.

It is well known to you that before the last council meeting I had addressed a letter to Lord George Hamilton, the secretary of state for India, in answer to one that I received from him with regard to the health of the Indian army. In that letter you will be aware that I stated that if it was necessary to take the stringent measures which the government demanded with regard to the health of the army, men should be treated in precisely the same way as women, and that some scheme must be devised by which the shame that was attached to an immoral woman should be equally borne by the man. What I advocated then was intended as a quarantine system and not a license system; and I appeal to the record of the little work I have been able to undertake in the past to defend me from the imputation that I desired for one moment to make sin more safe for impure men, or to lower the moral tone of the community by making vice easy. I fell into the error of believing that it was impossible for Christian idealists, who must always hold to the highest as the standard which God gives to the world, for one moment to relinquish this, in order to adopt any measure which dealt with the regulation of anything that is wrong, instead of standing firm by the principle of the abolition of all evil. Perhaps the reason that I felt strongly on this question arose from the fact that some years ago I remember coming in contact at the Lock hospital with two soldiers' wives, both of them young women. One had a baby but a few months old, the other had scarcely been married a year. Both were dying the most horrible and cruel deaths—absolutely innocent victims of the sin of others, and I remember how beseechingly both these women pleaded that other women should be in some way protected from the fate that had come to them. We are some of us apt to fall a prey to that easy error that we can deal quickly with effect rather than patiently labor to eradicate cause, and if I have any excuse to offer for my error it would be the remembrance of those agonized women and the thought that there were others suffering the same unendurable martydom.

But I desire to offer this as no excuse; I tell it to you as a fact. I have seen that there is only one way by which to attain the end for which we every one of us pray and work, and that is by unflinchingly upholding the standards of right and endeavoring slowly but safely to bring men and women to a sense of their terrible responsibilities. It is known to most of you that when I saw the error into which I had fallen, I did the only thing that is possible for any of us to do, and that is to retrace my footsteps. I believe, however much apparent harm may come from any action of ours, that if the motive which prompted the mistake was not one of willful error, our very blunders may be turned eventually into unexpected channels of gracious good; and possibly the heated discussions that have arisen have been the means of educating many women who have hitherto thought little or taken but little interest in the question you have at heart. I say this because we are too apt to think that good must come our way, instead of remembering sometimes that it comes by the very means that we think most disastrous. If, however, my action has brought greater harm to the movement for which you stand, none has suffered more than I. I have no word of reproach for those who have misinterpreted the motive which led to my action. In the stress and strain of any battle we are sometimes blinded by the heat of the conflict and the dust and smoke of the encounter; but for the sake of the movement for which we stand, I believe that the spirit of charity to all and the intention to think the best of those with whom we have hitherto labored is essential to success, for I am certain as a body of Christian women it matters less what we do than what we are. Our cause is bound to triumph if it is God's cause, but we can hasten that success by presenting to the world the aspect that it needs so much, the revelation of the love of Christ to us, in us, through us.

I fully realize and thoroughly understand that in the minds of some there is a strong feeling that in order to preserve harmony among us, it would be best that this year I should not allow my name to stand among those who will be nominated as president, and therefore I have told the executive committee that I do not wish to be among the candidates for that office. Those who have worked with me so generously in the past will realize the motives which prompt me to this, for I would rather stand aside than lose one whole-hearted worker from the association, and if, as I have been told, there may be even one, two or three women—not to speak of a larger number—who might feel that they could not act with me in that unity which has characterized our relations in the past, and that my possible re-election might sever their connection with the association, I would infinitely rather stand aside. And so, in these closing words of this address, before I leave the post with which you have intrusted me for these last eight years, I have only one word to say. Eventual success to the work we hold dear is inevitable. They always win who side with God. The final victory, however long delayed, must be with God for the right. If we win in the visible and human part of the warfare we must come to that success by the same divine principles which are victorious in the realm of spiritual powers outside our own. We are called to do battle against great wrongs, we have enlisted in a warfare in which there is no discharge, but our marching orders are to love as well as to serve. "The devil has never been beaten by his own weapons," is a strong saying by one of our greatest leaders. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but the "love which thinketh no evil, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things" is the only defense for the cause of right against the triumph of wrong. There is a refrain of an old Methodist hymn which runs, "We must be what we ought to be to bring sinners home," and every day I live I feel more absolutely certain of the truth of those words. In the hurry of work, in the multiplication of anxiety, in the rush of these times, we are all so apt to overlook this aspect of our Christian life, and I believe the mistakes that we have made in the past (and I speak from personal experience, because I hold that is the only thing that is valuable to any of us) arise more from the fact that we have been too eager to accomplish, instead of being willing to wait and to receive, and I feel certain that the victories that can be won will be victories that will be the outcome of lonely hours of personal struggle, of patient waiting in the silence, of the will absolutely yielded, although the work in which we are engaged may seem to be retarded for a time.

The last word which I wish to speak to you here, which must come resting to-day on all our hearts as the best benediction that ever came to men, is "Peace be unto you." Has it ever occurred to you the deep significance that there may be for us in the words spoken by our Master when He appeared to that little band after His resurrection? They were frightened and amazed. And when it seemed to them hardly possible that amid the storm and turbulence of life His spirit should be near, "Peace be unto you" He said; and then, as credentials of that message, what was it that He showed to them? Not the signs of His triumph, not the tokens of His glorious resurrection and life, but the signs of His human suffering—"He showed them His hands and His feet!" And so I think that often to us there comes in the stress and strain of life a time when it is difficult to believe that He is near, and we are affrighted; but He says to us deep down in our nature, "Peace be unto you." Yet we don't understand the message, for it comes to us not in the tranquil hour, but through human suffering, and it is by that indelible nail-mark that we begin to understand that with the very agony, peace is born—He "shows us His hands and His feet." He tells us that suffering is our part and lot, we share His heritage with Him, and through that gateway only, we pass toward that peace "which no man taketh from us."

Our Own Reconcentrados.

BY CLARA MARSHALL.

IT requires strong nerves even to read of the sufferings of those wretched neighbors of ours, whom the United States government and people have been so practically and thoroughly pitying. And yet, such misery is not without precedent, even within our own borders. Who are these victimized reconcentrados of whom we have heard so much during the last few months? Men, women and children who have been condemned by a person in authority to give up their means of support, and quietly await death by starvation. Did the law allow this wholesale slaughter? Weyler would remind us in reply that in time of war the laws are silent.

How is it among ourselves in time of peace? The Spanish monster's victims, those who have died from disease and starvation in his pens here and there, number, according to a rough estimate, some 200,000. Horrors of war, we say—that is, war as Weyler makes it. Now for the horrors of peace in England and the United States—horrors of that season when the laws speak, and speak plainly! Last year's census of drunkards in England and Wales was 187,000. This means at least 200,000 reconcentrados, women and children left without support, and thereby condemned to misery and starvation. This was the work, not of one Weyler, but of many, and these many licensed by the government to do their worst. In our own land of liberty the Weylers have the same license, and as Spain has appropriated $600,000 to feed and clothe the wretches of his making, so the United States government appropriates year after year many times this sum for keeping alive the victims of her own Weylers, her 240,000 whisky sellers, and those who supply them with the means of devastating their country. Jails, hospitals, poorhouses, orphan asylums would no doubt exist if spirituous liquors were unknown in the land, but their crowded condition is the work of the liquor traffic.

We should love our neighbors as ourselves, but why should we love them better than ourselves? In the whole country, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it would be hard to find a newspaper that has not denounced the Spanish butcher with all the force that lies in printer's ink. How many of them have, in the meantime, called attention to the condition of our drunkards' families (not so interesting a title as reconcentrados) and those who have brought them to it?

When Weyler was turned loose upon insurgent Cuba, it was supposed that his martial misrule would last only a few months; that the island would soon be brought to acknowledge the authority of the step-mother country, and the result would be peace and such a degree of prosperity as Spain permits in her colonies. Our Weylers have, so far, been permanencies. When one falls at his post, another takes his place, and, when the time comes, renews his license to ruin and destroy. The law which humanity, prudence and common sense are endeavoring to license says in effect, "Take and kill." Where the Spanish commander has broken up one home the whisky seller has broken up a hundred, and the law of a self-styled civilized and enlightened country says, "As long as you can pay for the privilege, go on with your work."

As long as you can pay for the privilege. No danger of a recall in this case. The license to sell is safe as long as the drinking man can borrow or beg the price of a drink. That he is not a responsible person, after a certain period of indulgence in intoxicants, is well known to the physician; but the law takes no account of this. When its victim reaches the last stage of degradation, and his family is ready to swell the ever-increasing herd of reconcentrados, it sends him via a charity hospital to the potter's field, his wife and children to the poorhouse and—renews Weyler's license.

Temperance Work of a Missionary.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—During the years that I lived in Bandah, India, I introduced into the schools of which I had charge, the systematic study of the effects of the various intoxicants on the body and the mind. There was then no literature on the subject in the vernacular, and I was obliged to begin the work by writing a paper, outlining the plan for a meeting of my teachers, to give them the idea of what I wished to have done. The teachers were all very skeptical about it, and I had to "make it an order" to get them to attempt to adopt the plan at all. The oriental mind is very slow to accept anything new, and always holds everything strange in suspicion.

The plan was, briefly, to take the hour from three to four o'clock every Wednesday afternoon, and in the simplest language to instruct the school children about the evil effects of alcohol, opium, bhang, ganja, etc., on their bodies and minds; and on the first Wednesday of the month to invite the fathers, big brothers and other male relatives of the children to the schoolrooms, from half past four to six o'clock, to hear a paper by the teacher, and have an open discussion afterward.

The venture was successful beyond our wildest dreams. The second month we opened a pledge book in each schoolroom, and as we had a regular temperance meeting in our city reading-room at the same hour every Wednesday, we very soon had a long list of names on each book. During the "cold weather" I visited the village schools a couple of times, and interested some of the landlords in neighboring hamlets in the work, so that the Wednesday afternoon meetings became popular throughout the entire east end of the district.

On the second Saturday in May my teachers came to the semi-annual meeting and brought their reports. When the secretary gave the grand total of signatures to the pledge for the six months as 785 I could scarcely believe my ears. The report also said that the average attendance at the monthly meetings had been twenty, and that in nearly all the schools some of the fathers came in on Wednesday afternoons to hear the temperance lessons.

The dreadful heat of June drove me away from Bandah for a month, but with the second week in July we began our regular round of work again. Mrs. Hauser was in charge of the W. C. T. U. work in India at that time, and she sent me a copy of a section of the now famous polyglot petition with a request to circulate among my Zenana pupils for signatures. This I found very hard work, as all the women feared to sign the paper. I remember having had the petition nearly two years before I got the twenty-nine names which adorn it to-day.

Another "cold season" came and went and I made my usual tours of inspection and itinerancy in the district, visiting my schools and the villages and hamlets lying in all directions from them, and found that the interest in the Wednesday meetings kept up very well. We had worn the intoxicants somewhat threadbare, and varied our subjects by taking up debt, hoarding of money and jewelry, village sanitation, pure water, and other topics, and the meetings had been always well attended, with shrewd, and often acute, discussions following. (The papers prepared and read by the teachers were always turned over to me to read.)

It was the end of April again and the heat was getting very great when, one morning, as I returned from my city girls' school, a deputation of villagers awaited me. There were half a dozen zamindars, several patwaris, several chowkidars, and some servants. The leader was a nice old gentleman with white hair and courtly manners. He approached the veranda and salaamed profoundly, while the rest filed up and also salaamed. Upon my asking him what he wished, he said, "Your honor knows that you have taught us and our children the evil effects of drink and other intoxicants. Now there is a plan on foot to open drink-shops in our villages. For us (with a wave of the hand toward the other landlords) it will not matter; we shall never drink. But for the boys and the youths! They will all be ruined. Help us, madam, we do not want drink-shops in our villages."

I answered, "But, zamindar sahib, I can not stop the opening of drink-shops. You must go over to the court house and see the magistrate. The opening of drink-shops is by order of the government and I have nothing to do with it, though I am very sorry there are any to be opened in the villages."

Nothing availed, however. The old gentlemen alone, and all the others together, begged and pleaded for my intercession with the powers that were. In vain I protested that I was a private individual and had no voice in matters of government. In vain I besought them to lay their objection before the magistrate. What they wanted was my help, and I could not see how I could help them until I bethought me that I did not know the law with regard to drink-shops. The laws regarding orphan children, women, property, personal rights, I was thoroughly familiar with, but drink-shops I had never looked up.

I asked when these howlis were to be opened, and was told, "after the rains," that is, in six months. So I said, "I will find out what your rights are in the matter, and will let you know, if you will come to me again by the end of September." I also asked them if they meant to abide by their rights, and they said, "surely."

Innumerable things kept me busy for weeks, but the fierce heat finally drove me away to Simla. There, almost the first person I met was the secretary of the Army Temperance Society, and in talking over a little "shop" I remembered my promise, and asked him if he could tell me the law relating to the opening of howlis in villages. He brought me the law book, and I read and copied it, took it away and put it into my writing pad and forgot it. The first of July found me doing my regular work again, and not till the end of September did I once think of the precious paper tucked away in my traveling pad.

But one noon when I came home from school I found the same deputation of landlords and followers awaiting me, and when I explained to them the law, which was "local option," that by a two-thirds opposition no howlis could be opened, I confess I had not much faith that they would stand together and oppose the excise official. However, I did my best, explaining and emphasizing the necessity of two-thirds of the men in the villages that were threatened standing firm, if they wished to keep out the drink-shops, and then let them go.

In December I went out, and confess again that I was surprised to find that they had stood together and kept out the howlis. I also felt ashamed that I had even doubted the earnestness of the men, and realized how much more we can do in the way of the prevention of evil than in its cure, if we will but have more faith in the simple goodness of the human heart. Governments will find out other ways of making up "a deficiency of revenue" than by licenses for saloons and drink-shops or opium dens.

One of the needs of the times is for temperance workers to turn their attention to the scientific aspect of the question and they will meet with success there.

Let Our Army be Protected from Strong Drink.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Eight miles from Washington the government has leased a tract of land which has been plotted and laid out as a national encampment for the accommodation of 30,000 men. Troops from all parts of the country are mobilized there and prepared for active service. Quarters have been built for the men, stables for the horses and storehouses for ammunition and supplies.

This camp is beautiful for situation, being upon rolling ground, dry and sodded, with a general altitude of 450 feet. The view is fine, taking in the billowy hills and valleys of Virginia and Maryland. The air is bracing and health-giving. The Washington monument can be discerned, pointing its white finger to the sky. The tract includes a park of 900 acres, and woodland and meadow of 600 acres more. It is known as "Woodburn Manor," a fine old Virginia plantation.

A clear stream of water flows through the center of the property, fed by more than thirty beautiful springs. The headquarters are located in the mansion house, while the smaller buildings are used by the officers. The camp is two and one-half miles from the pretty village of Falls Church, a suburban health resort and the terminus of an electric line of railway to the capitol. Its railroad station and base of supplies is at Dunn Loring. Here are side track for supply trains, ample platforms, storehouses and all military facilities.

The first division to arrive and spread its white tents upon this ideal site was the National Guards of the District of Columbia. They promptly named the place Camp Harries (later changed to Alger), after their own popular leader. General Harries is a temperance man and a Christian, having joined the M. E. church under the preaching of Rev. S. M. Hartsock, the husband of the superintendent of the evangelistic department of the District W. C. T. U.

Camp Alger lies in a local option county (Fairfax) where the Good Templars are active and vigilant. The major in charge (Major Urell) has announced his intention to enforce in the camp the prohibition that prevails in the county. He says: "No intoxicating liquors shall be dispensed in the camp." The liquor traffic cannot believe that such will prevail. The Liquor Dealer, the organ of the local retail trade of the capital, says: "To attempt such a thing during war would be a serious mistake, and it is fortunate that those in authority are too wise to take such an insane step." It is said that merchants have laid in supplies, but those who know Major Urell predict for him victory. If Mrs. Ellis could have stayed with us a little longer her heart would have been cheered even as ours of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. Mrs. Ellis has worked valiantly to arouse high officials to the necessity of keeping liquor away from our soldiers and sailors.

Now what of the canteen? Would that were to be prohibited too.

The practice of giving free drinks to every soldier and sailor who can be enticed into a saloon, as has been done in New York and other cities is so detrimental that carloads of our men have passed through Washington toward the South with every other man more or less intoxicated. In commenting upon the protest of the Anti-Saloon League, The Liquor Dealer says:

"We wish to remind these solemn gentlemen that the liquor given by saloonkeepers to soldiers and sailors is given at great loss to themselves, and from the most patriotic and unselfish motives."

Patriotic and unselfish motives indeed! One who knows all about jolly jack tar and his temptations, says that the saloon is his worst and most relentless enemy.

Liquor has ever been associated with warfare, and has contributed to its horrors. The physiological effects of alcohol are being studied in a new light. The British war department has decided to exclude from its army in the Soudan all stimulants save in hospital service.

The British admiralty have recently issued orders that all spirits, wine and malt liquors be excluded from the crews of men-of-men when battle is imminent, instead of the double rations of grog formerly bestowed. This is the result of exhaustive experiments which have shown the harmful effects of stimulants. Ferocity, recklessness, blind fury are not desirable. A clear head, a steady hand, a calm demeanor, must be his who would, by nicety of adjustment and perfection of details make effective these magnificent engines of modern naval warfare. The spectacle of bloodshed and the fury of the fray is sufficient to arouse the savage impulses of any human breast.

The United States leads the van in the movement against the use of stimulants for soldiers and sailors. May not this be the secret of the superiority of American gunnery and of Admiral Dewey's success? He is a native of Vermont, a state that for almost fifty years has maintained a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its borders. More than thirty years ago the daily ration of grog was abandoned in the United States navy, and now the use of stimulants on board when at sea is prohibited.

Admiral Irwin, (retired) a naval officer of lifelong experience, says that yellow fever is the worst enemy our men have to face in Cuba, and that they who use alcoholic liquors and take the yellow fever will die.

Soldiers at Chickamauga Park.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There are now thirty-five thousand volunteers encamped at Chickamauga Park. Many of these, perhaps all, will remain during the summer. Among this vast number there will be many sick; they and all others will have much time to read. This is an opportunity for us to sow the seeds of temperance in these young men's hearts. Will not every union at once appoint a committee to collect reading matter, especially temperance literature, and send prepaid to the Chattanooga W. C. T. U., 120 East Seventh street, Chattanooga, Tenn., which will attend to its distribution.

An order sent to the W. T. P. A., Chicago, Ill., for such leaflets as "Timely Talks," Nos. 2 and 3; "Campaign Leaflets," Nos. 5 and 9; "Railroad Leaflets," Nos. 7 and 8, and "National Leaflet," No. 203, and directed to be sent to Chattanooga W. C. T. U. will be most helpful. These soldiers are from almost every state in the Union. Tennessee will do all that is possible, but we must have help from outside.

Chickamauga Park is not, as many suppose, at Chattanooga, but eight miles distant, which necessitates permanent headquarters at the Park, or railroad fare. This is a new burden, but also a new opportunity which should be promptly and cheerfully met.

Local Union.

QUESTION.—Do the states in general have difficulty in sustaining a state paper?

ANSWER.—Occasionally there has been great difficulty in some one or more states, but, as a rule, the papers seem fairly well-sustained and though they rarely do financially more than to meet expenses, they are considered so helpful in the general work of the state that even a small deficit, to be met from the state treasury, is considered money well invested. I can see no reason, however, why a state W. C. T. U. paper should not be made to pay financially as well as in uplift to the work.

Q.—How many states sustain a paper?

A.—Thirty-one.

Q.—If the executive committee of a union does the business should "minutes" of the meeting be kept or simply reports given? If the latter, please tell me a good form in which to incorporate them into the minutes.

A.—"Minutes" should be kept, but a "report" of the proceedings should be carried to the union, and that report, after its acceptance, is the permanent record. I think the form adopted by the recording secretaries of the National W. C. T. U. is as good as any that could be devised. The various items of business are numbered and presented one after the other in the tersest possible form, and in this way the record is given in all its essential points without the tedious formality of minutes.

The following list of questions has been sent by the superintendent of the department of health and heredity for local unions to use in study. For reasons that will be apparent by consulting the Y page they are published now rather than delayed until the entire list of department questions shall appear later.

1. What is the relation of health and heredity to temperance?

2. How would it be possible by studies and successful effort in this department to settle ninety per cent of the vice and crime caused by intemperance?

3. What are some of the causes and effects of intemperance in eating and drinking; also in dress.

4. How may homes be made happier, and lives richer by attending to such details as cleanliness, fresh air and sunlight? By attention to all sanitary details in the nursery, the kitchen, the cellar?

5. State the relation of these things to atmospheric conditions, physical, mental and spiritual.

6. What may be done in hygienic ways for the home, the school, the community?

7. State what may be the effect of environment, the yard, the street, the outlook, the companions, the books, the occupation, the friends?

8. Nervous prostration; how may we avoid overwork, worry, nerve dissipation?

9. What is the law of heredity? How may evil tendencies be overcome? Effect of antenatal influence, environment, etc?

10. State the relation of cause and effect; right living to right being; physical salvation to the highest and noblest life.

(NOTE.—Send stamp to National superintendent, 23 Allston street, Dorchester, Boston, Mass., for literature list helpful in answering the above questions.)

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.—James 2:26.

WE hear only words of praise for Miss Willard's beautiful life-size picture which the Temple Trustees have had the best artists in the country at work on for the last two or three months. By a new process this exquisite painting on porcelain, valued at $500, has been reproduced in such perfection that it can not be distinguished from the original painting, and yet we are able to sell it at a price so low that none are so poor but they can afford to purchase it. The following extracts from a few of the many letters received in regard to it will show how it is appreciated by those who have seen it. Mrs. Mary C. Upham, the newly elected president of the W. C. T. U. of Wisconsin, writes: "Miss Willard's picture is lovely and will sell well, I am sure. Please permit me to take the agency for the city of Marshfield. I will send all money to you for the Temple, including agent's fees." Mrs. Daniel Smith, Rushville, Ill., writes: "Yesterday I received Miss Willard's portrait. Am delighted with it. Independent of its personal beauty it is a work of art."

Miss Hattie E. Moorehouse, principal of the school for colored girls at Jacksonville, Fla., which Miss Willard visited two years ago, writes: "The picture of Miss Willard came yesterday. The expression from all the teachers was, 'Oh how lovely!'" Mrs. George Stowe, Unadilla, Mich., writes: "We think the picture a beautiful one." Mrs. H. S. Williams, Ithaca, N. Y.: "I received the canvassing outfit of Miss Willard's picture. It is lovely and must be a rapid seller." Mrs. A. C. Cowles, N. Towanda, Pa.: "The picture reached me last night and is very beautiful." Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor, New York: "This morning I received Miss Willard's picture. I am more than pleased with it." Jane C. Miller, Bellefonte, Pa.: "I received the picture this morning, it is beautiful." Mrs. S. A. Packard, Brocton, Mass.: "The picture received, it is certainly beautiful. Friends who drop in say, 'What a beautiful picture of Miss Willard,' which makes me very happy."

From the above testimonies it will be seen there is but one expression from all who have seen this latest and most beautiful picture of Miss Willard. The picture of our Chieftain is the only thing on the market that is being sold for the benefit of the Temple. How could any one spend a dollar better than in the purchase of this lovely picture? The face, so pure and holy with the record of such a noble life back of it, would be an uplift to any home on whose walls it found a place, for none could look at it without an inward prompting to live for the highest and best. Let our W. C. T. U. women show their faith by their works, in the purchase of this picture; the sale of one to each white-ribboner would insure the success of Miss Willard's heart's desire, the controlling interest in the Temple and the liquidation of the Temple Trust Bonds.

Mrs. E. D. Knights, Worcester, Mass., superintendent of Temple work, sends a most encouraging report of work being accomplished in her county for the Temple. She writes: "Mrs. Graton and Mrs. Chapman have each pledged $100, Mrs. Swift $100, besides other contributions, making a total in pledges and cash in the hands of the treasurer of $412, besides fifty-cent cards which are being sent out by all members of unions." Mrs. Kitty K. Scouller, Denver, Col., sends for an additional number of fifty-cent subscription cards. She says: "Our women want to do all they can in this way, as they think it is the easiest plan to raise money for the Temple. One lady has filled forty cards and wants more." Mrs. G. C. Walker, Middlebury, Vt., writes: "At our last meeting every member present pledged to raise $2 each for the Temple through the cards."

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Four Bedtimes.

"BOW-wow-wow," said the dog,
"'Tis time this little puppy went to bed,
For playing in the dark
Will take away your bark,
And you'll never make your mark," she said.
Then the puppy stopped his play,
And went to bed straightway,
Curled up on his clean straw bed.

"Cluck, cluck, cluck," said the hen,
"'Tis time this little chick went to bed,
Or you'll live to be a fowl
Which in the night will prowl,
And be taken for an owl," she said.
Then without a single peep,
The chick went off to sleep,
Soft tucked in its warm feather bed.

"Purr, purr, purr," said the cat,
"'Tis time this little kit went to bed,
Or you'll grow to be a cat
Which cannot catch a rat—
And you wouldn't much like that," she said,
Then the kitten in a trice
Slept, and dreamt of catching mice,
Wrapped in fur in her basket bed.

"Come, come, come," said mamma,
"'Tis time this little boy went to bed,
To sleep throughout the night,
And with the morning light,
To awaken fresh and bright," she said.
But that boy did tease and tease—
"Let me sit up this once, please,"
And at last was carried pouting off to bed

Listening for Conscience.

A True Story of Two Little Girls.

FLO and May were two little neighbors, each just six years old. It was May's delight to spend an afternoon with her little friend, as she had been doing on this particular afternoon, and many a good play they had had together. Now they were tired; and sitting on the floor, beside the cupboard which held Flo's toys, they fell into a serious mood.

"Flo," said May, suddenly, "did you ever hear your conscience?"

"No, what's that?" asked Flo, curiously.

"Why, don't you know? Didn't your mamma tell you?" cried May, opening her eyes in great astonishment.

"No, what is it?" demanded Flo, eagerly.

"Why, it is a voice inside of you, here," putting her hand over her heart," "and it tells you what to do—about right and wrong, you know," explained May. "My mamma says it's conscience;" and "God put it there," she added, in a low tone.

"Did you ever hear it?" inquired Flo, who had found this new story rather hard to believe.

"No, not yet," confessed May, a momentary cloud on her face. Brightening again, she said, "Let's try it now!" So the two little heads were bowed and the eyes closed. At last May peeped from behind her hands.

"Do you hear anything?" she asked timidly.

"No," answered her little friend, "do you?"

"No," said May. "I guess you have to be alone in the dark, so's not to hear other things."

Just then a happy thought came to Flo. "Let's go in the cupboard, and shut the door!"

"You go in, and I'll listen out here," May said, drawing back. So Flo went in and shut the door.

It seemed a long time, for like many older persons, they listened without being able to hear. Tired at last of keeping so quiet, May put her mouth to the crack in the door.

"Do you hear it?" she whispered.

"No!" Flo replied decidedly, stepping out of the closet, "I mos' believe there isn't anything anyway!"

"Well," sighed May, "p'r'aps it won't speak when you listen for it,—p'r'aps it is only when you are naughty! Anyway, I know its' there, 'cause mamma said so! Now, let's play some more."—Every Other Sunday.

Patriotism and the Liquor Traffic.

THE offer of New York saloonkeepers to furnish free drinks "as long as the war shall last" to any man wearing the uniform of the United States army or navy, has provoked much comment. It is regarded by many as "a sample of the death-dealing policy of saloon men," a method of creating appetite under the mask of "patriotism." Now while it must be admitted that the liquor seller endeavors by means both lawful and unlawful to create a demand for his wares, and that we have abundant reason for anathematizing saloon methods generally, we think it is hardly fair to take for granted that the action of the New York saloonkeepers is prompted altogether by sinister motives. We believe that many of them imagine they are manifesting patriotism in a very practical way by this standing invitation to the army and navy boys. From their standpoint it may be a display of generosity and loyalty to country. The incongruity of it does not appeal to them. Why should it? Their business is a legal one and the government is its backer and chief partner. The liquor business in New York, by the law of the land, is as legitimate as any other, and according to the ethical standard of those engaged in it they have as legitimate a right to create a demand for their goods as have the grocers and the drygoods merchants. And if they proclaim over the bar that "In God we trust," is it any more sacrilegious for the partner who receives the smaller share of the profits to use this motto than for the partner who takes the lion's share? Why, too, should not the American flag float over their place of business and be strung across the walk in front? Is not the saloon under the protection of that same flag, and should not the national colors be hoisted over the saloon as well as over the place of business of the man who supports the liquor traffic by his patronage or his vote? The inconsistency and grotesqueness of the situation lies not in the saloonkeepers' peculiar expressions of loyalty to their country, but in the fact that a business which "produces death, desolation and destruction for this world and the world beyond," should be tolerated in a Christian country, and that the men who help to legalize and perpetuate it are loud in their condemnations of its logical results. It is only the prohibitionist who can consistently denounce the saloon and its methods.

It matters not what the motive of the New York saloonkeepers may be in dispensing free drinks to the boys in blue, the results can but be in the highest degree deplorable—and destructive alike to the country and to its defenders, and every effort should be made by all loyal Americans to put a stop to that form of patriotism.

No Alcohol for Soudan Soldiers.

A WRITER, signing himself ex-attaché, has much to say in the New York Tribune under the caption, "Conditions of Modern Warfare on Land and Sea Demand Total Abstinence to Secure Success." He states that for some time, by orders of Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, the British commander-in-chief, careful and exhaustive experiments have been in progress, with a view to ascertaining the relative effects of alcohol and total abstinence upon the physical endurance and staying qualities of the troops. One regiment would be allowed to purchase, as usual, its malt liquors at the canteen, another would be deprived of every drop of stimulant and a third would receive a sailor's ration of grog in the form of whisky. He goes on to say:

> The result of these experiments led the British war department to decide, not on the ground of principle, but solely for the sake of maintaining the powers of endurance of the troops now engaged in the Soudan campaign, not to permit a single drop of stimulant in camp save for hospital use. Spirits, wine and malt liquors have been barred from the officers' mess table, as well as from the regimental canteen, and from the generals in command down to the drummer boys and the camp followers' liquid refreshments have been restricted to tea and oatmeal water. . . .
> Orders have recently been issued to the commanders of all British men-of-war in commission that in lieu of the double rations of grog formerly served out to the crews when going into action, not a drop of alcoholic liquor, no matter whether spirit, wine or malt, is to be allowed when there is any fighting to be done. In order to satisfy the thirst engendered by the heat, exertion and smoke inseparable from a naval combat, supplies of oatmeal and water for drinking are arranged all over the ship. . . .
> It is no longer fierceness, fury and reckless dash that are required of the men, but calmness and collectiveness. . . .
> English sailors are only deprived of their rations of grog when really going into action, and are subjected to no such restrictions when engaged in mere maneuvers or gunnery practice, while in the Spanish, French, Russian and Italian navies the old-fashioned custom of doubling the allowance of wine or spirits to the crews when going into action is still retained. May not, therefore, the abstinence enforced upon United States men-of-war have something to do with the superiority of American gunnery over that of the remainder of the world? Certain it is that a man who does not drink is more cool and collected and therefore better able to shoot with precision than any one whose pulse is in the least bit quickened by stimulant. . .
> If ever abstinence ought to be enforced, and becomes of surpassing value, it is in times of war both on land and at sea. . .

The writer speaks of innumerable tricks and devices to defeat this innovation of the war department, and of one wily Greek liquor dealer who succeeded in getting several wagon loads of spirits up beyond Wadi Halfa, nobody knew how; but Sir Horatio Kitchener captured the convoy and destroyed every bottle and barrel, "the liquor merely serving to poison the sand and slake the thirst of the ever-parched desert," and yet some people are willing to publish abroad statements to the effect that our U. S. government can not take care of the bootleggers and their supplies. Men who talk that way are foes of the government and friends of its enemies.

"A Saloon Church."

UNDER this caption, in display type, the Wine and Spirit News, in its issue of May 25, takes note of the fact that three saloonkeepers of Washington, N. J., have "jumped into the breach" and taken the seats made vacant by the withdrawal of several members from the Presbyterian church of that town on account of the attitude of the church upon the temperance question.

After indulging in its usual tirade of sarcasm against "Hypocrisy," "Phariseeism" etc., the News goes on to make the following startling statements:

"The Presbyterian church here has for years been the bulwark of the saloon business, and its position now with its three saloon-keeping pew holders is still more pronounced. Johnston Cornish, the president of its board of trustees, as state senator, voted and worked for the 'race track' bill and for the passage of the 'county excise' bill, the effect and purpose of which was to plant saloons in license territory all over the state. Another of his pet bills was the 'social club' bill, a law to license clubs.

"William A. Stryker, another prominent member of this celebrated church, has for years been the almost sole attorney for saloonkeepers in these parts.

"Last year the council was a tie on the question of license. The mayor, Dr. C. B. Smith, another member of the church and a prominent worker in the Christian Endeavor Society, had the casting vote. He voted for license and thus opened five saloons in Washington.

"Two years before that, the licenses for the saloons were granted through the votes and efforts of Councilmen Robert Petty and Joseph R. Thatcher, two more members of this same church.

"The building occupied by the saloon of William Barron is owned by George Dawes, another pew holder and regular attendant of the Presbyterian church. George Dawes is also a brother of T. R. Dawes, who ran for mayor, and has just been elected on the license ticket.

"W. G. Creveling, another member as well as pew holder and prominent teacher in the Sunday-school, was out all election day working with the saloonkeepers for the license ticket."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has sometimes been accused of saying severe things in criticism of the churches. We ask in all candor if it ever entered into the minds of any of our members to make such sweeping arraignments of any one church or denomination as is here made of the church of Washington, N. J., by the Wine and Spirit News? We have heard of "damning with faint praise," and surely there was never a more striking example given of this method than in this instance. We are loath to believe, even on the word of our distinguished and, of course, absolutely fair-minded authority, that the statements are not exaggerated. It seems incredible that anywhere in this land there should exist, under the name of Christian, a church so absolutely in harmony with the spirit of evil and one in which the Prince of Darkness must take such keen delight. We shall await the indignant contradiction of the Presbyterian church of Washington, N. J., at being thus calumniated. If such contradiction does not come what shall we say of the right of such a church to exist and to be recognized as in the fellowship of a well-known Christian denomination? When an organ of the liquor dealers falls to praising the church, there has surely somewhere been consummated a new "league with death and agreement with hell."

Miss Willard In Her Church Home.

THE pastor of the First M. E. church, Evanston, from 1886 to 1890, inclusive, Rev. Sylvester F. Jones, has this to say of the church life of our beloved leader:

"Rest Cottage," Evanston, was not her only resting place. There was the house of God, and one record of her life, so manifold in its greatness, was doubtless this: "I have loved the habitation of thy house, the place where thine honor dwelleth." Returning from her long and toilsome journeys, she always found her way thither when the first opportunity offered. Gliding into the old family pew in the sanctuary or chair in the prayer room and lifting her head after a moment of silent devotion, the expression on her worn and weary features was unmistakably this: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul." Her voice was seldom heard addressing the meeting. Doubtless she had enough of that elsewhere, but she was always in the mood for prayer, and no one was readier to go on her knees and address the throne of heavenly grace than she. She seldom mentioned here her own affairs—the great mission of her life. Her desire seemed to be to join in spirit with the humblest worshiper, and so to receive into her heart the kingdom of heaven as a little child.

At one time the atmosphere became somewhat portentous. The country was in the midst of a heated political campaign. Protests were coming in to the pastor against the pulpit announcement of the meetings of the W. C. T. U. held Sunday afternoon, on the alleged ground that political speeches were being made there. I counseled moderation, the moderation of delay, at the meeting of "the brethren." Happily, that counsel prevailed, and the matter was left in my hands for adjustment. I sought an interview with Miss Willard, who had just returned after an absence of months. She entered freely and cheerfully into the subject, promised to give the matter immediate attention, and I shall never forget the sweetness and gentleness of voice and spirit in which she said to me, "Whatever I may be at large these days, I am determined that I will not be a disturber of the peace in my home village, much less in my home church." There was never any further occasion of complaint.

Like Lincoln, Grant and many of the greatest of mankind, her character was a beautiful combination of strength and tenderness, robustness and simplicity.

Dr. Gabriel on the Use of Wine.

A PROMINENT Armenian physician in New York city, Dr. M. S. Gabriel, who has done much for his own people, in a letter to Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, National superintendent of purity in literature and art, speaks of the use of liquors in such an interesting way that he is worth quoting. We may regard him as somewhat moderate in some of his views, but when we consider that he is a physician and represents an Asiatic people, we may rejoice that he is so advanced in thought. Dr. Gabriel says:

I am in strong sympathy with your cause, because I have a vast knowledge of the disaster worked by the abuse of liquors. If I differ from many of the members of my profession regarding this question, it is on the very important point that I believe that even the moderate but habitual use of liquors and wines and beer is bad for the system. Though they contain elements of food because they are derived from food, yet they are not natural food. Nature does not furnish them as food. They are not suitable for our digestive system.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I do not mean that the occasional or habitual use of pure wine or beer, in small doses, is ruinous to the system. Thousand have used them habitually and without very appreciable harm. But does that mean absolute harmlessness? No. And that is the important point. I am convinced that they are more or less harmful. Some persons, powerfully constituted, can endure unnatural circumstances of existence; others, of less strong constitution, feel the bad effects only after long years of continued abnormal living.

Dr. Lancereaux, one of the greatest medical authorities of France, says that peasants who make a moderate use of wine are often affected by liver disease. This is very significant. The beverage accused is wine, the best of beverages, the one which most approaches food, and is wine pure and unfalsified, made of good grapes by the peasants themselves. It is used by peasants who are most of the time in the open air, working in the field and leading a natural existence. They never abuse wine to the point of drunkenness.

Now, the conclusion which logically forces itself on our minds is this: If even pure wine, used moderately, and used by peasants, is apt to develop in the long run, liver affection, how much more injurious must be the use of various liquors and wines which are more or less impure, by people living in cities and passing a great part of their time in stores and factories! Such use is in itself sufficient to degenerate a nation in a few generations.

Moslem Arrogance.

DR. MARY B. BRADFORD, a missionary to Persia, under the Presbyterian board, who returned to Tabriz a few months ago, after a year's vacation in this county, writes that after seeing again the blessings of women in a Christian land her heart goes out to the Moslem women as never before. She says:

Not a day passes but some woman comes to me begging to be healed because she fears her husband will divorce her or bring another wife into the home. The country itself only seems to go from bad to worse. The new king is weak. The country is bankrupt. Everyone rules by corruption and extortion, and the common people groan under their burdens and curse the king and the governors. The revolutionists are always trying to stir up the Armenians against Turkey and have used Persian soil as a base of operation until they have provoked the wrath of the government. The Mullahs have waxed fat and powerful and everywhere proclaim the recent victories of Islam. In spite of their deepening poverty the average Moslem believes that at last his prayers are being answered and Christian nations are bowing the knee to Mahomet. This gives them an arrogance never seen before. I feel it every time I go through the bazaars, their remarks are so much more insulting and open than ever before. Russia is strengthening her hold in every possible way and her authority bodes no good for Protestant work. In spite of all, God gives us every day opportunities to tell of the Saviour of the world, and we only know that we must work while it is day.

The condition which Dr. Bradford describes awakens no surprise, when we remember how the other Christian nations sat idly by and let the oldest Christian nation in the world and one of the most peaceful be slaughtered by the Turk.

Dr. Bradford has spent many years in Persia. Nature, education and experience prepared her for her heroic work in her hospital and the homes of the people in the great city of Tabriz. She won the admiration of many by her self-sacrificing work during the plague a few years ago.

Lady Henry Somerset's Annual Address.

ONE of the leading religious papers of England, The Christian World, had this to say of Lady Henry Somerset's annual address before the British Women's Temperance Association:

It is impossible in a brief report to give any adequate idea of the spiritual force and power of this memorable address. No woman ever gave a more ample apology for an error or showed more charity to her opponents than Lady Henry did on this occasion. One felt that she had learned great lessons and fought great battles in the year that to her had been one of sorrow and sickness, and had grown to a nobler stature because of them. Her plea for a fuller charity and her desire to obliterate herself by not standing for re-election, if by so doing she could save the society one whole-hearted worker, were almost pathetic in their intensity, and when she uttered as her last words, "Peace be unto you," and upon her knees finished in a prayer, the moment became solemn in its spirituality. One remembered nothing like it since the old Wesleyan Covenant services. Men and women alike shed tears freely, and it was a relief to be able to relieve the tension of feeling by singing that well-known hymn, "How firm a foundation." The memorial service for Miss Willard and other members of the association that followed closed a sitting that will live in the memory of every one who took part.

The Watch Tower.

Mrs. William Jennings Demorest was stricken with apoplexy Monday, May 23. She attended Sorosis Monday and was at the New York county convention on Friday the 20th, as president of the Carnigie union. She is reported better, but it is feared that the stroke will be fatal.

Mrs. Matilda E. Kline, corresponding and office secretary of the Chicago Central Union for over three years, has been elected treasurer of the Baptist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the territory from Ohio to the Pacific. Among her numerous duties, she had the renting of Willard Hall and a general oversight of the room and meetings. While the Baptist sisters have secured so efficient and valuable a worker, we are glad to state that Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, state superintendent of mothers' meetings, succeeds Mrs. Kline.

In the sketch of Mrs. Laura S. Haviland THE UNION SIGNAL said, "She was born a Quaker and died a Methodist." Her daughter, Mrs. Brownell, writes to say that at the time of the slavery agitation her father and mother, both, withdrew from the Friends and joined the Wesleyan Methodists where they remained for many years, but that for more than twenty years before Mrs. Haviland's death she was a valued minister in the Friends Society, and was a member of the Twenty-sixth street meeting in Geneva, Ill., and always when there held the place of honor, the "Head of the Meeting."

Mary A. Ward Poole writes of the annual meeting of the B. W. T. A.: "Miss Gordon, who was present at the council, was received by the entire delegation standing and giving her the salute. In touching words broken with emotion she gave her message to the council, and told them of those last precious days of the beloved Chieftain's life. At the close of Lady Henry's memorial address, Miss Willard's memorial hymn, which has been set to music by Lady Henry, was charmingly sung by Miss Maude Danks, who is one of our rising young vocalists, a special white-ribbon choir taking part in the chorus."

Mrs. Marion Baxter, National lecturer and financial agent, has lost her only child and gained a son. Her daughter, Mary Beatrice, was married lately to Mr. Horace McClure, news editor of the Post-Intelligencer, a daily paper of Seattle, Wash. Miss Beatrice was much interested in aiding her mother's work, by her gifts as a musician and elocutionist. The sympathy and coöperation of a large-minded, educated husband will, no doubt, increase her usefulness, and we believe the far West state will be the gainer thereby. The best wishes of THE UNION SIGNAL go with this young couple, which so largely represent the most cherished principles of white-ribboners.

A friend, whose name we are not at liberty to give, writes us that at Chickamauga Park, regiments have no hospital fund unless the colonel and surgeon will allow a canteen to be opened. The result is that the sick men are suffering for want of proper food. It may be different after a while, but they are in great need now. Mrs. Thacher named the following in her last official issue of May 12, as proper things to send for hospital use: Canned soups, farinaceous foods, as flaked rice, barley crystals, wheatlet, wheatine, germea, tapioca (three kinds), farina, sago and barley, jelly, gelatina, gelatine, extracts of beef and bouillon capsules, chipped beef, evaporated fruits if in glasses or boxes, lime and fruit juices, raspberry vinegar. White-ribboners can think of many more, and if they will rush them in, addressed, prepaid, to the Chattanooga W. C. T. U., 120 E. Seventh St., Chattanooga, Tenn., they will see that they are given to the colonels and surgeons of regiments having no canteens. This is a splendid opportunity to show appreciation of the heroism of men who stand by the right. Of course the money to get these things would answer the same purpose. This union will also distribute comfort bags and literature. No doubt unions can get free transportion for such things by the asking. They should act quickly.

Young Woman's Branch.

The British Y's at Reigate.

AMONG the delightful memories of the recent British Women's Temperance Association, none will be more lasting than the various Y functions which accompanied the Council, and were so pleasantly arranged by the Y president, the Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell, and the secretary, Miss Swankie Cameron.

On Friday preceding the council an interesting conference on working girls' clubs was presided over by Viscountess Morpeth, and followed by a tea given by Miss Cameron, which brought the Y's together in friendly intercourse. On the first afternoon of the council, a charming "at home" was given the Y's by Sister Kathleen, of the "Birds' Nest," Reigate, and Mrs. Russell, who is the spirit of the Y movement in England and whose magnetic personality is an inspiration to those who work with her.

The Y's left London by train from historic Charing Crossing, crossed the populous Thames, overshadowed by the Parliament buildings, Westminster Abbey and Lambeth Palace, and after an hour's ride reached the interesting town of Reigate. Here brakes were in waiting, the fifty Y's climbed aloft, and were soon speeding along beautiful level country, through overhanging branches of oak, poplar and ruddy copper-beech, past the Priory, with its ivy covered walls, until Lady Somerset's lovely estate was reached. Here we were met at the gate by several small maidens who, in cheery red dresses and bonnets, made us fancy ourselves back in the days of Red Riding Hood.

We soon discovered these were the "birds" of the "Birds' Nest," the beautiful charity by which Lady Henry seeks to round out the lives of many of London's slum children, giving each of the little waifs a fortnight of love, sunshine, flowers and fresh air.

The "birdies" gave us welcome greeting, and followed us up the sunlit road to the door of the "Birds' Nest," where we descended from the brakes, and were cordially welcomed by Mrs. Russell and Sister Kathleen, the devoted head-sister in charge of the "Nest."

We wandered at will through the attractive cottage with its playrooms hung with pictures, and full of dolls, toys and other childish treasures. But the attractions indoors are only resorted to by these little town waifs when it rains. They can not at other times drink in enough of the outdoor flowers and freedom. The contrast between this wholesome life and the already abnormal tastes of some of these babies makes one's heart ache, as when one of them pushing away with a wry face her first cup of good, nourishing tea, said, "No, Sister, it tastes nasty; put somefing in it out of a bottle, like my muver does!"

"Baby Jimmy" and a tiny lame girl were the special care of the rest, and though they had come down from London but two days before, they were already fast friends in this paradise of happiness.

But the "Birds' Nest" is only one of the noble enterprises of Lady Henry's royal heart at Reigate. A little farther down the road we came to a cluster of cottages so perfect in their comfort and simple beauty, that one felt here, indeed, was an ideal haven of rest.

And such, in truth, it is to the fifty women who form the Duxhurst Colony for Inebriate Women, and who amid these uplifting surroundings with every help available, are trying to work out their salvation from the terrible slavery into which they have fallen.

The cottages are perfect models in conduct and arrangement.

The industries in which the women are engaged with such eager, helpful faces, include weaving, the making of rugs, towels, curtains, etc., gardening and other open air employment.

They remain for a year, and so great is the success of the work that any vacancy in the colony is in the greatest demand.

The manor-house just beyond, is also given up to the same work, to the restoration of women of means and social position who have become victims of the same habit.

The hospital, with its skillful treatment and appointments, the lovely little chapel, the Sisters, with their tender solicitude and helpfulness, make the colony indeed a harbor of refuge, with every help that loving care can devise for healing and uplift.

In a dainty and homelike cottage near by, Lady Somerset, with her secretary, makes her home much of the time, and with solicitous care and tenderness watches over the success of these benevolent works into which she has put so much of her noble heart and thought. So full was the place of its atmosphere of peace and hope, that we longed to linger, and the time came all too soon for our return to the bustling city. . .

Among the council exercises, of course, none were of more interest to an American Y than the Y conferences and the inspiring Y evening. A much mooted question at the conferences was the admission of the young men, honorary members, as officers and voting members. An animated discussion of the question in council resulted in the proposal being voted down.

On Y evening Mrs. Russell presided with much grace, and gave a forceful résumé of the year's work and the outlook for the future. A capital model meeting of the L. T. L. was presented by the Legion of boys and girls from Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home, and Sister Grace, of the Bermondsey Settlement, gave a touching account of "The Guild of the Brave Poor Things" in London, a work which bands together the crippled, maimed and blind, and helps them to be courageous. The evening closed with the presentation of the prizes by Lady Somerset to the winning essayists among the Y's and L. T. L's, and the presentation in turn to Lady Somerset and Mrs. Russell of beautiful floral tributes, in appreciation of their loving and devoted service.

The Young People on the Move.

THE Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union is attracting wide attention. Much inquiry is made concerning this promising child of the W. C. T. U.

Since its organization on the twentieth day of last September, its growth has been steady, and interest is now rapidly increasing. The perplexing problem of how to arouse the sweetly sleeping Christian young people of this great city and enlist them in definite temperance work is being solved. Although only about four hundred have joined the union, hundreds from all parts of the city, who never stepped foot in Willard Hall before, are attending the weekly rehearsals of the Home Protection chorus, under the leadership of that prince of chorus leaders, Professor Bilhorn. A Home Protection chorus book is being compiled, and will be issued later by the Young People's Union. This movement has in it the boundless enthusiasm of youth, and much is being made of the power of song.

The general awakening is evidenced by the dozens of calls coming from all parts of the city for speakers and for branches of the great chorus to sing at temperance meetings, rallies and picnics. Officials of the young people's church societies are becoming thoroughly aroused to the import of this movement, and are issuing communications to their local societies, calling upon them to join in the general attack being made upon the liquor traffic and urging their attendance upon the Willard Hall meetings. Eva M. Shontz, as president of the organization, inspires the young people with her own boundless enthusiasm and dauntless faith.

The most notable event so far was the crusading of South Chicago, the first in a series in which the worst saloon-cursed sections of the city will be visited. In spite of a steady rain about two hundred of the chorus went down to this suburb on Monday evening, May 9. Hundreds of the South Chicago young people with every resident pastor, met the visitors with songs of welcome. Simultaneous meetings of prayer, song and addresses were held at different street corners. From every direction were heard patriotic and temperance songs of the chorus in the rain. Short speeches were made to the crowds, many of whom followed when the line of march was taken up to the largest church, where the great rally was held, amid waving flags. Oliver W. Stewart and others spoke. The Meneley trio and the chorus sang. Such a meeting it is believed was never before seen in South Chicago. It was well reported in the city papers the next day. A wide awake committee of the young people secured the closing of the business houses at eight o'clock, and distributed thousands of cards of invitation to the laboring men as they came from work, and did various other things to attract attention to the unusual gathering to be held. A patriotically decorated wagon carried loads of enthusiasm through the streets during the hours of this day, long to be remembered. The saloonkeepers in some cases came out and listened good naturedly to the army of young invaders.

The general of the South Chicago effort was George W. Peters, president of this Young People's Union, a young man who at a great sacrifice of inclination, gave up going to the Cuban war, because of his interest in the war against the liquor traffic.

A Message from the Department of Health and Heredity.

I AM happy to comply with Mrs. Boole's suggestion and send to our constituency of young people a word as to the importance of the health and heredity department.

This is a work that should appeal especially to those who are preparing for life, and desiring to live in the best way. It is eminently a department for study, and children and youth are working especially in educational lines. Health and heredity studies, crystallized into daily living, will not only largely solve the temperance question as to drink and food, etc., but also questions as to morals.

Suggestions as to "course of study," and literature bearing on the same may be found in the Local Union column on page 6. This has been arranged for the unions, but is easily adaptable to workers younger or older. Any further information, or samples of leaflets may be obtained by inclosing stamps with request to the National superintendent. I do hope that the Y's and the L. T. L's will earnestly and enthusiastically adopt this department—a work which lies at the basis of all that they are, and all that they may hope to be and to do.

Full salvation means full health, and I can wish for you all nothing better than to hope that you may "prosper and be in health."

Yours for the highest life and the noblest service, LOUISE C. PURINGTON, M. D.,
National Supt. Health and Heredity.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—As a communication is now due from me, perhaps as helpful a thing as I can write will be the description of a "rose social" as just given by my hostess here (Blue Ridge, Mo.), which, with additional suggestions of my own, I want to pass along.

What more appropriate way to observe the month of roses than by giving rose socials or rose receptions? Dainty invitations on rose-colored paper or white cards, with a tiny rose painted by a Y who is an artist, and adorned with white or rose colored ribbon, should have an appropriate quotation as the following:

"For you may years like leaves unfold
The heart of Sharon's rose."

The rooms should be decorated with garlands, wreaths and bouquets of roses. A short program of music and recitations should be all about roses. A beautiful piano solo is "The Feast of Roses," an old song is "O, My Love is Like a Red, Red Rose," another is "Little Bunch of Roses," and there are innumerable poems that are suitable.

A quotation game in which lines about roses, by well known writers, are written on tinted rose-leaf shaped papers, would be interesting, and the prize to the one giving most names of correct authors, should be a bouquet of roses.

Any dainty refreshments may be served on a table decorated with roses. Rose-colored shades on lamps and candles will add to the beauty of the scene. The Y's should wear roses, or rose ribbons, and a rose tied by a white ribbon on a souvenir card should be given each guest. Finally, the members, active and honorary, might be divided into two companies and a membership contest be held, called the "War of the Roses," in which the red rose would be worn by one side and the white rose by the other, and where each division would try to secure the largest number of new members.

Should the Rose Reception be held on the evening before Flower Mission Day, the aims of that work might be presented, and the flowers used for decoration could be distributed next day.

Yours for whatever is lovely and pure,

CARRIE LEE CARTER.

WHILST the United States is convulsed with the solemn realities of war against tyranny and treacherous designs of men, the white-ribboners of the Dominion are waging their peaceful war against the tyranny of rum and in the interests of "God, and Home and Native Land."

Mr. William R. Harvey, a W. C. T. U. lecturer, is at present touring the North West Territories. He comes highly recommended, as he is already indorsed by the National, Dominion and Provincial unions, and has toured England, United States and Australia. He has lectured twice in Moosomin, Assinaboias, N. W. T., and secured four members for the W. C. T. U., and ten honorary members. He also organized a union in Whitewood, with a membership of eight and two honoraries.

The Edmonton union met a few days ago and resolved to begin systematic giving, the proceeds at present to be devoted to the fund for equipping and aiding the nurses going out to Klondike. Temperance sentiment through the medium of the W. C. T. U. is steadily increasing in the North West Territories.

Summerside, P. E. I., union has opened a new hall, which they have named Willard Hall. The opening services were impressive and interesting. The president, Mrs. C. W. Strong, occupied the chair and gave an encouraging synopsis of the work accomplished by that union since its organization in 1890. Rev. Dr. Sprague (Methodist) gave a pleasing address in which was embodied a beautiful tribute to the life work of Miss Willard and Mr. Gladstone. Rev. Mr. Grant (Baptist) gave a stirring address on prohibition, and Rev. Mr. Dill (Presbyterian) spoke on the significant letters, "W. C. T. U." Solos were sweetly and appropriately rendered by Miss Brehaert, Miss Frizzle and Miss Clay. Summerside union is to be congratulated for its enterprising efforts in securing a hall of their very own.

Prince Edward Island provincial union will meet in convention the second week in July in Charlottetown, and New Brunswick provincial union will meet at Woodstock on June 10, 11, 12 and 13. Reports of above conventions will be sent as soon at received.

All over the Dominion to-day, white-ribboners are at work preparing for the plebiscite vote to be taken on prohibition at an early date.

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Southern California.

THE year's work has been completed in the eight counties which comprise our state, and "on to the state convention" is the present slogan. While the membership has not doubled, we are encouraged by an increase, and in many places the work has received a great impetus.

Mrs. Maude L. Greene, the wonderful chalk-talker, and her companion, Miss Hattie Henderson, both National organizers and lecturers, rested a few days in Los Angeles, en route to Oregon, and were guests at the reception tendered Rev. and Mrs. C. H. St. John. They made warm friends who will welcome their return.

It is with much regret that we part with Rev. and Mrs. C. H. St. John, who have done excellent work in this field, winning friends everywhere, and arousing fresh enthusiasm in hearts prone to get discouraged. One result of their coming is a Sunday afternoon gospel temperance meeting in our temple, which was opened by them, and at which they have been a great attraction. Mrs. St. John has continued the work since the departure of her husband for Kansas, and expects to give her farewell address on Memorial Sunday.

Some months ago the state officers decided to send our state organizer through the counties in a systematic manner, and the investment has returned good results in an increased membership. Mrs. May G. Tongier is an orator of whom we are justly proud. Her special theme is Christian citizenship, and she gives pointed thrusts, well aimed, yet not "poisoned." The press have given favorable notices of her work wherever she has lectured, especially in Riverside, where she addressed a union meeting at the opera house just previous to the election, and which helped to bring the no-license result. A reception was given her the next day at the elegant residence of Mrs. M. E. Hewitt; about fifty ladies were present, including Mrs. Peters, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Howard, of Michigan.

Mrs. Tongier has just closed a three months' tour, having visited most of the cities and towns of the state. She organized new unions at Vernon, South Los Angeles, Marietta, Riverside county; Buena Park, Orange county, and Moosa in San Diego county, and new Y's at Nordhoff, Ventura county, and Santa Maria, Santa Barbara county. She gave seventy public lectures and thirty afternoon talks; secured two hundred and thirty active and seventy honorary members and, in addition to the above reception, was given the same courtesy at Highgrove in the hotel parlors, and at Oceanside at the close of her tour. Among the honorary members added was Prof. A. N. Berryessa, principal of the Oceanside high school, a young Spanish gentleman, who is a total abtainer from narcotics and alcohol, and who faithfully teaches scientific temperance in his school.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Beginning in the northern county of Kern (according to W. C. T. U. state lines) annual county conventions have been held all over the territory. State President Mary A. Kenney, has attended those of Kern, Los Angeles, Orange, Ventura and San Bernardino, while State Organizer May G. Tongier, assisted in San Diego and Riverside, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine also at Riverside, and Miss Mary A. Barbour, National evangelist, rendered valuable aid at Santa Barbara convention.

Some ladies drove many miles over the plains to attend Kern county convention held in Bakersfield, April 3, and though there are but four unions in an area of 2,180 square miles, the sisters, who are earnest, wise workers, have accomplished much. In numbers less than forty they face a foe of one hundred or more saloons, and liquor sold at all the merchandise stores and some of the ranches.

The newly elected president, Mrs. H. P. Anderson, has recently found rest from years of physical pain and suffering by the healing given of God, and now gladly takes her place in the loved white-ribbon ranks. Her little daughter, Frances Willard, who as a baby was brought across the mountains to be dedicated Bananas.

Sarah Tyson Rorer, the famous food expert, answered the question, "Are bananas good to eat uncooked?" "No, except in the countries where they grow."

Some one asked, "What about Cereal Coffees?"

"Many of them are coffee and very poor coffee at that, do not be deceived by them. If it is a true cereal coffee, it is an excellent food drink." Mrs. Rorer herself uses Postum because she knows it to be the original, pure Cereal Coffee, that is so widely and grossly imitated by adulterated coffee mixtures. She also knows from analysis that more genuine nourishment is contained in a good hot cup of Postum than is generally found in the balance of the breakfast.

A week's use of Postum will make one feel that elastic thrill of life that one remembers made existence a bliss in the boyhood days, and those delights of health come back again if we feed the body on properly selected food, such as is found in Postum.

How to Get the Good of Wool Soap.

When you find that Wool Soap won't shrink woolens, don't use it alone on wool. Why be more careful of wool than you are of your face?

MY MAMA USED WOOL SOAP. I WISH MINE HAD.

Wool Soap is made on purpose to cleanse woolens without shrinking or injuring. The same ingredients that make it best for this purpose make it best also for the human skin. No roughness or redness follows its use. That shows that it's pure.

Wool Soap is always best wherever purity is necessary. Wool Soap is so pure that it is white—so pure that it swims. But some other soaps are that pure.

Wool Soap is the only soap so pure that it won't shrink wool. That's the supreme test, and only Wool Soap stands it.

"Wool Soap is an excellent article, and every woman will be benefited by using it."— at our state convention in 1892, is following the steps of her for whom she was named. The other officers of the county are: Vice-president, Ade E. Harman; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. P. Anderson; recording secretary, Miss Laura Lewis; treasurer, Mrs. Laura Snook.

Los Angeles county sisters met at Downey, April 6–8, and with eighty-one delegates had a little state convention of their own. The most important event of the session was the declination of Mrs. Emma Cash to continue as president. For thirteen years she had served and was earnestly desired for a longer period, (a very interesting sketch of her work during that time, and an excellent likeness of her appeared in our White Ribbon for May) consequently "election day" was quite an exciting time. After many ballots Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard was elected president. Mrs. Blanchard is the state superintendent of L. T. L. work, and for about fifteen years has conducted juvenile temperance work in Los Angeles and vicinity. She was our delegate to the last World's and National Conventions. With the exception of the recording secretary and the treasurer, the officers were unable to continue, and so the list is as follows: Vice-president, Mrs. Hester T. Griffith; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Tillie Hughes Lodge; recording secretary, Mrs. Laura Thomas Carter; treasurer, Miss Eva Keese.

Riverside entertained its namesake's convention April 13 to 15, and twenty-eight delegates responded to roll-call. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, of the National, radiated enthusiasm and spiritual sunshine by her helpful presence. A reception to the delegates was a special feature of the program, which was held in the Baptist church one evening, and the following evening was sacred to Frances E. Willard memorial services.

So long as the county can have their grand Canadian leader, no change will be desired, thus Mrs. Sophia Ogilvie Webber was continued as president. Mrs. N. P. J. Button, vice-president, and Mrs. Martha E. Hewitt, treasurer, were retained, while the new officers are, Mrs. Mary Brown and Mrs. Emma T. Stewart, corresponding and recording secretaries, respectively. The sisters of the far south came north to Escondido, May 4, 5 and 6, and held the convention of San Diego county. It was the climax to Mrs. Tongier's labors in the county, and a good session was the result. Over mountains and along the seacoast came the delegates. Mrs. Tongier addressed a large audience the second evening and presented the medal at the matron's contest the last evening of the convention. Much praise is due the matrons, who, after years of dormant talent gave enthusiasm and profitable entertainment by their efforts. Officially there were but few changes, the president, Mrs. Ella Whitmore, being re-elected, to overcome or override the obstacles (mountain ranges) to continuous increase of organization.

Orange county met at the beautiful town of Westminster, April 27 and 28, and had their convention all their own Way. Mrs. Kenney and Mrs. Lizzie H. Mills, state officers, were present, the former giving a public address.

A full report of this convention has not reached me, as of the other conventions not mentioned here, so can only state that Mrs. Charity Way was re-elected president of Orange county, as was also Mrs. Susanna Sharp, of Ventura, and Mrs. Jennie Carden, of Santa Barbara counties.

Our state has not been one whit behind others in its loving remembrances of our Chieftain "just leading the way." Memorial services have been prominent features of the county convention programs, and special public services were held by the local unions. Now we wish the measure of our love to be known by our loyalty to the cause she served "even unto glory," and our execution of the plans she made.

Last, but far from least, is our disappointment regarding the National. And not the least part of it is the disappointment to all our sisters along the coast who had expected to have "one great joy in attending." Our Chieftain's departure made many changes, and in love to Him "who doeth all things well," we trustfully submit. Even now we see the wisdom of the change of place for the National, as our land is far from its best this year, and to have seen Southern California other than in its beauty would certainly have been a disappointment to those who would come so far. We wish St. Paul the great blessing expected to have been ours.

GABRELLA T. STICKNEY,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

P. S.—Since closing the above, word comes that dear Mother Ransom, whose return we welcomed on Easter morn, is quite ill and confined to her bed. We are sure many will join us in prayer for her recovery.

Louisiana.

THE sixteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Louisiana was held at Shreveport, April 21–23. All of the state officers, five district presidents, eight superintendents, the secretary of the Y Branch and thirty-four delegates were present. The distance and the inconvenient railroad connections prevented the attendance of some of the delegates from the southern part of the state.

The summing up of work accomplished showed that this had been a hard year with the friends of the temperance cause throughout the state. The floods in the spring were followed by the yellow fever scare and quarantine, which left everything except the saloon business paralyzed. The state motto, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," was the rallying cry of the assembled workers.

Under the shadow of bereavement and sorrow for our great leader, rested the conviction that only "in the name of our God" could we hope for victory. The evangelistic hour, conducted by Mrs. M. L. Haughton, each day, was a consecrated service of spiritual power.

Mrs. Haughton has labored faithfully during the past three months in Louisiana, and endured great fatigue in traveling over the unorganized territory. She has now returned home to Indiana with the devotion, the respect and love of all with whom she has come in contact.

The fifth district won the two state banners, one for aggressive work and the other for the largest amount raised for the state organization. The second district had a very good report and merited the commendation given by Mrs. Stevenson, both for its president and its members.

All of the state officers were re-elected and most of the superintendents. The few changes were as follows: Miss May C. Walker, of Baldwin, Sunday-school work; Mrs. M. L. Scovell, of Shreveport, flower missions; Mrs. Lily F. Blanks, Columbia, superintendent of L. T. L's. Petition work and Christian citizenship were united, with Mrs. M. R. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, superintendent.

A pleasant event of the business sessions was a visit from the pupils of Miss Kate Nelson's Seminary. Most of the young ladies put on the white ribbon and a fund was quickly subscribed among the delegates, to present each one with a souvenir pin of Miss Willard.

Mr. Henry Sous, of Shreveport, made the convention an appropriate gift of a dainty basket filled with white ribbon bows ready for use.

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, National corresponding secretary, conducted a school of methods each day, and gave some very helpful talks. This was much needed where so many of the delegates were new to the work.

Miss Belle Kearney, National organizer, delivered an address on Alaska, with stereopticon views.

Memorial services for Miss Willard were held Sunday afternoon in the Methodist Church South. Dr. La Prede, pastor of the church, preached the annual sermon in the morning, and at night Miss Kearney was the principal speaker.

Mrs. H. C. Pharr, of Berwick, Mrs. M. L. Scovell, of Shreveport, and Mrs. Eugenia Blanks, of Monroe, were elected delegates to the National Convention.

Mansfield, Monroe and Crowley sent invitations for the next annual convention. For several valid reasons, the western part of the state is entitled to the honor, but the selection was left to the executive committee.

War and rumors of war are rapidly transforming the Mexican Gulf coast into a tented field for our army. Mrs. S. S. Shove, of New Orleans, state superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, has issued a call through the city daily paper, for delicacies for the sick soldiers, to be sent to the Red Cross tent, at Camp Foster, near New Orleans.

No amount of argument can convince the experienced, honest grocer that any other soap will give his customers such general satisfaction as Ivory Soap. He knows that they prefer Ivory Soap to new kinds, of unknown quality.

Ivory Soap will sell because the people want it, the other soaps may look like Ivory, but his customers want the real thing—they may buy a new soap once to try it, but they come back again and again for Ivory Soap, and they insist on having it.

Iowa.

IOWA legislators were carefully looked after and W. C. T. U. interests kept daily before them, by our energetic and persevering superintendent, Mrs. Anna Edworthy, who made many friends for our cause and has prepared the way for more effective work in the future. The age of consent bill was killed in the senate committeee. The bill for the Industrial Reformatory for women passed the house with sixty-three votes for and none against. Owing to the determined opposition of Senator Berry, chairman of the sifting committee, the bill was not reported to the floor of the senate for fear it would pass. Another disappointment was in no appropriation being made for Mother Benedict's Home at Decorah, Women's and Babies' Home at Sioux City, and the Rescue Home at Dubuque.

I can not report the memorial services for "our fallen Chieftain," as they were so universally held all over the state, not only by the unions, but by churches and pastors, where no union exists. To report even a small proportion of them would fill the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. At many of these meetings a collection was taken for the Temple. At State Center the offering was sent to the Hospital and at a later service their collection was for the Temple. This union is very small but they have sent about forty dollars to the Temple. One and all, we still feel crushed by the loss of the one and only Frances E. Willard, but are ready to follow our new leader, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, whom we believe to be the one woman in our ranks, at this time, best fitted to lead the W. C. T. U. army. Iowa is ever ready to do her part in the great conflict for "God, home and humanity," be it in times of peace or war.

Bethel union, Boone, reports having paid five cents per member to the Temperance Hospital, also a medal contest held. One union in Creston reports eight paid members, have sent ten dollars to Temple, held six medal contests, and preparing for a gold one. The fourth district has paid its pledge of $100 for the Temple. Iowa women are very loyal to this work, and are bending all their energies in this one direction. Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer has been doing excellent service in our state, raising funds for the Temple, holding parliamentary drills and helping and encouraging the workers wherever she has gone. Our "small but mighty" and indefatigable L. T. L. secretary, Berthe Bowers, is still in the field, speaking and working night and day. Mrs. J. B. Shesler, president nineteenth district, who fell and broke her right wrist in February, has learned to write with her left hand, and has kept up her correspondence in this way.

State convention is to be held at Waterloo, much to the disappointment of Sioux City members, from whom an invitation was received. A Silver Gray contest held in the Waterloo union was so well received it was repeated by request, the two evenings netting them $100. This is one of the best and strongest working unions in the state, and we are sure the state convention will be royally entertained. Our state president, Mrs. Dunham, is busily planning the work for present and future, which keeps her brain and hands active. State superintendent, Mrs. Whiting, is preparing for a diamond medal contest at state convention.

Mrs. Ellen D. Blair passed through Iowa recently, speaking at several points on her way. She expects to be in Des Moines in August, and will be glad to hear from unions wishing her services. Address her at 76 Manchester street, Battle Creek, Mich. Work is being done all over the state which is not reported to me, hence, I can not "pass it on" to our SIGNAL readers.

New Hampshire.

THE white-ribboners of New Hampshire, though sorrowing, are putting fresh energy into the temperance work, conscious that they can best show their love and devotion to Miss Willard's memory in this way.

From all over the state come reports of memorial services in honor of Miss Willard and Gen. Neal Dow, and not the W. C. T. U. alone, but all religious and philanthropic societies gladly united with us in paying loving tribute to the memory of these grand reformers. I could not ask for space to enumerate the many touching and beautiful services which have been reported to me.

During the winter and spring our state president, Miss C. R. Wendell, has arranged three lecture tours in different parts of the state for Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin; these have proved very successful. For nearly nineteen years Miss Wendell has been in charge of this branch of our work, first as state corresponding secretary, and now as president.

Nashua reports a very successful medal contest, under the supervision of Mrs. Bowers, state superintendent of literature. Newport union had two days of valuable work by Mrs. Conklin. In April a silver medal contest awakened much interest in the town. They have sent a barrel of clothing to the Cuban sufferers and established a mothers' club.

Derry Depot union is wide awake, making collection for the Temperance Hospital, sending literature and comfort bags to the lumbermen. At the memorial service for Miss Willard $10.50 was raised for the Temple fund. The president of Littleton union, Mrs. Josephine Austin, reports five dollars given to the Temperance Hospital, more than one hundred dollars raised for the Temperance Temple; much petition work done and good temperance literature sent forth through the columns of the local press.

In the eight years' existence of the Mercy Home nearly two hundred girls have been sheltered and helped onward and upward. "A large proportion are to-day leading honest, useful lives." There are now fourteen girls in the home.

Two of our faithful and efficient superintendents are Mrs. N. Bowers, of Nashua, department of literature, and Mrs. G. B. Haley, for homeless children. Their circular letters to the unions make a strong and earnest plea for support in the work.

Greenville union has raised $115 to pay for a fountain for the town; it will be ready for use by July 4. Franklin Falls and Derry Depot both report Mrs. Conklin's successful work in their midst.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

You will note that in the General Officers' meeting following the Convention of last year, Miss Willard suggested that a special committee be appointed, of which your corresponding secretary should be chairman, to plan for the special observance of the twenty-fifth convention following the Crusade; also the twenty-fifth Convention since the organization of the W. C. T. U., which will take place in 1899. The other members of the committee were invited to serve very shortly after this appointment, and are: Mrs. Stevens, of Maine; Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey; Mrs. Stoddard, of Texas; Mrs. Telford, of Colorado, and Mrs. Kenney, of California. At that time it was thought that the Convention would be held in Los Angeles. The sad bereavement which came to us in February effectually crowded out of my mind any thought of special celebration or commemoration of any event, but now that the National Convention is drawing nearer, it seems necessary that we should be giving our minds to this subject, especially as the various counties, districts and states ought to fall into line with the central idea, and thus make of this a series of Crusade Conventions. The plan is not yet fully developed. Indeed, there will be no iron-clad plan or program. Each state will be left to follow its own inclination as to the best form of expressing the fact that we are commemorating our twenty-fifth Convention since our birth; but on one point there should be perfect unity, and that is that all states which hold conventions in the fall should make them in the truest sense of the term anniversary conventions, and I think the same should apply equally to county and district conventions as well. Suggestive programs for these county, district and state conventions will very soon appear in THE UNION SIGNAL, and I very much hope that if a bright idea comes to any woman on this line, she will forward it to me, that I may utilize it for the benefit of all, or reserve it, if thought best, for the National Convention itself. Remember that this is a matter in which we are all interested, and that justice, as well as inclination, demands that our Crusade mothers, whose ranks, alas, are so rapidly decimating, shall have due honor given them in this, their twenty-fifth year since their great work began. I hold myself ready to answer questions or to receive suggestions from all who may be interested in this matter.

In a personal letter, Mrs. Nellie N. Somerville, of Greenville, Miss., formerly state corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. and now president of the Mississippi Woman's Suffrage Association, writes: "A message to Miss Willard, which I promised to deliver, is on my conscience. I intended to give it when some occasion for writing her should come. My old colored friend, 'Elder Lige Williams,' paid me a visit in December. He had heard that when Miss Willard visited Vicksburg the churches were not opened to her, and wanted to express sympathy. He asked if I would tell her something for him, and said, 'Tell her Elder Lige Williams say keep on knocking on de wall, don't give it up.'" I am sure that our beloved one would want to pass that message on to each one of us now that she has passed beyond to a place where she need no longer knock on the walls of prejudice and conservatism and sin. They are high about us, they stand across the road which leads to the better future of humanity. Let us keep on knocking till they fall.

The following are the questions which will be sent out to the state secretaries on official blanks. I publish them thus early in order that the state corresponding secretaries who may desire to issue new blanks may conform as nearly as possible to the questions asked by the National Union. The blanks themselves will be sent out in August, and I trust will bring report of the largest amount of work that has ever been accomplished in any one year.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

THE public schools of St. John, Kan., under the direction of the principal, are holding medal contests. They are held at the Opera House, and every one is highly delighted with the result.

A CONVENTION daily, published by the fourth district W. C. T. U. of Missouri, is the first venture of that kind by a district union. It came out on time each day in good shape, and full of interesting reading. Much credit is due the enterprising editors.

LAKE union Loyal Temperance Legion, Chicago, gave a very successful entertainment for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. work room. Twenty-five dollars were cleared on a ten-cent admission. The program was arranged and prepared by Miss Lena J. Margery, L. T. L. superintendent.

MISS MARY ROBINSON has organized a W. C. T. U. in her school in Chinkiang, and it is said to be wonderful what these girls know of the work and workers in this cause in our homeland. From that side of the world these bright Chinese girls have watched with liveliest interest Mrs. Mary Hunt's brave efforts to secure temperance instruction in our public schools.

A CAMPAIGN for temperance in Shelton, Wash., was brought about by the visit of the Page sisters, Miss Mary, the president of the state, and Miss Emma, the medal contest associate. Two contests were held, four public addresses given, two women's meetings, and a meeting for girls and boys. Several new members were added. The state treasurer writes, "We want to do everything we can to aid Mrs. Stevens; she has our love and loyalty."

GURNEE, Ill., had a membership contest. The president and secretary chose sides until all members were chosen. Armed with the W. C. T. U. declaration of principles each one started out to convert, and bring in their converts. This is a country union and every woman within a radius of five miles was given a chance either to join the union or give convincing proof why she should not. The losing side banqueted the winners at the end of the six weeks' contest. The membership was doubled and the W. C. T. U. well advertised as a result.

LOUISA S. WIGHTMAN, secretary of the department of work among soldiers and sailors for the District of Columbia, writes that they have just forwarded three hundred comfort bags, and in addition socks, vaseline, linen cloths and quantities of delicacies contributed by merchants—eight boxes in all. The department is assisting in the Sunday services at the navy yard, and for some weeks the services have been given over entirely to Mrs. Chase and her assistants. They are hoping to arrange for Sunday meetings in the camps. Twenty have signed the pledge. They are rejoicing that Col. Haines, of the first regiment of the District of Columbia volunteers, has refused to have a canteen among his men.

THE indorsement of the temperance work of the W. C. T. U. by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, meets the hearty approval of the W. C. T. U. women of the South. They think it will remove some of the opposition with which they have had to contend among church people and ministers of this denomination. A spirited discussion was held over the question of indorsement, and finally this resolution was adopted with applause:

Resolved, That we indorse the W. C. T. U. in all their temperance work, and bid them Godspeed in their efforts to extirpate the liquor traffic.

Our friend, Captain Pharr was a member of the temperance committee.

THE fraternal delegate from the W. C. T. U. to the Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly met with a hearty ovation from that body. This will not surprise any one who learns that Miss Carrie Lee Carter, one of our Y lecturers, herself a Cumberland Presbyterian elder, was the delegate. She was given twenty minutes to speak during the discussion of the report of the temperance committee. As a result of her talk and the report of the broad minded men on the committee, a resolution was adopted, indorsing the W. C. T. U. in all its lines of work. The moderator made a fine speech expressing thanks and appreciation to the union for its work and for sending a representative. Miss Carter's address was a telling point not only for temperance, but for women officers in the churches.

MEDICAL STAFF.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Captain Woodson, surgeon and assistant quartermaster in charge of the ambulance corps of the fifth army corps, has just submitted a special sanitary report to Adjutant-General Corbin, United States army, for the guidance of troops that will invade Cuba. On the subject of the use of liquor, and its dangerous tendency to invite yellow fever Captain Woodson writes: "So firmly convinced am I of the predisposing influences of alcoholic indulgences toward this disease" (yellow fever) "that I would strike all such beverages from the dietary of the soldier and even from the medical supplies of the department."

Dr. T. D. Crothers, in a learned paper on "Alcohol as a Causative Factor in Diseases of the Central Nervous System," gives ten facts concerning the power of alcohol in central nerve disease.

In brief, they are that alcohol is a poison with a special tendency to act on the brain and nervous system. That alcohol disturbs normal functional processes, diminishes the activity of the organs of sense, inducing ultimately general muscular depression and mental enfeeblement. That it tends to produce a paralysis of soul which extends to all parts of the body. That the functional derangements caused by it are very marked, sometimes unduly releasing, sometimes unduly concentrating nerve energy, also operating similarly upon the circulatory or vascular system, producing profound disturbances of the dynamic forces of the brain.

"Alcohol," says Dr. Crothers, "is a literal paralysis and dissolution. No other substance known in common use has such a profound destructive action on the waste and repair of the body. It opens the door for many diseases by destroying the power of resistance, and enfeebling all the power of life."

The surgeon says it must go from the army; the physician says it must go from the people at home, and the National Temperance Hospital calls upon the nation to rise in her might and banish this poison from the medical supplies of the land.

Money, the sinews of war, must be had for the conflict. It was never so much needed as now. Has not some reader of this column a hundred, fifty or twenty-five dollars to send? Two years and two months have passed since the National W. C. T. U. officers called for fifty thousand dollars for the hospital. A fourteenth of this sum has been received. Each day makes the need more urgent. Pray for it, work for it, pay what you can for it. June should not furnish its facilities for collecting money for this cause in vain. With a heart of love for Christ and suffering humanity, go forth in His strength and for His glory to do greater things for the National Temperance Hospital in our glorious June weather than you have heretofore attempted. Affectionately, ELIZABETH B. COOK.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

The June issue of THE FORUM may, with some degree of propriety, be termed a Cuban number, for the first four articles deal with the Island, or the war with Spain. Senator Foraker heads the list with a paper entitled, "Our War with Spain: its Justice and Necessity."

"Educational blind alleys" are what Prof. Frederic Burk considers many Normal schools to be in his article on that topic in the June ATLANTIC. He thinks the time is ripe for opening up new ways, and lifting the preparation of teachers to a higher and more advanced plane of usefulness.

The tale of Spanish outrage and barbarity that led to the expulsion of the American missionaries from the Caroline Islands, near the Philippines, a few years ago, is briefly related by Rev. Dr. E. E. Strong in the AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS for June. There, as elsewhere, Spain's rule has only retarded civilization.

A series of fine pictures of United States warships will be a valuable and interesting feature of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION for the week of June 16. The typical vessel in each class—battleship, cruiser, monitor, torpedo boat, etc.,—will be depicted, the group presenting an entire fleet of United States vessels, from the least to the greatest.

The June SCRIBNER, though made up on the eve of war, contains evidences of the impending calamity in several clear and serviceable war maps, which were inserted after the rest of the magazine had gone to press. Well-known writers and artists will depict actual phases of the war in succeeding issues. Arrangements have been made to cover the operations by land and sea.

The frontispiece of the June CHAUTAUQUAN is an excellent portrait of Rear-Admiral George Dewey, and in "History As It Is Made" is a full account of the war with Spain, with portraits of Secretary Alger, Ex-Secretary John Sherman, the Queen Regent of Spain and her son, Alphonso XIII., and other people now universally talked about. This number of the magazine also contains four pages of book reviews.

THE complete novel in the June issue of LIPPINCOTT'S "Mere Folly," is of somewhat unusual length for the magazine, and of a high order of merit. Its well-known author, Maria Louise Pool, has done nothing better, either in story-telling or character-drawing. The death of this clever writer, since her story was in print, gives it a peculiar interest.

Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, since returning from Havana, has written an article for the June number of MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE, giving a general review of recent Spanish rule in Cuba as it presented itself to him in his own observations, experiences, and impressions, and in his official labors as Consul-General at Havana. The article is very fully illustrated from special photographs, most of them hitherto unpublished.

Publisher's Notes.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE. "Our Calling," by Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, secretary of general rescue work for the National purity department. God never gave a command, she says, that He did not provide both the worker and the ammunition. He is never at a loss for workers. When He called Bezaleel to help Moses He "called him by name" and "filled him with His spirit." We have not as yet understood the privileges of our calling. A spirit-filled man or woman—do we grasp its significance? Christ walks in us! As a business man, strong in proportion to his financial backing, so the Christian worker may be as strong as his spiritual backing. Mrs. Lake points out the forms of service to which we are called, emphasizing the fact that we are called to suffer and to wait as well as to do.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JUNE. "Domestic Science," by Mrs. Marion A. McBride, superintendent of the branch of health and heredity department. The central thoughts given are: "Give us this day our daily bread," and "I am the Bread of Life." Domestic science, it is explained, pertains to the food we eat and the houses we live in, and we are told how to properly pursue this study as a part of W. C. T. U. work. The writer calls attention to the importance of the food question to our "boys" in the army and navy. She says: "To the American woman is given the care of a nation that its defenders shall be strong and well physically." Appended to the Reading are the "ten commandments" concerning health and hygiene, formulated by Miss Willard—commandments of which every white-ribboner should preserve a copy.

Of Importance to the Y's.

Mrs. Barnes has concluded to offer the remainder of the Y almanac for the surprisingly low sum of fifteen cents each. The pictures in these exquisite books are worth far more than that amount. Order early, for at the reduced price the balance will be promptly disposed of. Send fifteen cents to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Avenue, New York city.

THE Countess of Aberdeen was made a life member of the National Council of Women of Canada, at the recent Ottawa convention.

DR. MARY STONE, of Kingkiang, China, recently treated 414 patients while on a month's tour, and in a single day dispensed medicine to 114 women and children.

A SERVANT girl on a farm near Cambrai, in northern France, has lived seventy-two years with the same family. She is now eighty-four years of age, and still does her work.

WOMEN conduct the entire affairs of an Episcopal church at Otis, Mass. The rector is the only man concerned in the management. Strangely enough, the church bears the name of St. Paul's.

THE ringing of the peal of bells belonging to the new German Protestant church at Jerusalem on Easter Sunday created a sensation in the Holy City, as they are the first Protestant church bells which have yet been heard there.

THE first woman to win the diploma of pharmacist in Russia is a Jewess, Mrs. Levitine. She passed her examination at the University of Moscow, and, by virtue of her degree, has a right to practice her profession in any part of the empire.

THE Methodist church of Ireland has proposed to raise £50,000 as a "Twentieth century thanksgiving fund" for church purposes. It is also proposed to raise a similar fund in connection with the Presbyterian church. The Methodists in Ireland number 27,164. Presbyterians number over 83,000 families, and 104,000 communicants.

THE agitation in England in favor of stopping the sale of intoxicants to children apparently under the age of thirteen years has made considerable progress during the past twelve months. The movement has been taken up by the many boards of guardians and school boards in various parts of the country. A large number of benches of magistrates in cities and towns have, through the police, given instructions to the publicans not to serve children.

THE liquor interests of Ohio secured the passage during the session of two important laws. One amends the Adair law so that a person can give notice personally upon a saloonkeeper not to sell intoxicants to a relative, etc. The other provides that a saloon regularly established within two miles of a fairground does not have to close up during the fair. The law now shuts out temporary booths and sheds and prohibits any one but permanent dealers from doing business.

THE liquor dealers of Springfield, Mass., who do a bottling business, have been warned by the police that if they are caught selling liquor to illegal sellers, they may expect to have their license revoked. There are seventeen firms in that city doing business. If all these discontinue selling to illegal parties the latter will be unable to secure beer, and in this way the authorities hope to be able to put a stop to illegal selling. The license commissioners are aiding the police in the work.

TEACHER (showing off his pupils)—Now, Johnny, tell us how the earth is divided. Johnny (vivaciously)—By earthquakes, sir.

STRANGER (to Highlander in full uniform)—Sandy, are you cold with the kilt? Sandy—Na, mon, but I'm nigh kilt with the cauld.

AN Irish tenant lately observed that it was a "hard thing for a man to be turned out of the house which his father built and his grandfather was born in!"

PATIENT—I say, doctor, what sort of a lump is this on the back of my neck? Doctor—It is nothing serious; but I would advise you, nevertheless, to keep your eye on it.

War's terrors failed to alarm students of the New England Conservatory of Music. Although the last term of the school year opened almost on the day when the war began, with its incidental excitement and gruesome rumors, not a single student took occasion to leave on that account. The study of music as arranged at this great institution is so fascinating and practical that few students will tolerate any interruption of their studies, and year by year, as the Conservatory opens up higher and more attractive courses, this feeling becomes stronger.

"How did you get along at school, to-day, Tom," asked father, at the supper table. "Papa, our physiology says that conversation at meals should be a pleasant character."

MAGISTRATE—What is the charge, officer? Officer—Vagrancy, your honor. I found him sleeping on a bench in the park. Prisoner—I had no place to go, your honor. My wife is cleaning house.

AN Atchison, Kan., jewler was ordered to engrave "Remember the Giver" on a gold ring the other day, but he was so preoccupied with the war situation that he engraved, "Remember the Maine."

MOTHER—"What are you examining so closely, Johnnie?" Boy (at the window)—"A hair, mamma. Teacher said in Sunday-school that the hairs of our head are all numbered, and I'm looking for the number on this one."

ONE day recently a Scottish publican was endeavoring to remove from his spacious bar one of his customers, who had partaken not wisely but too well, and as a consequence, got helplessly incapable. When noticing the local shoemaker passing his door, he called to him to give him a little assistance, but "the man o' leather" very sharply replied: "Na, na, my mon, when I feenish a job I aye pit it in my window tae show my work; so ye can jist dae the same."

RED-LETTER DAY.

INDEPENDENCE DAY—JULY 4.

The Birthday of Mary H. Hunt.

Notes and Comments.

THE UNION SIGNAL of June 30 will be our Fourth of July number, which issue we always endeavor to make especially patriotic. This year its pages will be adapted, as far as possible, to the needs and interests of our soldiers and sailors. An extra edition will be printed in the expectation that a large number of copies will be ordered for distribution among the "boys" of the army and navy who just now are writing to their friends to send them "something to read."

IN acknowledgment of effective campaign work done by Miss Estelle Reed, of Wyoming, among the women of Colorado, Idaho, Utah and her own state, the President has nominated her for superintendent of Indian schools. Miss Reed was persistent in the demand for her reward for helping Mr. McKinley to the presidential chair, and doubtless by her "continual coming" induced him to recognize her just claims. But despite the fact that her appointment will oust a man, there is no doubt that the nomination will be confirmed. Congratulations to Miss Reed and to Wyoming! It is eminently fitting that a woman from a woman suffrage state should thus receive recognition from the national government.

ON Monday afternoon, June 13, the bust of Miss Willard, for which she sat last winter while in Chicago, was presented with fitting ceremonies to the Northwestern University, at Evanston. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers, president of the University, presided, and made the opening remarks. Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller read an original poem. The presentation address was made by Mr. Albert J. Beveridge, of Indianapolis, and that of acceptance by Dr. Rogers, on behalf of the University. The bust is the gift of Mr. John C. Shaffer, of Evanston, and the sculptor is Lorado Taft, of Chicago. It stands in the Orrington Lunt Library. A more detailed description of this work of art and of its presentation to the college will be given in our next issue.

OUR readers will notice a new name as writer of Willard Hall Echoes, that of Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton. Mrs. Hilton needs no introduction to white-ribboners. She has long been known to them as a worker in the purity department, mothers' meetings being her specialty. From the little sketch of her and her "helpful husband," which appeared in these pages a few months ago, and which was one of the last contributions sent by Miss Willard to THE UNION SIGNAL, it will be seen that her life and training have been such as to well fit her for the position of leader of Willard Hall noonday meetings. We may feel assured that under her consecrated leadership these meetings will continue to be a medium of rescue for the perishing and a center of spiritual helpfulness and power.

IN our Correspondence columns will be found a communication concerning "Quo Vadis." The editors heartily indorse this most just and timely criticism of that, to our minds, most unworthily popular book. The only hesitancy we feel in denouncing it is due to our objection to giving literature of that character any more publicity than it already has. As to the fact of its being offered as a premium by religious and semi-religious papers, the most charitable inference is that the editors of these papers have not read the book. "Quo Vadis" may be said to bear the same relation to other impure literature that the "respectable" inn does to other grog shops. In its very "respectability" lies its chief danger.

JUDGING from the printed program of the National Sociological Convocation to be held July 1 to 17, at Lake Bluff, Ill., its promoters have abundant reason to expect it to be as announced, "the greatest meeting ever held at Lake Bluff." Following are the different interests to which are assigned a day's meetings: Christian Endeavor, Christian Citizenship, Associated Charities, legislation, politics, currency, Epworth League, W. C. T. U., other temperance societies, social settlements, Anti-Saloon League, labor, Young People's C. T. U. The convocation, as will be seen, is non-denominational and non-partisan. Rev. J. G. Evans, of Abingdon, Ill., is superintendent, and John Sobieski, Judge Gibbons, E. D. Wheelock, Helen Hood and Lucy Page Gaston are among the names on the executive committee. We hope to print the entire program next week. Look for it in the back pages.

ON Flower Mission Day the National officers, UNION SIGNAL editors and other friends visited Miss Willard's grave, carrying flowers. Miss Pemell, of Australia, World's superintendent of flower missions, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, and Anna Gordon had telegraphed their reminders. It was a pleasing task to decorate the spot where lies the precious dust inclosed in the same grave with her mother. We covered the flat top of the mound with magnificent long stemmed roses laid in rows and bordered it with sweet peas, and banked the headstone in a mass of carnation pinks, lilies, roses and ferns. The other members of the family were not forgotten, and the mounds were decorated with peonies, ferns and roses. After it was all done we clasped hands and stood about the exquisitely beautiful spot, talking of her. At the last "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung, and with a word of prayer we came away comforted.

"THAT the saloon traffic be driven from our land." This is the saving clause in the minority resolution adopted by the General Assembly, which prevents the great Presbyterian church from being classed as a fossil on the temperance question. The utterance creeps in timidly and almost unnoticed under cover of a mild bombardment (with blank cartridges) of intemperance in homes and schools, to be taken "without reflection upon the authorities of collegiate institutions." This resolution was added "with a mighty roar of ayes" when the temperance committee's report came to a vote in the Assembly. The majority report had much to say about total abstinence, but not a word concerning prohibition. One of its sugar-coated recommendations—"that ministers and elders bear frequent, pronounced and public testimony against intemperance"—calls to mind the oft-repeated utterances of liquor dealers' associations. The drink sellers deprecate "intemperance" in words as strongly as do the majority of the Presbyterian temperance committee. The chairman, we are told, "highly eulogized Princeton." In so doing we can not believe that he voiced the great Presbyterian church. The Assembly, by its declarations, neither eulogized nor denounced. As regards the Princeton matter it was neither hot nor cold.

War News.

Little Positive Information Can be Secured Because of Press Censorship.

THE gallant exploit of Lieutenant Richmond Pearson Hobson, who, with six volunteer seamen took the collier Merrimac into the channel at Santiago and sunk her, in the face of a terrific fire from the forts, has added the name of another hero to the honor roll. The heroic seven are prisoners of war in Morro, but will be exchanged as soon as possible, and their action has effectually blockaded the fleet of Admiral Cervera.

It is reported that the military expedition to Cuba will split at Santiago de Cuba, one division under General Coppinger, making an attack on San Juan, Porto Rico, supported by part of our fleet.

The first real land victory in Cuban territory was achieved by Lieut-Col. Huntingdon's battalion of marines from the transport Panther. A landing was effected on Friday, June 10, at the entrance to the harbor of Guantanamo, the little fort at that point having been destroyed two days before. In the guerilla warfare conducted by the little command for thirteen hours, four United States marines were killed and one wounded. The Spanish loss is said to be heavy. On Sunday morning reinforcements from the Marblehead were landed and the stars and stripes are now flying on Cuban soil.

The squadrons of Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley are still off Santiago, maintaining a strict watch, day and night, to prevent the possibility of Admiral Cervera's escape. It is reported that a new flying squadron will sail soon, whose objective point is to be Spanish waters to watch the Cadiz fleet.

At present writing the first division of the United States army, under Major-General Shafter, with transports and convoying warships are at Key West, ready to sail for Santiago. It is expected this formidable force will reach that point by Wednesday, June 15.

Captain General Augusti cabled to Madrid that the situation in the Philippines is "very grave," that the insurgents under Aguinaldo have stirred up the whole country, and that he fears for the continuance of Spanish rule over the islands.

In the House of Commons, A. J. Balfour, the government leader, stated that Great Britain would take no part in any move for intervention between the United States and Spain until satisfied that the proffer "will be well received by both parties."

NOTES.

A MONUMENT is to be erected to the memory of Ensign Worth Bagley, the first officer in the American navy to fall in the war with Spain.

THE canteen established by the First Illinois regiment while in camp at Chickamauga, has been discontinued since the removal of the troops to Tampa, on the advice of the surgeons, who state that they do not consider it safe for the men to have liquor in that climate.

AN X ray plant is to be shipped to Manila for the use of the surgeons of our army in the Philippines. Army surgeons have been experimenting with X ray apparatus for the past three or four years. These experiments have shown that about thirty per cent of the operations that would have to be made ordinarily can be avoided by the use of the X ray plant. Other plants have been sent to Tampa, and two or three are now supposed to be on their way with our troops to Cuba.

THE first thoroughly equipped hospital train to be adopted for army use by the United States government has been contracted for. It will consist of twelve cars. One dining car, one private car and ten sleepers will be used, and the train is to make regular runs on a fast schedule between Tampa and the field hospital at Chickamauga Park. The purpose of the government in using this hospital train is to be ready, when the real fighting begins, to carry the wounded soldiers away from the heat and malaria of Cuba and Florida with as much comfort and speed as possible.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has granted a pardon to Captain John D. Hart, now serving a sentence of two years in prison at Philadelphia, for engaging in a filibustering expedition to Cuba.

The Army Christian Commission.

THE correspondents of the Associated Press speak of the large attendance of soldiers and their deep interest in the religious meetings which are held daily in large tents, one of which is, or will be, located with each brigade of the army. They speak of the surprise expressed by correspondents of foreign papers and others familiar with European army life, at the interest American soldiers evince in these meetings, and contrast the soldiers in camp on Sunday with the Cuban citizens of Tampa, the former crowding the tents where religious meetings are held, while the latter spend the day in going from one cockpit to another.

Mr. Moody is arranging to send Dr. Wharton, of Baltimore, Dr. Schofield, of Northfield, and other eminent preachers and evangelists to the different camps, and during the summer large numbers will go to coöperate with the army chaplains, association secretaries and others, and an active evangelistic work will be done. Mr. Moody considers this the grandest opportunity the country has had in many years to preach the gospel to young men, many of whom are now specially interested in the question of personal salvation.

Letters speak of the miles of liquor saloons on the roads leading to army camps, the gambling places and other open avenues to vice, and it is most cheering to know that the Christian people of the country are awaking to the grand opportunity and the pressing need for the counter-attractions the Army Christian Commission has introduced.

Chairman John J. McCook, Hon. John W. Foster and Gen. James A. Beaver, members of the Army Christian Commission, had an interview with President McKinley last week, in which they asked permission to send tents, secretaries, etc., with the army to Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Persons having magazines, unobjectionable books and other reading matter, and useful things they wish to send to the army, can send them, charges paid, either to the secretary of the Army Christian Commission at any of the camps, or to 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York, from where they will be sent when most needed. (In every case the charges must be prepaid or they will not be received.)

Mr. Moody is making an earnest appeal for the funds necessary to carry on the work on a scale commensurate with its importance. Money may be sent to him at Northfield, Mass., saying it is for the evangelistic work of the Army Christian Commission, or to the Army Christian Commission, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York city.

The Temperance Congress.

A GREAT effort will be made at the coming Congress at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, July 1 to 6, to unify and focus the temperance sentiment of the country along lines on which all are agreed. It is hoped that a workable plan of federation will be agreed upon by which a Central National Temperance Board will enable the millions of total abstainers to act as a unit on such questions as:

No repeal of Prohibition in Alaska; total abstinence in the army and navy; thirty per cent lower rate in life insurance to total abstainers, as they are thirty per cent safer risks; total abstinence a requirement in teachers in public schools; alcohol to be prescribed by physicians the same as they prescribe other poisons; universities and colleges to provide clean anti-saloon surroundings for their students; a great strengthening of all temperance societies by systematic efforts to prevail upon all total abstainers to join one or more of such societies; a renewal of pledge signing, etc., etc.

SPEAKERS—Among those who have already agreed to be present are Dr. Swallow, candidate for governor of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago; Miss Belle Kearney, of Alabama; Anthony Comstock, of New York; Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich.; John G. Woolley, of Chicago, beside the heads of nearly every national organization that believes in total abstinence.

Temperance.

A REPORT of the canteen in the camp of a Pennsylvania regiment at Chickamauga, written to a home paper by a sergeant, has caused the writer to be reduced to the ranks.

ACCORDING to the ruling of a Philadelphia judge, it is not the duty of the state to prove that a party accused of selling liquor unlawfully has no license, but it devolves upon the accused to prove that he has a license.

THE Ancient Order of Hibernians, at their recent state convention in Massachusetts, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the use of intoxicating liquors in the meetings of the A. O. H. of Massachusetts be prohibited, and an appropriate penalty for the violation of such law be provided.

About Women.

MISS ESTELLE REEL, who has made an enviable reputation as state superintendent of schools for Wyoming, has been appointed superintendent of Indian schools for the government, by President McKinley.

MRS. ELIZABETH KELLY has donated $75,000 for erecting and equipping a new dormitory for women at the University of Chicago. It will be called Greene Hall in memory of Mrs. Kelly's parents.

MRS. M. HAMMER was employed in February 1897, by the Big Four railroad company to take charge of an interlock at Ansonia, O., having fourteen levers to operate. Mrs. Hammer's husband had died the December previous.

MISS EVANGELINE CISNEROS, whose romantic escape from a Spanish prison in Havana several months ago is recalled, was married at Baltimore, on June 9, to Carlos F. Carbonel, who assisted in her rescue. The groom is a lieutenant on the staff of General Fitz Hugh Lee.

MRS. EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER, dean of Woman's Hall and professor of English literature at Northwestern University, will sever her connection with the college at the close of the present school year, and engage in literary work, establishing herself in her own home at Evanston.

At Home.

SEVEN cases of yellow fever have been reported at McHenry, Miss., and the town declared under quarantine by the state board of health.

THE Woman's Cuban Relief Association held its first annual meeting June 8, in the Lecture Hall of Columbian University, Washington, D. C. Reports for the year were submitted and the entire board of officers were re-elected. It was decided to continue the relief work as thoroughly as possible.

A CLASS of fifty-five was graduated from the high school at Decatur, Ill., on June 10, and the class honors, a scholarship at Wheaton College, were won by Maggie P. Murrell, a colored girl, aged sixteen years. She is the daughter of Robert Murrell and wife, both natives of Kentucky, and both born in slavery. At the Opera House, where the graduation ceremonies were held, Superintendent Gastman of the public schools presented her with a gold watch, the gift of the colored people of Decatur.

A NEW departure is about to be made in the work of the Young Men's Christian Associations, and Alaska is to be opened up to this movement. Mr. W. A. Reid, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association at Kalamazoo, Mich., for many years, and Mr. Dwight H. Robinson, will sail June 15, via St. Michaels to Dawson City direct. They are experienced men and will proceed at once to organize the Young Men's Christian Association at that point. They will take in such supplies as are necessary for an all-round work for young men, viz., Christian and current literature, and reading supplies, musical instruments of various kinds, stereopticon, phonograph, athletic appliances, etc. They will open a building and fit it out as a reading-room and for the holding of gospel services, Bible classes and social gatherings, to counteract the influence of the saloons and gambling dens. The work has already the assurance of a hearty support in the field and the project is a very commendable one.

What Doest Thou Here?

BY CARRIE LEE CARTER.

WHEN life was fair as one long summer day,
When youth and love made joyous all the way,
And all the past fond memories 'round me flung,
And all the future seemed a song unsung,
E'en then a voice called unto me,
"Is there no labor then for thee?
What doest thou here?
What good hast done from year to year?
Because thy lot has been a happy one,
In thankfulness, the more thou should'st have done,
To lift the fallen, cheer the faint, and show
The love of Christ for toilers here below."

Now that the dreams of youth are fled,
Now since all happy words are sung or said,
Bright hopes are flown, the earth is sad and drear,
Still speaks the voice, "What doest thou here?
Thinkest thou thy sorrow
Can no oblivion borrow?
Know then, thy piteous cry,
Re-echoed all about thee, fills the sky.
The world is full of misery and pain,
Sorrow and sin, wrong and injustice reign;
Leave thine own grief, nor ever more repine,
By faithful ministry make life divine!"

In the Coils of a Snake.

In Two Chapters.

BY J. FOWLER WILLING.

CHAPTER I.

IT began in Twilight Park, a bit of Paradise in the Catskills. Frances Willard knew the place well, and so does Fanny Barnes "of ours."

Two young men were taking their morning smoke on one of the little balconies under its eaves. They were unusually handsome specimens of the genus "swell," elegantly mannered, faultlessly dressed, stylishly barbered, diamondized cravat, etc., Tarbell and Howland by name. They called each other Jim and Jack.

"Great Scot!" exclaimed the finer of the two, craning for a good look at a young lady, who had fancied herself quite secluded in a little hemlock nook. The guests at the inn usually chose the lawn on the other side of the house. "Say, Jack, isn't she a beauty? Did you ever see such grace of manner? That old codger in the hammock must feel as though he is being tended by a queen. That style of hers would turn a Newport belle green with envy."

"Rather fine," responded the other, puffing lazily at his Havana to get it well under way.

Tarbell's eager eyes were fastened on the group below. His feverish gaze suggested that certain dread personage who walketh about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. The girl was sitting beside her father's hammock, her fountain pen racing through what looked from the perch above to be a manuscript that she was copying. Every little while she raised her head to look after a merry little midget who was chasing a tricksy kitten among the thimbleberry bushes and ferns.

"Who are they?" asked Howland, blowing aside the odorous smoke, taking his heels from the balcony rail and bending forward for a closer look.

"She's a school ma'am," replied Tarbell, "the old gent's a minister. Short commons, you know, piecing out by taking care of the kid. The young one belongs to a rich widower, who has reasons of his own for having the girl take care of his motherless pappoose, as he calls it. Precious little good it will do him. When I get her he'll have to take a back seat, or—" The expletives that followed would smutch this page. Howland did not mind them, however. He was used to such talk, no doubt.

"You've had so many of them, Jim," his low, coarse laugh rattled like the tail of a certain Florida reptile. "Seems to me you'd better swear off and settle down. A good match with an additional million or so would come handy for a fellow whose habits are a little expensive, you know."

"You needn't twit me on the number of my little adventures," said Tarbell, stroking back his fine mustache. "I always provide for them handsomely until they get in the way of taking care of themselves. Now the girl down there is a game piece. I never brought down one of that sort exactly. Tough bitted, puritanic and all that sort of thing. I've got to have her if it takes half my kingdom. Her relations will be confoundedly hard to handle, but a sham marriage and a trip abroad will fix things about right."

"You'll be tired of each other by the time you get back," chuckled Howland. "Only I must insist, Jim, that you settle a good round pension on her so that she won't be driven to the wall. I'm humane, you see."

"Go to the dogs with your nonsense!" exclaimed Jim Tarbell, with a jolly sneer. "I'll fix it up. When I take my million dollar wife, I'll be flush. You see they're country folks. Used to a quiet way of living. They came up here that the old man, who is a paralytic, might have the mountain air. Our Quaker landlady gave the girl a chance to do chamber work to help along. She treats Anna like a lady. They're a little queer, those Quakers."

"You seem to know all about her," said Jack dryly, looking down at the group.

"Well, yes, I've met her in the halls a few times. She isn't the sort that a fellow can make up to easily, but I—"

"Oh, you wouldn't be afraid of Juno herself," said Jack, "or even Diana," with the same low chuckle. "So her name is Anna."

"Yes, Anna Clifford. I'd give half the million I expect Miss Roseberg to bring me if she had one quarter of the girl's style. See, Jack, she has thrown aside her hat. Doesn't the sunlight ripple over her head gorgeously. I tell you she has a complexion of her own," and the two woman fanciers discussed the points of the young lady's beauty as bloodlessly as they would have talked over a favorite racer or a trapeze girl.

"There, Popsie darling," said Anna, capping her pen and putting it into her pocket, "I've finished the last chapter. Now, please, shut your eyes and lend me your ears and I'll read it to you. I've been over it three times since you criticised it last. Here Poosie!" calling the little kitten chaser, "don't go too near the edge. Aunt Nannie's afraid you'll fall."

After the chapter had been duly discussed and approved, the young lady informed her father that she must go down to the city the first of next week to see what she could do with her story.

He shook his head. "Mr. Bardwell will be here to see Poosie by that time, and he'll be disappointed if you're away."

She flushed, but replied in her usual quiet, even tones. "He'll be company for you, popsie, and he will look after Poosie. We ought to give some time to her. It brings a man down from his stilts to have to tend baby."

The invalid did not seem quite to relish the hint that humility could improve Mr. Bardwell, so he answered a trifle querulously:

"I've told you time and again, daughter, that I think Mr. Bardwell a very nice young gentleman. If you'd only treat him as you do some of the rest of them, Jerold Hildreth, for instance. He's a good preacher, but then—" The girl flushed in good earnest now, but he droned on. "Ministers are always as poor as Job's turkey. I'm a fair specimen myself, stranded for my daughter to take care of. If I could only get my patent through the office at Washington, we would have enough. But it will take another fifty dollars for that. You won't hear to my asking Bardwell to lend me the money."

He checked the tide of talk. It occurred to him that he might make her uncomfortable.

"No, popsie, we mustn't go to borrowing. 'The borrower is servant to the lender,' you know. I like to take care of Poosie. She's a dear little thing and we need the money; but that's all, popsie." The lines on the girl's face softened, and the light, half-embarrassed laugh rippled over her lips.

A child's cry—a sharp look this way and that—"Poosie! Poosie!" A rush through the bushes! There she was, hanging by her dress from the branches of a tree that had fallen partly over the ledge.

Anna Clifford did not lose her head. She told Poosie in a clear, ringing voice that expected to be obeyed, not to stir and Aunt Nannie would get her down all right. A crackling of the bushes—a man's sharp tread—and Tarbell was climbing out on the fallen tree. Seizing Poosie's arm, he pulled her out of danger. From his balcony perch, he had seen the whole affair, and had torn down the stairs and through the halls just in time to save the child from a fall that would have been serious.

An angel of courtesy could not have been more respectful than he when Mr. Clifford insisted on his taking one of the camp chairs near the hammock. The risks and possibilities of Poosie's adventure were rehearsed with all conceivable variations and much more that was not altogether relevant, but which the young man was eager to know.

Tarbell had spoken to Anna under one pretext or another when he had met her in the halls, and always with the most polite deference. She did not like him, though she could hardly tell why. There was a snakiness in his smooth ways that gave her an inward shudder whenever his tone or glance verged upon personal notice.

The young man had dipped into journalism before leaving college. He seemed to know everything about New York publishers. The hard times had made the printing people a little shy of new ventures, yet he would be most happy to help Miss Clifford dispose of her manuscript, etc.

The dear old invalid in the hammock was quite overjoyed. Anna took Poosie to her room for repairs just in time to escape being asked to read some of the special chapters of her story to Tarbell. When she came back, she found that her father had arranged to have the young man meet her at the train and take her to a boarding house, quite as comfortable as the Margaret Louisa, where she had meant to stop, and much cheaper, and nearer to the newspaper offices, two quite important items, the old man thought, in the great bewildering, voracious city.

Lady Henry Somerset's Memorial Address on Miss Willard.

(Delivered May 10, in Westminster Chapel, London.)

OVER and over again I have tried to begin to collect some thought to present to you at this meeting, and I have always failed. Over and over again it has seemed to me that the only thing to which I could trust was, "He shall give you in that hour what ye are to say." And the reason I think is that when we approach a subject that has so many sides and so many aspects, and we can only take one or two, we must wait and see which of these particular angles of vision is likely to be of the most use to us at this hour.

I need not dwell with you to-day, sisters and comrades, upon the temperance work that Frances Willard accomplished—you know it as well as I. I could not dwell with you upon her oratory, because her words have rung in your ears and have touched your hearts. I do not dwell with you upon the genius she had for gathering women together, for divining what was the latent power in every woman, because there are many of you here on whose shoulders she laid her hand and whom she has told just what they could accomplish. Both here and in America there are many who thought that they were of little account in the world, that they could do nothing, say nothing, be of no real use to humanity, whom Frances Willard showed to themselves in a new light. She divined the best aspiration of their heart, sunned it out with her own wonderful, beautiful hope, and so it grew into a great harvest of accomplishment.

I think to-day of the many, many times in which I have realized that it was what she was that made her able to accomplish as she did. It is what we are that matters, and what we do follows, and Frances Willard was just a woman who loved everybody. And that meant, not to stand on platforms and tell people that she loved them; not to occupy a great and prominent position and allow every one to say what a charming and inspiring woman she was, but to make everybody feel it and know it that came in contact with her, even in the very humblest walks of life. How many a time I can recall her saying just the little word that would smooth some ruffled feelings, just some grateful recognition of an almost unheeded service, just some care for the needs of some one whom everybody was likely to overlook! Those subjects filled her mind, side by side with the statesmanlike plans, the varied intricacies of a great cause and the watchful outlook on the complications that surround a reformer.

I am so thankful to feel that she, who was more than a sister to her, the comrade of twenty years, who accompanied her on all her toiling journeys, who upheld her and cherished her, is with us to-day. I mean her faithful Anna Gordon, and I realized yesterday when she was talking to me what actually made Frances Willard's greatness. She told me that among the memoranda she left on her pin-cushion were the following: "To see the paralyzed woman at the bottom of the hill." "To give some literature to the charwoman and say a few words to her." It is not the public words of an individual, it is the daily, hourly acts, the trend of the thought, that leads heavenward, that makes the saints, and in these ways Frances Willard was a saint, recognized and understood, known and read of all men.

There is one point in her life that I should like emphasized, and that is the harass and difficulty of it. It looks so easy to be applauded, to find great audiences rising to greet her, and all the women's hearts at her feet; but underneath all that, there was always the criticism, the disputes that had to be settled, the difficulties that had to be bridged over, the troubles that had to be faced, the responsibilities of some new path in which she was called to walk alone—those crosses so hard to bear all unknown to the great public, not to speak of the physical toil—the long, weary journeys on the cars, the long night's traveling after speaking, and—more than all—the incessant leaving of her home and her aged mother, which was continually to her a source of trouble. None of these things are known to those who only see in her the public leader, but we who were near to her knew them all. We realize all the difficulties that she was continually called to meet, and within these last years there was added to them the burden of ill health; and yet I never remember hearing her utter one fretful complaint or grumbling word about such disabilities as she was called upon to bear. And it is just because she was always in private what she appeared in public that she was able to accomplish what she did. We can not any of us hope to stand as she did in the estimation of this great world, but we can all aspire to acquire that same beautiful spirit. We are all of us "called to be saints" in the way that Frances Willard was a saint.

And what was the secret of that beautiful life, that patient toil? What was the secret of that divine charity that thought no ill; charity that even at the very last was so triumphant that she sent out messages to those who were, according to her idea, undermining the work for which she had so long fought. She never to my knowledge had one single bitter thought of any; bitterness was absolutely absent from her nature. The secret of her life lay in the last words she ever spoke to that great gathering at Buffalo when many tell me they saw her transfigured before them, and many went out to realize that they would see her face no more. She said, "It came to me that I could gain no truer concept of God than by holding to the Way, the Truth and the Life, ever tenderly smiling to me and saying, 'Receive my spirit.'" The mystery of life, its discipline, its joys and griefs will end, and the mystery of death will work out the transfer to other realms of infinite power.

We shall never climb to heaven by making it our lifelong business to save ourselves. The motive is too selfish; the motto of the true Christian is "all for each and each for all," and in trying to realize this we acquire a heart at leisure from itself, and in no other way. That moment came to her. "Receive my spirit" were the last words of that voice which has touched so many audiences upon earth; the last words that she was to speak who had turned so many from darkness to light. These words were the deep in-breathings of the soul that had already lived in the world to which it was then tending. "How beautiful to be with God!" Beautiful because she had been with Him here; beautiful because she had trodden the way He trod; beautiful because she had faith; beautiful because her whole life was blended with all that makes heaven beautiful.

And I pray to-day that the outcome of this service may be a solemn consecration, and that we too may be able to say to-day, here and now, "How beautiful to be with God!"

Man's Yoke-Fellow.

BY CORA E. SEBERRY.

AS man conforms to natural laws, as his life runs parallel with the unseen but vital forces which govern the universe, it becomes easy, beautiful, successful. When we see his material, physical and moral affairs snarled, unsightly, disappointing in results, we may be pretty sure that the effects of broken law are standing before us as danger signals. And it is because we see these signals all around us that we seek to analyze to some degree the causes which have produced them, to discover, if possible, some remedy.

Ever since God saw it was "not good for man to be alone," history has sustained that wise decision. It was founded not only on man's social qualities, but with regard to perfect growth and ripeness of nature. So woman was created. United, they form the all-round, perfect instrument of beauty and utility. They are yoked together in the indissoluble bond of natural law. They are not free to regard themselves as concrete entities; they are halves of a perfect unit, ordained to consummate together God's highest, noblest plans. Can we not then trace part of the lack of harmony in the world about us to interference with beneficent design?

The three interests which provide necessary work for humankind center in home, church, nation. In song and story, and by blessed experience, we have known the ideal home; and when the men and women who made those homes came together, away off in the little country town, or in the city tenement, or perchance in the abode of wealth and luxury—for virtue and high ideals are not limited by state or condition, thank God—a standard was set up, an ideal of home life; or it may not have been formulated even in thought as an ideal, it was simply living day by day an unselfish life of mutual service.

Through the sorrows and joys, poverty and riches which were theirs, the ideal of home was never surrendered. The father did his part, the mother did hers. Their aim was the same; unitedly they strove toward it. And because this aim and method of procedure were in accord with the order, symmetry and beauty of nature's laws, and the forces brought to bear on its accomplishment were of the highest order of thought and spirit, a moral atmosphere was generated, which breathed nobility, purity and peace. In such homes, men and women on an equal footing, are expending in one cause, the different yet complimentary attributes which God has bestowed upon them.

The aim of the church, as we understand it, is the salvation of souls. Is it accomplishing this work to any extent to-day? Wonderful efforts are made throughout the land to revive the churches. Why? It is not all spiritual need; but because more than half the church body is becoming paralyzed from inaction, and when half a body is paralyzed not much can be accomplished by the other half. Some of the best blood in that body, as represented by the women, is artificially congested by unnatural ligatures, and as the circulation is not normal, small wonder that its eternal economy is not in the best working order, that the church itself is cold, heavy, lethargic; so year after year it has to be "revived," when all it really needs is proper exercise of every function. We would find no fault with the work done by the men of the church. But with two powerful engines on the good ship Zion, they simply refuse to utilize the double amount of power, and with fire under her boiler and a full head of steam on, the hand of prejudice shuts down her throttle valve, stops her machinery, and then wonders why we are sailing so slowly into port!

But visit the missions of our large cities. There we shall see men and women working together hand in hand, with one end in view; and the most "homey," unconventional, Christlike spirited places of worship to be found are those same missions; where the poor and sinful testify to this fact and to the success of the work by crowding into them, not one night in seven, but night after night, year in year out. Such success is not due to accident. It is because those men and women are consciously or unconsciously working in unison with God's law. This is the secret also of the Salvation Army's triumphs. Its members have been providentially led, and have been willing to be led, along the harmonious lines of natural law.

As a nation, we find ourselves in a state of chaos, industriously, politically, morally. It is plainly discernible that we are not traveling in the direction of the ideal. We have wandered from its high altitude, its revivifying moral atmosphere, to the swampy, malarious grounds of expediency. The fever of greed is in our veins. Our brain is on fire with it. We can not think rightly. We see and grasp at fanciful illusions, and think them important realities. We pass serious matters with the oblique glance of the insane. We are sick, mentally and morally. We have been running counter to law, and we are paying the penalty. Good, pure, manly, courageous men are seeking, at any cost of personal sacrifice, various remedies to antidote the deadly miasma of fear and doubt around us. There is but one remedy. Right about face! Away from this polluted atmosphere! And there are two roads merging into one, which will lead us on and up to the clear air of freedom—enfranchisement of women and prohibition of the liquor traffic!

The majority of thinking people have ceased to scoff at the army of women who press toward our legislative halls, demanding that finite minds cease trying to disprove the "divine veracity in nature," which asserts itself in orderly, healthy development throughout all spheres, by the subtle mingling of dual life and character. These women do not claim special originality and wisdom, but they have discovered nature's laws to be in harmony with their own duties and privileges, and they choose to follow God's leadings instead of man's. The mother instinct in woman takes within its fostering care the interests of our loved republic, and would fain express itself in effective action. Her soul burns within her to help those who are so defrauded and distressed and imperiled by removing at least outward temptation. But she is denied the full expansion of her powers in this direction. She has done what she may, but limitations are set to her usefulness.

When will her yoke-fellows realize that help for her means added strength and purity and peace for them? The interests of men and women are interdependent. Both are in the plow of reform. If they do not pull together, the progress of humanity, as well as the cause of right, is retarded.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

MANY have been drawn to Willard Hall this week to hear the Hindoo evangelist, V. D. David, tell in his earnest, burning words of the gift of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts," he urges, then the Christian's life will be a natural one—as much so as to breathe, or walk, or see.

The testimony of a young lad showed God's keeping power in the midst of a great city. Visitors from Washington, D. C., North Dakota and Canada bore witness for Christ. A woman, desperate for want of work, asked the prayers of God's people that she might be directed to the right party. Tired hearts went away from David's meetings refreshed and rested.

. . . . . .

A young girl from a distant town, alone, friendless, left her money in her room while she looked for work, and it was stolen ere she returned. She had tramped three days with no success. Frightened and faint she appealed to a policeman, who gave her car fare and directed her to the noon meeting at Willard Hall where the "good ladies would tell her what to do." Oh Christians take care of your young people, do not let them drift into the vortex of a great city.

A mother with two babies, appeals to us. She is able and willing to work, but how can she keep her children with her, is the query propounded.

A seaman just from the hospital was told of the noon meeting. The women there, it was said, could advise him where to go.

These are a few of the experiences which come to us, showing that Willard Hall and its gospel meetings stand as a beacon light in a great city.

Every day about ten minutes after twelve the noontide prayer, which links all white-ribboners in a bond of petition to God, is offered

State Prohibition Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was my privilege on June 1 and 2 to be numbered among the Chicago delegates at the Illinois Prohibition Convention, held in Peoria. The days were so full of interest that I have thought a brief sketch of their most important features might be acceptable to your readers.

The fact that Peoria, the stronghold of the liquor traffic for the nation, was chosen as the place for the annual gathering of the liquor traffic's most relentless foes, seems to me, in itself, to be most significant. It is true that the black banner of smoke arising from the chimneys of the breweries and distilleries waved not one whit less triumphantly when we left the city than it had waved when we entered. It is true that, to the seeing of the outward eye, nothing more had been accomplished than the bringing together of a company of enthusiasts, who were attempting the impossible. One can well imagine the sneers that were indulged in, in the palatial residences upon the bluff. David against Goliath was a giant in comparison with the puny force which dared attack the liquor king in the very citadel of his power.

It is not my purpose to give a detailed report of this convention which was called to order by John Greer and presided over by Hale Johnson, but rather to note some of the features which to my mind were most significant.

It was the largest state convention ever held in Illinois. Every county in the state was represented, and the grand sum total of delegates was said to be between twelve and thirteen hundred. The evening meetings were largely attended by those who were not delegates, and on the evening of John G. Woolley's address, it is estimated that not less than four thousand people were in attendance. The large majority of the delegates were farmers and farmers' wives. The conclusion I draw from this fact is that the people who do their own reading and their own thinking are far more likely to reach right conclusions and to see moral issues than are those who are caught in the whirl of expediency, which is the seemingly necessary accompaniment of political life in our cities and towns. It augurs well for the success of a party and a principle which finds its chief adherents among the agricultural classes. They, in the end, will discover that they hold the balance of power.

A strong woman's suffrage plank held the second place in the platform, from which some of us inferred that the mistake of the Pittsburg convention may be retrieved two years hence. God grant it! The majority of the women delegates wore the white ribbon, which fact proves—what? "He that runs may read." The beautiful spirit of harmony which pervaded the entire convention was nowhere more clearly evidenced than in the fact that the sixth plank of the platform, though evidently favored by the majority of the delegates was withdrawn as soon as it became evident that it would prove a divisive issue. As it concerned a question of method and not principle this could be done, but the spirit which prompted the withdrawal was none the less sincere, brotherly, Christlike.

The high-water mark of sentiment among the delegates was reached in the memorial service to our beloved Miss Willard, which was held at 10 o'clock Thursday A. M. Her picture had hung before our eyes during the entire convention, and as one after another paid tribute to her greatness, strong men wept and all hearts were welded more closely together, not alone in the bond of a common sorrow, but the still closer bond of a common purpose.

The address of John G. Woolley, on Wednesday night was an epoch-making address. To listen to it was to stand before the bar of God set up in each individual life. To tell an aroused conscience what to do next is often more important than to arouse the conscience. John G. Woolley's "next," is always a definite thing to him. Perhaps that is the reason why his words so often rankle in the minds of those who applaud abstract sentiment vigorously, but have a chronic objection to concrete action.

It was a great pleasure and a great profit to thus meet our brothers of this great state. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through its secretary, congratulates them on the good work of the past year, and upon the promise that the good work will be continued.

Very truly yours,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

A Protest Against "Quo Vadis."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wish through your columns to utter a remonstrance. The work of the department of purity in literature and art is largely to discourage the publication of revolting details of impurity, cruelty or other crimes. Even to expose, in order to end iniquity now being enacted, we do not believe in giving to the public its minutiæ. We work in recognition of the well-known fact that there is a contagion in crime; that reading or hearing the particulars of a suicide has induced others to commit suicide; that accounts of skillfully planned murders or robberies have with a terrible fascination, drawn men and boys to the commission of similar crimes; that the story of accomplished or attempted licentiousness has made many a young man a betrayer, and many a girl weak to her own ruin.

We (in this state at least) are praying the press to come up to the standard set for them by the National Editorial Association in their resolution "to endeavor to realize the prime object of the press—the elevation and betterment of humanity, intellectually, morally and socially, to suppress sensationalism and immoral details in the reports of vice and crime, and that we will further endeavor to make the press one of the best friends of humanity by refusing space to all questionable and impure advertisements."

We are petitioning and endeavoring to pledge newsdealers against "traffic in lascivious, sensational and crime-begetting reading matter." We are distributing copies of our state law which threatens with heavy penalties the circulation of "books principally made up of stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust and crime."

Why then, I ask, do we join in the general laudation of "Quo Vadis"? If that book does not come under all of these proscribed heads, what does? From cover to cover it reeks with "bloodshed, lust and crime," the more awful that it is from the pen of a master. Nero's orgies of lust and drunkenness are painted with a realism that I pray God no young son or daughter of mine may ever see; while the descriptions of the crunching of children's heads by the teeth of the lion, and the quarreling of wild dogs over a woman's arm or foot are enough to make the reader wake with shrieks for many a night.

Moreover, we are expected to lay down the book with a feeling of satisfaction that the hero and heroine are at last married and safe. No hint is there that the impure past of Vinicius has made him less than the equal of the pure Lygia, or unfit to mate with her; no criticism, even implied, that when denied her he sought solace in the society of the vilest women, only dropping them because "he wearied of them."

The "Kreutzer Sonata," though it be under the ban of the law, is to my mind a gem of purity when compared with "Quo Vadis." Tolstoi describes vice which exists at present, using his great art to make it repulsive and repugnant. Sienkiewicz exhumes from its grave the corruption of a past age, and dresses it in all the glamour of music, warmth, softness, beauty and youth. The genius of the master is, of course, apparent; and there is enough of religion sandwiched into the book to perhaps salve the consciences of the thoughtless, but the Woman's Christian Temperance Union does not believe in "art for arts sake"; nor that a cup of poison, because it has a gill of pure water added to it, commends itself to sane people. In view of this I would earnestly protest against the offering of this book for sale by any paper, and against our women circulating it in any way.

I know that there is such a thing as advertising vice by trying to expose it, but this is not written to the prurient, but to my clean-souled sisters, and it is written because I am but one of several whom I know who have brought the book into their homes because it was offered in connection with a religious paper. One mother did not read it herself till she observed that her son, just entering manhood, was sitting up till nearly morning, night after night, till he finished it. This so surprised her that she read the book and was horrified at having placed it in his way. I know of other like instances.

Yours for whatsoever things are pure,
LAVEINE R. SHERWOOD,
Supt. of Purity in Lit. and Art for W. Wash. Everett, Washington.

Why I am a Non-Alcoholic Physician.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The winter of 1885 and 1886 the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Chicago began a series of receptions to the students of the medical colleges of that city. The first one was tendered to the "Hahnemann." Over two hundred of us (only one besides myself wearing the white ribbon) marched to the Michigan Avenue M. E. church. Miss Willard, her ever faithful friend Miss Gordon, and the leaders of the city W. C. T. U. were introduced to us all, then came the address of the evening by that remarkable woman, Frances E. Willard. She at times was humorous, then pathetic, and again hurled bits of scientific truth that were overwhelmingly conclusive, and held her audience enchained for an hour.

She told us that our good president was their physician in the dark days when her sister Mary went away, that our dean was an old friend of their family.

Then when she had won us completely, she explained why we ought not to use malted or spirituous liquors or wines as we should enter professional life. The cheering was frequent from her enthusiastic audience. I do not remember to have heard anything upon the subject before. She produced an "arrest of thought" in my mind, resulting in my becoming a temperance doctor. I have never prescribed liquor to be used internally or externally.

I have never seen a case of acute or chronic disease that I thought would be benefited in the least by its use. Consequently no drunkard in the day of judgment will point his or her finger at me and say, "You sent me to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's doom." In my class were men and women from every state in our nation, and also some from foreign countries. One of the ladies became the first resident physician of the National Temperance Hospital.

We do not know how many more were impressed as were we by Miss Willard's eloquent plea.

Our large and philanthropic organization can do no better work than to educate the students of our medical colleges along the line of non-alcoholic medication.

Miss Willard's Last Visit to Toots.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—One of the interesting incidents of the late Miss Frances Willard's last trip to Chicago was her visit to Toots, her famed Angora cat, who for five years was at once the pride and terror of Rest Cottage. Thousands of hands have been laid on his splendid head, for every temperance pilgrim craved the privilege of touching the beautiful creature. Five years of constant adulation roused his tigerish instincts, and from a playful, six-months-old kitten he was transformed into a pugnacious feline who used his ivory nails indiscriminately on friend and foe.

The deep, angry growl was preceded by the unsheathing of claws that invariably left a scarlet line on the flesh of his would-be worshiper. Finally, he became so obstreperous that visitors were warned not to touch him, and he was allowed to sleep undisturbed on his silken cushion. When he came to Mrs. Norton he was in such a ferocious frame of mind that the family scarcely dared to enter his august presence, as he delighted to crouch in the dark corners and spring upon them.

But retirement to private life has restored his natural amiability, and now his goodness is only equaled by his extraordinary beauty.

Miss Willard had not seen her pet for two years, for when she broke up the home life at Rest Cottage, she petitioned Mrs. Leland Norton, of 4011 Drexel Boulevard, to take Toots into her kennels, which sheltered eight rare Angora cats. In her long absence from the city, and in the multiplicity of her many interests, it came to pass that she had not seen Toots since he left her home.

But a few days before leaving Chicago, she forgot the pressing needs of the Woman's Temple, laid aside her cares as president of the W. C. T. U., denied herself social pleasures and went to call on Toots. With a cat's usual ingratitude, he had entirely forgotten his distinguished mistress, and simply gave her the lordly welcome he accords all visitors, for Mrs. Norton has taught him to greet her guests by stopping in front of each one long enough for a fleeting caress. At the word, "Toots, go and say good afternoon to Miss Willard and Miss Gordon," the obedient pussy made his usual brief society bow, and triumphantly claimed his reward, which is a tender branch of an umbrella palm, which he devours with snorts of delight.

But his choicest treat is a bunch of English violets, and after enjoying the exquisite perfume until he is fairly intoxicated with the odor, he puts one velvety paw on the stems and daintily plucks off the heads, smacking his pink lips as the appetizing morsel disappears.

Naturally the great temperance leader was disappointed that Toots, who had shared her honors and hospitality for so many years, should have forgotten her, but she forgave his inconstancy, for has he not added two thousand dollars to the treasury of the W. C. T. U. by the sale of his pictures, which is doubtless the largest amount ever earned by a feline.

Toot's bath is quite a ceremonious affair and he loves a dip as well as a rugged Englishman. The big laundry tub is filled half full of warm soapy water and this prize pussy cat is immersed until nothing but his bonny head appears above the white foam. Holding him firmly, Mrs. Norton washes him with a sponge until his flesh is as pink as a sea shell, when he is dropped into the next tub where he is thoroughly rinsed and finally sprayed, the cooler water making him gasp like a human being.

After a vigorous rub he is put into a hot blanket and carried into the bathroom where the gas heater is turned on full tilt. During this delightful process Toots purrs a whole opera and never stirs until he is perfectly dry. And then he walks into the drawing-room with every shining hair erect and his magnificent tail waving like the plumed grass in the southland.

Mrs. Norton is the founder and president of the new Chicago Cat Club, organized this year for the purpose of encouraging the raising of good stock, also to bring up their market value, give them definite classification, provide for homeless or stray cats and arrange for annual cat shows. She is also the happy mistress of the Drexel kennels, one of the finest private collections of Angoras in the world, as she has twenty-two splendid animals. The kennels are the pride of Chicago catologists and the wonder of her friends.

Toots is the patriarch of the tribe, for he has seen the snows of seven winters. He is the last of his race, for he was an orphan when he came to dwell with Miss Willard, and until he went into the Drexel kennels he had never known the companionship of his kind. On occasions he plays a leading part in the mad frolic of his comrades, but generally he sits in the seat of the scornful and watches their pranks with the critical eye of a military commander on inspection day.

QUESTION.—Can you give us a correct account of the connection between the W. C. T. U. and the Woman's Bible?

ANSWER.—Unquestionably we can, and in the space of one sentence. There is absolutely no connection between the two. Some years ago Miss Willard, in company with Lady Henry Somerset, called upon Mrs. Stanton, who told them something of her plan, and asked them to give their names to her list of coadjutors. A conditional promise was given, but upon a more clear understanding of the purpose of the work, this promise was withdrawn by both, and Miss Willard repeatedly stated this both in her public addresses and over her own signature. The fact that the statement is still made after so long a time is only another proof of the capacity of the human mind to resist knowledge. While we have not opposed the Woman's Bible, we still believe it would have been better for the cause of woman if it had never been undertaken. The term itself is a misnomer, and cannot fail to create prejudice and opposition, since it seems to imply that there should be one Bible for men and another for women. The work is really a commentary upon the Bible, written by women, for the express purpose of clearing up some of the errors concerning woman which the Bible has been supposed by some to teach. If it had been called a commentary, it would have been better; to call it a Bible was to condemn it unread. But whether as Bible or commentary, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has had absolutely nothing whatever to do with it from its inception till the present time, and despite the profound respect we entertain for Mrs. Stanton, we feel that this fact cannot be too strongly emphasized.

Q.—Can you recommend books on purity that are especially suitable to place in the hands of young girls and boys?

A.—I know none better than the works of our National superintendent of the department of purity, Dr. Mary Wood-Allen. Those which are most widely known are her "Teaching Truth," "Child Confidence Rewarded," "Almost a Man," "Almost a Woman" and "The Marvels of our Bodily Dwelling." These may all be obtained from the W. T. P. A. or directly from the author. Dr. Wood-Allen's latest work, "What a Young Girl Ought to Know," is companion to "What a Young Boy Ought to Know," and "What a Young Man Ought to Know." The latter are by Sylvanus Stall, D.D., and the series is invaluable alike to purity workers and to those who are anxious to place this most difficult subject before the young in the best possible way. Dr. Wood-Allen's touch is firm but delicate, her insight is clear and her presentation of the subject masterly. Her latest book is undoubtedly the ripest development of her thought and method and cannot be too highly commended. Indeed it is a matter of genuine congratulation on the part of the National W. C. T. U. that in these days when the subject of purity is engrossing so much of public thought the department should be in the hands of so able and devoted a National superintendent. The next few years will doubtless prove rich in fruitage.

Q.—May we not have in THE UNION SIGNAL each week some simple outline programs for the use of local unions? There is a great demand for them in our state.

A.—Most assuredly, if only those who have planned and successfully carried out new programs will coöperate with the editor of this column, by sending to her the outline. It is not to be expected that one brain can devise a fresh way of doing things fifty-two times each year, but the purpose of this column is to conserve the best thought of many brains, and the editor is always ready for suggestions and criticisms, as well as for questions and answers. With the generous response which we are sure will follow this request, we will try to have an outline program in each week's issue. Meantime, for this week we would make the familiar suggestion that a careful study of the Annual Leaflet will furnish material for many programs. Until a union has mastered the contents of that little handbook, there is really no need of further suggestions. Effect follows cause in W. C. T. U. work as in everything else, and a knowledge of principle and detail must go hand in hand if really effective work is to be accomplished.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope. Be strong, . . . and work; for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts.—Psa. 119:49. Hag. 2:4.

THIS beautiful June day finds me lovingly cared for under the hospitable roof of Mrs. C. Moorhead Scovil, Philadelphia, Pa., she who is such a warm, generous friend of the Temple. It was Mrs. Scovil who at the ever memorable National W. C. T. U. Convention at Buffalo last November sent a letter to me pledging $1,000 in Temple Trust Bonds, which in a few days was followed by the gift outright; and other gifts besides this have come to the Temple from her generous hand. Without doubt there are at least hundreds of women in our ranks just as able to give as Mrs. Scovil. Why are they not equally generous? May God open their eyes to their great opportunity of securing the Temple as a monument for all time to our noble Chieftain, so that the reforms she instituted may find their basis of support in the memorial we desire to dedicate to her memory. Let our praying band be much in prayer for those in our ranks who are amply able to give, but from one cause or another so far have withheld their aid.

A large Temple bondholder in this city yesterday signed a pledge for $3,000. Another, a lady, gave her pledge for $600, both conditioned on our securing $300,000 to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds. We are on our last $100,000 of the above amount. Now that we have all got our spring house cleaning and dressmaking out of the way, let us take hold with a will and dedicate this month to work for the Temple in memory of our beloved Saint Frances. Don't think that any sum, no matter how little, will be too small to send. Who builds the great Catholic cathedrals that costs millions? Not rich men and women, but the earnings of the poor. Much of it from the girls who work in our kitchens.

A letter just received from Mrs. Prof. Bascom, Williams College, Massachusetts, deplores how little the union at Williamstown, of which she is president, can give. She says: "We may be able to send before July twenty-five or thirty dollars. How paltry compared with the sum needed, and with our heart's desire!" This little union has done nobly in the past, and a gift of $25 at this juncture will not be paltry, but most generous. If each of our 8,500 unions would send a like sum before July 1 it would satisfy even the generous desires of our good friend, Mrs. Bascom, as it would amount to the munificent sum of $212,500, sufficient with what we have already pledged, to pay off not only the Temple Bonds, but give us the entire ownership of the capital stock of $600,000. When such a magnificent sum might be realized by concerted action by July 1, the limit given us to secure Mr. Field's $50,000, why doesn't every union in the land go to work for the next two or three weeks in all earnestness to attain the desired goal, and not force us to again appeal to Mr. Field's generosity for an extension of time?

Miss Emily M. Darling, Racine, Wis., over a year ago gave her personal pledge to raise $100 for the Temple. This noble woman, by hard work, great self-denial and strictest economy, has completed her pledge. She writes: "I am ready to sing 'Harvest Home,' for here is $20 to finish my pledge." The Harvey, Ill., W. C. T. U. has completed its $100 pledge. Mrs. L. C. Latimer, the president of the South Side Chicago Union, has sent in checks for $75, and promises to soon send the balance of her pledge. Mrs. Lucy A. Snow sends $25 as a first installment on a hundred dollar pledge from Windham Centre union, Me. The Terre Haute, Ill., W. C. T. U. pledges $100, and sends a first installment of $25. The Beatrice, Neb., W. C. T. U. sends a similar pledge, and $15.62 as a first installment, to place the name of Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock on their state tablet.

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

A Fellow's Mother.

"A FELLOW'S mother," said Fred, the wise,
With his rosy cheeks and his merry blue eyes,
"Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump, or a bruise, or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has bags and strings,
Rags and buttons, and lots of things;
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

She does not care—not much, I mean—
If a fellow's face is not quite clean;
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put in a patch that you'd never see.

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
And only sorry if you're bad;
And I'll tell you this, if you're only true,
She'll always forgive you, whate'er you do.

"I'm sure of this," said Fred, the wise,
With a manly look in his laughing eyes,
"I'll mind my mother every day;
A fellow's a baby that won't obey."

Who Loved Mamma!

THE sun had gone down, and it was dark in the sitting-room. Great flakes of snow were flying through the air outside. The wind whistled and blew through key-holes and under door-sills.

Mamma sat in a big Boston rocker in front of a blazing grate fire, surrounded by her little family—Willie, the youngest, on her lap, Janet on one arm of the chair and Jack on the other, both with their heads leaning on mamma's shoulders, while Sam, the eldest boy, sat on a stool at her feet with his back close up against her.

"I love you, mamma," said Janet.

"So do I." "So do I." "So do I," chimed in the three other voices.

"I love you more than anybody else can love you," said Sam, because I'm the oldest. I loved you the longest."

"I love you the most, because I'm the only girl," said Janet.

"I love you so much I wish a big bear would come after you and I'd shoot him," said Jack.

"I love you more than I can tell you," said Willie, putting his arms around his mother's neck and kissing her again and again.

Then all the children kissed her at once, and poor mamma was almost suffocated with their embraces.

"Do you love me, children?" she asked. "Do you really know what love is?"

"Why, love is love—something you feel inside of you that makes you want to do something for somebody."

"Yes, love is doing something—not your own pleasure, but doing something for some one else, perhaps something hard and unpleasant."

Just then the postman whistled at the door, and the children ran to see what he had brought.

"It's a letter for me," said mamma, as she opened it, "and I must write an answer at once, so it will go in this evening's mail. Who'll take a letter to the lamp-post for me?"

Sam looked out of the window. How the snow blew around! His rubber boots were away upstairs. Oh, dear, he had five hard examples to do. Why couldn't that letter wait until morning! He'd take it on his way to school.

Jack looked out of the window, too. Ugh! how dark it was! He didn't like being out in the dark alone. It made him scary. Suppose there should be bears somewhere about the street corners! In the stories he had read, when they came, it was always in a snowstorm.

Janet thought: "Why, certainly mamma doesn't mean me to go as long as Sam and Jack are in the house. I've got my slippers on. I hate going out in the cold."

So when mamma had finished writing the reply to her letter and looked up, she found Sam busy with his slate and pencil, Jack with one of his games, and Janet knitting away very industriously on a hood for her doll. Only Willie stood before her with his big boots on, and his overcoat turned up about his ears.

"I'm all ready, mamma," he said.

"But, Willie, aren't you afraid to go alone?" she asked. "It's getting dark, and it's cold out of doors."

"I love you, mamma," he answered. "I'll run fast, and I don't believe anything will hurt me."

"Yes, you may," said mamma.

"Don't get lost in the snowdrift, little man. I'll watch you from the window. I know who loves me truly to-night," she added, with a sorry smile. "Love does not think of itself, and love conquers even fear, doesn't it, Willie?"—New York Observer.

Pass it on.

ONCE when I was a school boy, going home for the holidays, I had a long way to go to reach the far-away little town in which I dwelt. I arrived at Bristol, and got on board the steamer with just enough money to pay my fare; and, that being settled, I thought in my innocence I had paid for everything in the way of meals. I had what I wanted as long as we were in smooth water. Then came the rough Atlantic, and the need of nothing more. I had been lying in my berth for hours, wretchedly ill, and past caring for anything, when there came the steward, and stood beside me.

"Your bill, sir," said he, holding out a piece of paper.

"I have no money," said I, in my wretchedness.

"Then I shall keep your luggage. What is your name and address?" I told him. Instantly he took off the cap he wore, with the gilt band about it, and held out his hand. "I should like to shake hands with you," he said.

I gave him my hand, and shook his as well as I could. Then came the explanation—how that some years before some little kindness had been shown his mother by my father in the sorrow of her widowhood.

"I never thought the chance would come for me to repay it," said he pleasantly; "but I am glad it has."

"So am I," said I.

As soon as I got ashore, I told my father what had happened. "Ah," said he, "see how a bit of kindness lives! Now he has passed it on to you. Remember, if you meet anybody that needs a friendly hand, you must pass it on to them."

Years had gone by. I had grown up and quite forgotten it all, until one day I had gone to the station of one of our main lines. I was just going to take my ticket, when I saw a little lad crying, a thorough gentleman he was, trying to keep back the troublesome tears as he pleaded with the booking clerk.

"What is the matter, my lad?" I asked.

"If you please, sir, I haven't money enough to pay my fare. I have all but a few pence, and I tell the clerk if he will trust me, I will be sure to pay him."

Instantly it flashed upon me, the forgotten story of long ago. Here, then, was my chance to pass it on. I gave him the sum needed, and then got into the carriage with him. Then I told the little fellow the story of long ago and of the steward's kindness to me. "Now, to-day," I said, "I pass it on to you, and remember, if you meet with any one who needs a kindly hand, you must pass it on to them."

"I will, sir, I will," cried the lad, as he took my hand, and his eyes flashed with earnestness.

"I am sure you will," I answered.

I reached my destination, and left my little friend. The last sign I had of him was the handkerchief fluttering from the window of the carriage, as if to say: "It is all right, sir, I will pass it on."—Home and School Visitor.

A LITTLE girl was sent out with some crumbs for the chickens, and when she came in she asked her mamma if she knew "how old the gate to the chicken yard is?"

"No," said mamma.

"I do," was the pleased reply. "It's just four years old, for it's just as high as I am!"

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—When I came to the making up of our Cozy Corner "honor roll" this week, that is, the names of those who have sent correct answers to the last puzzle, I found one from Plainville, without the name of either person or state. It made me wonder if my boys and girls understand the importance of a name, especially when attached as a signature! It represents your individuality, and you become responsible for the statements contained in any document to which you sign your name. One of the lessons of life, which you can not learn too early, is never to sign a paper until you thoroughly understand it; another is, that as you grow to be men and women your names will carry more or less weight in the world according to the value you have put upon them. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," and if you sign yours now to the L. T. L. pledge and continue to make it stand for all that is right and good and true, it may mean as much to the world some day as does that of Neal Dow or Frances Willard. "Remember your name" is of as much importance to you as our present battle-cry, "Remember the Maine." The one represents the honor of a nation; the other, the honor of the individual, and our country would not stand as a nation of heroes were it not for the individual courage and honor of its manhood.

Lovingly yours, AUNT MARY.

Antiquated Reference Books.

NEXT to text-books in hand, reference books are of the greatest importance to pupils. To the mature student, and in some ways to the immature, they are first in importance. They are called "authorities" and their articles are generally written by specialists, each in his own field. In some cases the age of an article makes but slight difference, as a "greater than Joseph" may not have arisen in all Egypt or any other country since it was written. But while this is true in a limited way of what may be called the dead records, it can in no sense be true of the living sciences. When the world makes history by electricity and wins battles without the loss of a man and the genius of invention revolutionizes implements and instruments almost every twenty-four hours, one would show himself quite antiquated if he quoted the modes of travel and operation of fifty years ago. He might as well expatiate on the destructive power of the tallow candle, or the great advantage of raising gourds to make dippers thereof. We would expect such an one to come, in time, if he were philosophically inclined, to the mighty discussion of "how many angels could stand on the point of a fine cambric needle," or how "to make sunshine out of cucumbers."

Our minds have been carried back lately to the Dark Ages and the "Schoolmen" by a certain cyclopædia we have been consulting. It is a standard in many schools. Even great wide-awake Chicago has bought 150 sets for its public schools since 1885, at a cost of some $7,000, and continues to buy. Many instances of the antiquity of its information might be given, such as watch winding with a key, description of windmills of a kind no longer used, wagons whose "fore wheels are occasionally smaller than the hind ones," the mountains of Venus twenty miles high, some things spoken of as "imminent," which came to pass as far back as 1866; and for biography William Dwight Whitney, LL.D., is spoken of as "now the foremost of American philologists and grammarians," when he died in 1894; and no book of his published within a score of years is mentioned or that he was the editor-in-chief of the Century dictionary.

But we were most interested to see what it said along the line of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics. A child will not suffer so much because he may not have all the knowledge there is of a subject as from incorrect statements. Now that we have excellent text-books which include the latest scientific facts in regard to harmful drinks and habits, in the hands of our pupils in the public schools and students in the colleges, it certainly is essential that their reference books be up-to-date also. We can imagine inquiring minds, pupils and teachers, too, it may be, all of a muddle, to say the least, over such statements as are in this antiquated Cyclopædia, edition of 1898 (?) Under "Dietetic and Medical Value of Wines," may be found the following, the italics being our own:

It may be laid down as a general rule that the use of wine, even in moderate quantity, is not necessary for young or adult persons enjoying good ordinary health, breathing fresh, country air, and not exposed to overwork, or any other abnormal, depressing agency. As, however, life advances, and the circulation becomes languid, wine in moderation becomes an essential, or at all events a valuable article of food; and even in earlier life the physician meets large numbers of townspeople, especially women, engaged in sedentary occupations, who cannot digest the national drink, beer, which is admirably suited to our outdoor laboring population, and to persons of higher rank who indulge freely in open-air exercise. . . . . . .

The best of the cheap wines are those of Bordeaux; they are pure, light and exhilarating, moderately strong, seldom containing twenty per cent of alcohol; free from sugar and other materials likely to induce gout or headache; and are admirably adapted, according to Dr. Druitt (who has experimented largely upon them), for children with capricious and bad appetites, for literary persons, and for all whose occupations are chiefly carried on indoors, and which tax the brain more than the muscle.

The article is thirty-five or forty years old, since it appears in the Library of Universal Knowledge, published in 1880, which was mainly a reprint of Chambers Encyclopædia of the edition of 1858 to 1862. Indeed, the larger part of the work is a reprint of the last named.

In view of the striking and rapid advancement of science along the line of the nature and effects of narcotics the last quarter of a century, this setting forth is the behindhandest thing we have seen lately.

But we must not underrate the enterprise of the work, for we find on the next page that "British brandy," as it is in the two ancestors of this particular cyclopædia, is changed to read "native brandy," thus raising (?) America to equal rank in this respect with Great Britain.

In another place, beer is spoken of in this wise: "Adulteration of beer is less common than is generally supposed, and when practiced, usually results in the production of beer that is inferior in quality, though not injurious to the health." Of porter, this is said: "Being a hearty, nourishing liquor, it was very suitable for porters and other working people." And of tobacco: "Of nearly every luxury, it [smoking] is the least injurious. It is in no sense worse than tea."

It is needless to proceed further. We do not like to dwell too long among the tombs. May we not have another committee of one hundred to ask the bookmen to bury their dead and give us something that does not "smell to heaven"? Women have been accused in times past of making "covers for covers" and "covers for covers of covers," and now the men have been caught making reprints of reprints and reprints of reprints of reprints, which, unlike the covers, will not wear out so long as there is money in them. The women who are interested in school suffrage and in "the best books" would do well to investigate the reference books of the schools and see what kind of "stories" they are telling the youth of our country; and the Chicago school board and others might find recreation and cause for surprise by reading some of the semi-centennial old, scientific articles of their reference books, but no child can stand fifteen or one hundred volumes of such intellectual pabulum and thrive.

Comfort Bags and Pajamas to the Front.

PAJAMAS are loose, bifurcated garments, covering the whole body, used for chamber wear, so say the dictionaries; and the surgeons say they are fine things to send to the army boys. Uncle Sam has not got his housekeeping well ordered as yet, because he is "only a man," we suppose, and the result is, that the boys need almost everything. A surgeon writes us: "If the good people would only send direct to the surgeons whom they know and in whom they have confidence, sheets, pillow cases, gowns or pajamas, towels, old cloths for bath purposes, canned fruits, jellies, oranges, lemons, malted milk, canned soups, and the most needed of all, money, with which to buy ice and perishable necessities, they would render aid of the most practical kind." These things must be prepaid, but transportation can be obtained free, perhaps, in every case.

It is too bad that our sick boys have to suffer for necessities. Churches, unions and other societies ought, as far as possible, to meet these pressing needs (especially in their own state camps), which will not be so great later on, we hope. Unions near camps can do magnificent work by receiving and distributing such things. THE UNION SIGNAL, and, no doubt, the state W. C. T. U. organs, would be glad to publish the names of such unions. There is another thing we would be equally glad to publish, and that is, the names and official titles of the colonels and surgeons who have not allowed the canteen to be set up for their regiments. They are the men who are paying for hospital supplies out of their own pockets, and they are the men that ought to be helped first. Maj. W. L. Brown, Twenty-first Kansas Regiment, Camp Thomas, Chickamauga Park, Ga., sent home this dispatch:

Nearly all the regiments around us have established what is known as "canteens," where beer and whisky are sold and the profit goes for extras for the regiment. When the question came up as to what we would do, it was unanimously decided by the office's that no liquor should be sold in our camp. So you see the boys are loyal to the laws of our beloved state.

No doubt the regiment was proud to receive the following telegram from the Kansas State Temperance Union, signed by J. W. Gleed, presipent, and F. E. Stevens, secretary:

We congratulate you most heartily on this manly stand, and in this, by special request of that organization, we are joined by the W. C. T. U of this city. We have been proud all along of the Twenty-first Kansas regiment; we are prouder now than ever. We have the fullest confidence that you will nobly maintain this stand, and maintaining it you will surely never have any cause for regret. Well would it be for the armies of the United States if all their regiments would adopt the same rules and live up thereto. Again we congratulate you. May God bless the Kansas boys.

Major F. C. Armstrong is surgeon of the Twenty-first Kansas, and is keeping hospital home on faith and his own pocketbook. The Second Illinois has a temperance canteen. The Chattanooga union, Mrs. S. P. Lowe, corresponding secretary, has established a soldiers' rest near one of the depots, and will receive comfort bags, literature and delicacies and distribute to the boys, address her at 120 E. Seventh street, Chattanooga, Tenn., Mrs. Thacher's official in this issue, as well as the one May 12, would better be consulted by those who have something to send.

Water, Water, Water!

"WATER holes, mud holes, creek bottoms, any and every place, that looks like it would yield a few drops, is dug into, and the precious fluid carried away. After the exhausting drill, the men, too tired to hunt water, go to the canteens and drink beer." So writes a correspondent from Chickamauga.

Another from the same place says in the Commercial Tribune of Cincinnati, O.:

"We suffer terribly for water here, and a good drink out of the canal would be a luxury at present. We don't wash unless we walk two miles to the river, or creek, rather."

It has been hinted by those whom, we believe, know more than they would like to tell, that the scarcity of water could be relieved were it not for the enormous sale of beer that the scarcity induces, and that, after the boys are out of money, they will probably get water. Practically the same complaints have come from some other camps. It would be well for the people who know how, to institute a court of inquiry higher even than that of court martial, viz., the inquiry of citizens and parents as to whether army officials are in cahoot with beer officials. Some of them are, of course, to a certain extent, but are they not only making money for medical supplies, but at the same time making money for Mr. Colonel or Mr. Surgeon?

We really want to know, and if we furnish the money and the boys, we have a right to know. We would recommend that some of those whom the liquor fraternity hates and fears should turn on the searchlights, and if there is a connivance or complicity which affects the supply of water, let the world know it.

A Word to Mrs. Stevens.

A PARAGRAPH with the above caption, in the Christian Endeavor World, has so much of brotherly kindness and encouragement in it that we give it entire, and thank the writer for his words:

Doubtless the woman who, by virtue of her office and of Miss Willard's desire, is taking up in this country the task laid down by those untiring hands, does so with many shrinking fears, yet sustained by the same God that sustained the departed leader. Now, let all friends of temperance, within or outside of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, reassure her with expressions of hope and courage. It is, indeed, a long, hard war, and many a general must fall upon the field before it is won, but won it will be. "The saloon must go!" has been our slogan long enough. Let us change it for the confident faith, "The saloon will go!" and that speedily. To believe otherwise is to think that Christians are forever going to resign to the devil's minions the glory of unanimous action. It is to believe that always motives of worldly policy and tremors of unmanly cowardice are going to silence Christian tongues and weaken Christian hands. Not to be a radical on the temperance question is to be the veriest mossback; not to be an optimist here is to be a pessimist regarding the kingdom of heaven. Long before another head of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has gone to meet its great first president we hope for stupendous news that she may carry, news that will ring exultantly through the celestial arches, tidings that the last saloon has been driven from the land. May we all be able to join, not shamefacedly, but as victorious fighters, in that glad hosanna!

Marion Harland Surprised.

WRITING on Easter Sabbath, Mary Virginia Terhune (Marion Harland) spoke of two marked characteristics of Miss Willard—her ability to find a common ground of agreement between herself and everybody else and her faith in humanity. These are beautifully and strongly brought out in the following:

I shall never lose the memory of my delighted surprise at finding Miss Willard utterly unlike my preconceived ideal of the typical reformer. Her gentle ladyhood, her Christian tolerance of judgment and speech, the genial smile that came from her heart and at once won mine—all went into the making of the indefinable, subtle something we blindly name "personal magnetism." In opinion I often differed from her; in written and in spoken word, we never disagreed.

We had one long talk upon a subject concerning which I believed our views were in direct opposition, the one from the other. I began the conversation by reminding her that we would act wisely in keeping away from this reef. Her reply was characteristic: "Not if we are both bent upon finding out upon how many points we agree." After a temperate discussion of over an hour, we clasped hands upon a compact of friendship that was never broken.

Her faith in humanity and her love for every human creature God had made were natural and cultivated gifts that detected gold in every character. She brought out all that was best in her associates, and had that rarest of social gifts—that of making one know his own capacity of doing and of being good.

The news of her untimely death has come to me as a personal sorrow. Yet, in the twilight of this Easter Sunday, I can see and know that the transition is all blessedness for her. It is easy and natural to think of her as now, and forever and gloriously "at home."

A Teetotal Army.

ANNA P. WHITE, of the American Mission, Monsurah, Egypt, sends us a clipping from The Egyptian Gazette, the only English Egyptian daily published in that country. Miss White states that those who have interested themselves in temperance work among the soldiers in Egypt are happy to see this testimony.

The article is headed "A Teetotal Army," and is a communication from the Soudan, referring to events since eclipsed at the battle of the Atbara, but supplies interesting details as to the good effects of total abstinence among the troops on the march.

The writer describes the forced marches of the army previous to the battle of Atbara, from Aboo Dis to Berber without the use of intoxicating liquors; hot tea, cocoa and milk being their drink. Each man carried equipments weighing sixty-four pounds, and marched over stone and granite undulations in the Nile valley, under oppressive heat, halting for rest only a few hours in the middle of the day and of the night. The army accomplished "one hundred miles in one hundred hours on tea, bully beef and biscuits." The writer says:

Though I am by no means a rabid teetotaler, still it is very satisfactory to notice the staying powers of the troops, and the absence of all sickness, which I attribute wholly to their excellent training and their present beverage, and I can safely say without fear of contradiction that for endurance, hardiness and general physical excellence you will not find a better body of men than this tea-drinking British brigade in the Soudan.

Red Tape.

A CERTAIN amount of red tape is necessary in war as well as peace. But just now the man with a good jack-knife, and liberty to use it, would be welcomed in more than one soldier's camp. In some of them the medical purveyor's storehouse is full of just the articles needed for the sick boys, and yet, not a man with authority sufficient to open it can be found. This is the case just at present, at Camp George H. Thomas, Chickamauga. Eight regiments left there lately without any medical necessities at all, although the storehouse was crammed with such things. Those that remained behind are no better off. If they get anything it is via the canteen. One of the New York regiment's saloons cleared $250 last Sunday week. Is the purveyor's storehouse kept locked that the saloons may thrive? Is there a co-partnership between head saloon men and head army men? Will somebody please come forward and tell us ignorant mothers at home?

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Parrish says in a private letter: "Since I wrote you last I have traveled several hundred miles, and have been, among other places, to the city of Kanazawa, on the western coast, where our dear Miss West died. The inclosed is a rose leaf plucked from a bush growing just underneath the window of the room where she died. It is beautiful to see how tenderly the people remember her, and although she did no work there, I found the place ready for organization, and now they have a W. C. T. U., a Y in the college, and an L. T. L., besides a large men's temperance society."

In a timely address on the "Relation of Temperance to Missions," by Mrs. H. O. Hilderbrand (who, by the way, is a daughter of Rev. Joel Swartz), many striking things are said, and among others "The greatest obstacle to the progress of mission work to-day is the liquor exported from Christian lands." And this: "The cause of temperance and missions is one. It can not be said that missionary work is one thing, and temperance work another. They are only two aspects of the same cause, and the attempt to divide them is to weaken, if not fatally to cripple, the strength of both."

Among the many beautiful tributes and expressions of sympathy which have been received by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in its great bereavement, there has been none more beautiful than the resolutions sent by Sorosis, the leading woman's club of the country. Miss Willard was an honorary member of Sorosis, and this fact is touchingly mentioned in the resolutions themselves which are exquisitely engrossed upon vellum, bound in portfolio form in handsome seal leather, lined with purple satin. This expression of sympathy and the resolutions will form an honored addition to our constantly growing archives.

On Tuesday, May 31, Headquarters was privileged to entertain, for a short time, Miss Spencer, of Pennsylvania, who has been spending the last eight months in Japan, and who knew intimately, during the greater part of that time, our beloved Clara Parrish. She paid a glowing tribute to the work Miss Parrish has done in Japan, and says that she has the confidence and love of both foreign citizens and natives, and all acknowledge her to be the right woman for this exceedingly delicate and difficult field. On the same day, Miss Blount, who has been for years a missionary in Japan, called and bore witness to the same facts. Miss Spencer thought that Miss Parrish was in great danger of becoming overworked, and this fact should be held in mind by those at home, who, while they may manifest their love by frequent letters, should not expect as frequent replies.

Miss E. W. Greenwood, World's evangelistic superintendent, gave a lecture and Bible exposition at Clinton county convention, New York, June 2 and 3. Sunday evening, June 5, before an audience made up of all the congregations, she spoke upon "Our National Crises." The Plattsburg Press says of this lecture: "An able and intensely interesting address which held the closest attention of the audience for forty minutes was delivered by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, World's and National W. C. T. U. evangelist. Miss Greenwood is one of the most able and eloquent advocates of the temperance cause who has ever appeared before a Plattsburg audience." Miss Greenwood was the guest of Mrs. Francis B. Hall, who has been president of Clinton county from the beginning. Her husband, Rev. Francis B. Hall, of Plattsburg, one of our true brothers, participated in the services. He is one of the few chaplains who has received a medal of honor from the United States government. It reads: "To Rev. Francis B. Hall, of Plattsburg, N. Y., late chaplain of Sixteenth regiment, for distinguished gallantry at the battle of Salem Heights, Va., May 3, 1863.

From a British Y.

DEAR AMERICAN SISTERS OF THE Y:—I have intended sending a letter of loving greeting to you ever since my return from your beautiful country, but just as I was going to write it the news came which for the time almost paralyzed all white-ribboners. While we grieve beyond words to express for our lovely and beloved leader, yet it is a comforting thought that her followers all the world over are drawn closer together by their terrible loss, and we know that her spirit is ever with us, helping and inspiring. We young women may surely claim the privilege of helping forward in blessed comradeship the grand work for which she gave her beautiful life, for did she not ever tell us our "coming footsteps" were among the sweetest sounds she heard!

As our annual B. W. T. A. Council drew near, I thought I would wait and give you news of our Y doings at that time, feeling sure that they would be interesting to you, as yours were to us last year at your great Convention in Buffalo. The Y work in England is steadily increasing, to our great joy, and each year we feel more truly assured that interest is deepening and spreading in our ranks. We have several special interests given to us by the W's, one being the department of girls' clubs, which was handed over to our care last year. In connection with it we arranged a Y conference a few days before the council began, at which Viscountess Morpeth presided, and an address was given by Miss Neal, our superintendent of the department, which was followed by interesting discussion.

Another of our special "cares" is the "Birds' Nest," the charming cottage on the grounds of the Duxhurst Farm Colony, where all through the summer months Sister Kathleen entertains batches of the poorest slum children from London. On Monday, May 9, all the Y delegates to the council went down to the "Nest," by invitation of Mrs. Russell, our honorable general secretary, and Sister Kathleen, and we had a delightful time wandering around. After tea an informal conference was held, and when we drove away we all felt that the visit had done much to fasten the claims of the children more securely on all Y's.

Our Y annual public meeting on Tuesday evening, May 10, was considered by all to be eminently successful. St. Martin's town hall was quite full, the platform was decorated with evergreens, marguerite daisies, and white ribbons, a large Y of daisies and moss being placed in front of the chairman's table. The Hon. Mrs. Russell took the chair, and at the opening of the meeting I had the pleasure to present her with a lovely "posy" on behalf of her comrades who work with her on the Central Representative Y committee. A group of children, under Sister Dora, from "The Children's Home" for waifs and strays, gave us a delightful little entertainment, music was rendered by the Y Mandolin and Guitar Quintet from Tulse Hill. As soon as Lady Henry, in a dainty toilet of black and white, came to the platform the Y's rose en masse, and an exquisite basket of white and yellow flowers trimmed with ribbons to match was brought forward and presented to her by Mrs. Russell, who, in a charming little speech, told her that the Y's dearly loved her and "could not do without her." Lady Henry's beautiful speech to us closed the meeting, our greatest satisfaction concerning which being that no one but Y's had taken part in it (except the invited children) Lady Henry always being counted as "one of us!"

The representative Y committee, which holds its meetings at headquarters in London monthly, is felt to be a great help in centralizing and giving backbone to our work throughout the country. At the end of the first meeting of the new committee for this year, held last week, dear Anna Gordon, who had been a warmly welcomed guest, remarked to me that "certainly the Y's over here are on the crest of the wave"; and we all hope and believe it to be true.

You will be interested to hear that we in England have undertaken the choice and purchase (with help from all our Y comrades everywhere) of the World's Y banner; also that we are printing in pamphlet form a long letter received from Miss Clara Parrish, and are hoping to stir much interest in our Y round-the-world missionary during this year.

We love our work and are full of plans, large and small, for its development, and so we hope, in common with you and our dear Y sisters in different parts of the world, to help decorate all the best and brightest of girls everywhere with the white ribbon, now become so doubly precious to us.

With loving loyalty to your Y leaders, and to you my dear Y sisters of that grand America which was the native land of the grandest woman that ever lived,

I am ever sincerely yours,
AMY A. SWANKIE-CAMERON.

Rhode Island Y's.

SINCE I last wrote we have been up and doing. Our Providence Y had Anthony Hope give an evening of readings from his popular stories. The reception tendered him in the afternoon was a social success, and a very large audience greeted him at the hall in the evening. Mrs. S. S. Fessenden and Mrs. Barney have given grand addresses, and some efforts for the Temple have resulted in an offering of $100 for our "House Beautiful." Preparations are being made to open "Rest Cottage" at the seashore on a better scale than ever before. These and other Y's in the state have had memorial services for Miss Willard, and all have been deeply interested in the life and death of that "glory-crowned" woman. It is hoped that we shall soon have a home for working girls in Providence, as a result of the successful years with our Y tea room. There is already a "nest egg" laid away for that purpose, and we hope there will be much more added to the sum which will help us to begin to put foundations under our air castles.

Woonsocket Y's are very much interested in all lines of work, both state and National. They held a most successful entertainment, from the proceeds of which they have sent funds for Clara Parrish and for the Temple. Some of our Y unions are doing good work by sending temperance speakers to the Christian Endeavor Societies, and many of the members have signed the pledge, while all are interested in the temperance cause as they have not been before. Our Y's are enjoying Mrs. Barney's presence among us, and she has enlarged our vision and helped us to see the needs of work in other countries, and given us a desire to help. The gospel meetings at "The Beacon" Mission, under the auspices of the Newport Y's, are progressing, and blessed results are reported in the comforting of souls, while our East Providence Y has helped the poor, given funds for the Temperance Hospital and had successful social and parlor meetings; at one of these a delegate from the World's Convention gave a glowing report.

Our state is small, many of our young women are doing good work in the W unions, but we are proud and thankful to have three Y's for state superintendents. May their shadows never grow less!

ELIZABETH P. NICHOLS,
State Y Secretary, Providence.

WILLARD MEMORIAL SERVICE.

THE Brisbane memorial service for Frances Willard was held in the beautiful Wesleyan church. Floral tokens of love had been sent from all unions, friends, and the Ipswich and the Warwick districts. In the center a large portrait of our beloved leader was adorned with palms of victory, a laurel wreath and the stars and stripes; beneath were her initials in white flowers, sent by Mrs. Brentnall, and "Promoted," in heliotrope on white, framed by white lilies and laurel leaves. The railing was twined with palms and white lilies. The choir gallery was hung with the American flag and the lovely Willard presentation banner won by Queensland, the Colonial banner and the Queensland flag. Mrs. Carvosso gave silver memorial cards as a momento. The floral designs were very beautiful. Mrs. Payne, in speaking, referred to Miss Willard's love of flowers, and to the "sheaf of wheat fully ripe," sent from Killarney, as emblematic of her work, ripe for God's garden.

The service was entirely different from the ordinary idea of black and funeral drapings, for though we mourn the loss of our wise leader, and feel the way will be harder to all white-ribboners in every land, we thank God for her sanctified heart and consecrated life, and pray for greater zeal to follow in her footsteps.

Alderman J. N. Thorne, mayor of Brisbane, was chairman, and gave as a keynote, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, they rest from their labors," with the application, "Am I doing my duty and serving my Master as Miss Willard did?"

Brief addresses on Miss Willard's life and work was given by Rev. Charles Stead, Mrs. Williams, N. T. Reed, of the Temperance Alliance, Rev. Joseph Walker, who represented the Christian Endeavorers of Queensland, and Mrs. Payne, Ipswich, president. Letters of sympathy were read from Rev. John Kingsford, Rev. W. Poole, Revs. D. Frankleton, Hugh Jones and T. Leitch, Mrs. Brentnall, who was prevented from attending by sickness, and Miss Agnes Slack, World's secretary.

Prayers and hymns were sung. The memorial hymn, "Crossing the Bar," and "Only Remembered," and none present could fail to be inspired by the wonderful life of her who saw "the good in everything save sin."

The Bundaberg memorial service was held in the Presbyterian church, the chaste decorations being in greenery, white flowers and streamers. Chair was taken by the pastor who spoke feelingly of her in whose sacred memory the meeting was held.

"We Follow that Way" was recited, suitable music sung, and speeches given by ministers and friends.

The Rockhampton memorial service was held in the Baptist church, arranged with white drapery, ribbon and flowers. Miss Willard's portrait wreathed with white flowers. The memorial hymn, and other music, added to the impressive scene. Helpful and cheering words were spoken to those who strive to follow their illustrious leader.

Memorial sermons were preached throughout the colony, and Queensland white-ribboners, while grieving the loss of such a leader, are striving to live worthy of one who stood so high.

World's Wave Crests.

WE have printed some collecting cards and we shall be most grateful and encouraged if friends from all parts of the world will write me for some and collect subscriptions of from two shillings or fifty cents a year and upwards for our World's missionary work; all these subscriptions will be separately entered in our World's report.

WE are glad to report that the Norwegian National W. C. T. U., which is by far our strongest organization on the continent, is now making great advances in the interests of the World's W. C. T. U. It is all the more pleasing to us as I regret to report the resignations of the five leading members of the Swedish W. C. T. U., the Hague W. C. T. U. and the Danish W. C. T. U. with Madam Selmer.

THE following resolution was adopted with much enthusiasm by the B. W. T. A. Council on May 12:

"Resolved, That the National Council of the B. W. T. A. mourns with heartfelt sorrow the overwhelming loss of the leader in the World's W. C. T. U. The council realizes that the loss is irreparable; such gifts as Frances Willard brought to the cause we love are only to saints who have from time to time been vouchsafed to the world. We pray that strength may be given the acting president of the U. S. A. National W. C. T. U. (Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens), whom we greet with sisterly love, and to the officers of the National W. C. T. U. of the U. S. A."

Affectionately your comrade,
AGNES E. SLACK.

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Illinois.

ONLY flitting glances can be obtained of our state president at headquarters, as her time is being entirely spent in the field. From reports constantly coming in concerning her work, we are sure Illinois will be the gainer.

A series of county conventions and parents' institutes in eight of the counties of the nineteenth district has just closed. Mrs. Jessie B. Hilton conducted the institutes, and gave a lecture at each place. The meetings were all well attended, and there were no failures on any of the programs, which is saying a good deal for half a dozen or more conventions. Contests were interesting features of most of the meetings, and at Olney the Loyal Temperance Legion gave a fine entertainment. New county presidents were elected for all the counties except Edgar and Lawrence. Mrs. Emma Flocken is the wide-awake president of the nineteenth district, and to her earnest effort is due much of the success of the meetings.

Mrs. Matilda E. Kline, the faithful secretary of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., has resigned her position to accept the more prominent one of treasurer of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the West, with headquarters in the Masonic Temple, Chicago. Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton will take Mrs. Kline's place as secretary, and will also have charge of the Willard Hall noon meetings.

Peoria county held a pleasant convention in Dunlap. Mrs. Ella S. Stewart gave the convention address on "Christian Citizenship," which was considered the cream of the program. The old officers were re-elected, the president and secretary being presented with handsomely bound copies of the "Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," in appreciation of their long and faithful service to the county.

A W. C. T. U. institute held at Tuscola, by the counties of Champaign and Douglas, was both pleasant and profitable, much instruction being given by those presenting different topics. Two National superintendents, Miss Helen L. Hood and Mrs. Winnie F. English were present, and spoke in the interest of their departments. Mrs. English gave a parliamentary drill, and Miss Hood gave an evening address on comparative W. C. T. U. work in Europe and America. A matrons' contest occupied the other evening, Mrs. E. P. Moore, of Hayes, winning the prize. Mrs. Mary H. Kuhl, of Champaign, presided. Many more of these institutes will be held during the summer.

The president of the first district, Mrs. Elsie Waddell, accompanied by six ladies for assistants, went to La Grange, where a new union had recently been organized, and gave them a fine program including parliamentary drill and instruction along the important lines of work.

The Gad's Hill Social Settlement at West 22d and Robey streets, Chicago, is the outcome of earnest work which has been done in that part of the city. The boys' club is known as the "Gad's Hill Temperance Club," and has a large membership of boys under fourteen years. The Gad's Hill guards of honor is made up of boys over fourteen. The girls' club is the "Willing Workers." Among other things they are taught plain and economical cookery; a diploma will be issued to each completing the course. To Mrs. E. P. Martin is due much of the credit for this great undertaking, as she seems to be the guiding spirit, and hers the faith and zeal that is carrying it on to a successful issue.

The National superintendent of medal contest work being in our state may be the reason that Illinois is holding so many and such successful contests. The financial results from these entertainments are the first to be seen and appreciated, though this by no means touches the scope of the work. A few figures will give the money making value of the contest. Catlin held a gold medal contest, receipts being $70; Verona cleared $25; Ipava cleared $11.36, and the Epworth League at Paw Paw cleared $50.

The West Side, Chicago, union has issued a program for distribution, giving topics and leaders for each week's meeting, from February 3 to August 25. Looking over the contents of the neat little folder, one is let into the secret of why the West Side union stands at the head of the Chicago organizations in nearly every particular.

FAIRFIELD county W. C. T. U. held its annual convention at Bethel, May 6. Sixty-nine delegates were in attendance. Reports gave evidence of excellent work. Temple enthusiasm ran high.

Mrs. Boole gave the Bible reading and the annual address in the evening, and also addressed a large children's meeting. The editor of the Banner was also present, and rendered excellent service. Former officers were re-elected.

The county banner was awarded to New Fairfield for a membership nearly trebled in six months. Loyal Legion and Senior grade banners were awarded respectively to Greenwich, Company G, and Bridgeport, Company R. Good music was rendered by a volunteer choir.

Three neighborhood conferences on consecutive days were held in different sections of New London county. The subject for discussion at each was, "Our Work, and How to Help It." This was divided and subdivided as follows:

1. How can we best help the work? (a) Individually. (b) Financially. (c) As a union.

2. What to do for the local meetings. (a) Business meetings. (b) Gospel temperance meetings. (c) Parlor meetings. (d) Public lectures and entertainments.

3. How can we further and make permanent the Y work?

4. Our relations to other temperance and reform societies. (a) As individuals. (b) As organizations.

Each subdivision was the subject of a five-minute paper, followed by general discussion. A brief devotional service was held at the beginning of each meeting and before the close of each a few minutes were devoted to "Loving thoughts of our promoted leader."

The weather was unfavorable during the entire series, yet the attendance was good. The papers were bright, abounding in helpful hints and suggestions; the discussions were spirited and interesting and the enthusiasm was most encouraging.

New Haven No. 1 desires to thank, through THE UNION SIGNAL, the many who just before the recent election, sent letters expressing interest, as well as assuring the union of their prayers for the ultimate success of no-license. The no-license vote was slightly in excess of that of last year, and our people are so intensely in earnest that we are looking for success in the not far distant future.

I have received an interesting letter from the Winsted union, which owing to some oversight was unsigned. Will the writer please send me her name and address before July 1, so that I may include her letter in my next report?

EVELYN P. BURCH,
State Reporter, New London.

Arizona.

I AM glad to be able to give to UNION SIGNAL readers a report of our territorial convention from my own personal observation, having been present. Knowing the indifference and prejudice toward this work throughout these parts, and how those who are connected with this grand organization are often called cranks by others whom you might reasonably suppose would also be interested, I must confess to having had some doubts as to the standard of our representation and achievements; but I was most agreeably disappointed. Though the attendance outside of our ranks was very small, these same workers were indeed a "representative body of women," earnest, intelligent and business-like, and certainly having the objects of the unions very much upon their hearts. The excitement attendant upon the departure of the young men of Phœnix for the war, just at that time, was another factor in causing the convention to be lost sight of by outsiders. One other great cause of regret was, that unlike many other conventions reported in THE UNION SIGNAL, as honored by the presence and aid of the clergy, the ministers of Phœnix were conspicuous by their absence. But the counsel, help and presence of the Rev. Dr. Halsey, of the Baptist church, was enjoyed and appreciated by all, and made us thankful for the one who remembered us.

The tenth annual convention of Arizona met in Phœnix, April 28 and 29, with eleven delegates present and about twenty visiting members. The Baptist church in that city was kindly placed at our disposal, and the Phœnix union hospitably entertained the delegates and visitors. A substantial lunch Thursday and a toothsome dinner Friday was spread for all in the church parlor. Mrs. M. A. White, territorial president, presided over the convention, and carried the business through quickly and efficiently. Each meeting of the session opened with devotional exercises. Thursday was given to reception of delegates, appointment of committees and other routine work. Thursday evening to a small but thoroughly sympathetic audience was given the literary exercises. Some good music rendered by the young ladies was followed by a "summary of Miss Willard's life," ably and eloquently given by Mrs. A. B. Buckley. A eulogy upon our beloved leader was presented by Mrs. C. D. Reppy. Chaplain Scott then gave a most interesting and eloquent address upon the theme of "Power," classing the work of the W. C. T. U. as one of the strongest factors.

Friday morning's meeting brought in the reports from local unions, superintendents of departments, territorial officers and a parliamentary drill given by Mrs. J. L. Munds, of Prescott.

Some of the department reports were meager, but upon many lines the work reported was most satisfactory. Most especially that of miner's department, by the superintendent, Mrs. F. S. Williams, of Prescott, as she reported much literature distributed among the miners and many personal visits paid to the numerous mining camps in the vicinity of Prescott. A fine suggestion by Mrs. Williams was that each union should furnish the superintendent of this work with a list of names of miners from their own neighborhoods to whom literature could be sent.

Jail and prison work was also given in a good report from superintendent, Mrs. Battin, who has done some excellent work in Phœnix. Mrs. F. Curns' report on legislation, petition and enforcement of law was energetic and full of excellent thoughts and methods, which, if carried out this year, will do much good in our territory.

Mrs. Sturgis, of medal contests, told of three interesting entertainments of that kind during the year. Mrs. Kate Watrous, superintendent of purity and mothers' meetings, told of several good meetings held during the year, the seed sown for fruit and the expectation of seeing the harvest before many years.

Our territorial treasurer reported the amount of dues paid during the year as $44.50, and from the Y's, $4.75, with a membership of eighty-nine in the territory, and nineteen Y's.

The convention was brought to a close with the election of officers and a resolution adopted that the time of holding the annual convention be changed to October; also an invitation extended to meet in Prescott at the next convening. The election of officers resulted in the following: President, Mrs. A. B. Buckley, Phœnix; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. M. A. White, Tempe; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. Curns, Phœnix; recording secretary, Mrs. J. L. Munds, Prescott; treasurer, Mrs. F. M. Doan, Florence.

Statistics cannot describe the work done by our white-ribbon forces in this territory, and much of it will only be told when the harvest is gathered, but this convention gave us fresh courage and more enthusiasm, and we look forward to great results and much work to be done for the Master, and know that the needed help will be given in good time.

Oklahoma.

THIS letter will begin where the last one closed, as messages have been received of other memorials for the translated Chieftain. Pond Creek union, in charge of Mrs. R. E. Woodrow, territorial corresponding secretary, held an impressive and solemn service, participated in by all classes. Anadarko union, with a widely scattered constituency, rallied to do honor to the sainted one with a very large audience. A plea for the Temple on this occasion resulted in twenty-five dollars; a "sweet singer," Miss Burklolitz, rode fifty-five miles to be in attendance, and helped with her voice. The memorial at Kingfisher was beautiful. Territorial president, Mrs. Susie K. Jackson, and territorial corresponding secretary, Mrs. W.

E. Oliver, assisting them. Oklahoma City union held their services in connection with the South District convention, which convened in that city. The M. E. church was made beautiful by skillful hands with flowers and bunting. The first evening of the convention was given to Miss Willard, and many impressive lessons of her life were brought out by the speakers.

The South District convention was the largest ever held in its history. Sixteen delegates answered roll call, also five out of seven of the district executive were present; the reports of unions showed a healthy growth. An effort for the enforcement of congressional scientific temperance law was urged, and the law was embodied in the resolutions and published. Mrs. Nellie Sheplar was elected president. The convention closed with a gold medal contest, participated in by six girls from different parts of the district. Gertrude Smith, of Darlington, won first prize, and Bessie Keller, of the Neal Dow union, won the American Home Magazine. The convention presented each of the six contestants with a choice blooming plant.

The Pond Creek union has recently held its fourth silver medal contest. Misses Laura Garrison and Sylvia Crawford were the prize winners. This union, from entertainments, has donated seven dollars to the territorial treasury; their attractive programs frequently secure them new members. The Yukon union has had several contests.

A reform wave has swept over Guthrie, the W. C. T. U. and the ministers being its strength. Chief Justice Buford called a special grand jury, and issued to them rigid instructions to investigate the saloons and dives and indict every saloonkeeper violating the law, every person keeping a disorderly house or renting property for that purpose, and every professional gambler or keeper of gaming tables. Saloonkeepers who have screens or blinds, who sell on Sunday or after twelve at night, must be held amenable to the law, and it was the sworn duty of every juror to bring such indictments. Other cities are waiting to see the result of this order.

Okarchee union will entertain the annual couvention in September. Mrs. Helen L. Harford, National organizer, will be in our territory during the month of August.

California.

THE sad news of the loss of our beloved leader left a sense of bereavement nowhere deeper than in California. To so many she was a potent personality, "whom not having seen, they yet loved," and her coming in the next autumn was an expectancy to live for. The sorrow and hope of our people have been expressed in a very large number of memorial meetings throughout the state, not only by our unions, but in a great many churches under their own auspices.

The state union held memorial services in the First Baptist church of San Francisco. Mrs. Sturtevant Peet presided, and rendered a beautiful tribute to the character of Miss Willard, especially as a stateswoman. Jessie Ackermann, who had just arrived here, gave a eulogy worthy of the occasion. An offering was taken for the Temple.

At our spring board meeting reports from most counties were very gratifying. The reports of superintendents showed a general activity in department work.

The county conventions are now fast following each other. Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, the state president, is constantly in the field, going from one to another. She reports evidences of a deeper consecration throughout the unions. Amador, Butte, Tulare, Sonoma, San Joaquin, Sacramento, Placer, Santa Clara, Solano, Yolo and the Tri county, Santa Cruz, San Benito and Monterey have all held their annual conventions. Nearly all have re-elected their tried and true women to the general offices, while many new names appear among their superintendents. Many have increased their number of departments.

Alameda and San Francisco counties hold quarterly meetings, and each has just held one with good results.

The most notable meeting we have had was a Missionary Congress, on the occasion of Miss Ackermann's return. It was felt that the best demonstration would be one whose character should set forth a phase of our work not always fully appreciated, and bring forth the working forces from the various churches as well as the W. C. T. U., the intention being to inspire the friends of temperance with new zeal for missions, and the friends of missions with an undying love for the temperance cause, and prove the close affinity of all such labors.

Calvary Presbyterian church was bright with banners for the occasion. Mrs. Peet presided and kept to the time of the program, regardless of unexpected changes. The greetings of the Baptist Board of Missions were presented by Mrs. Carlson. Mrs. H. E. Jewett, represented the Congregationalists, Mrs. L. M. Carver the Methodists, and Mrs. M. H. Field the Presbyterians. Rev. M. C. Harris, D. D., spoke on the question, "What would the union of all Christian effort do for the World?" Rev. E. S. Chapman, D. D., on "What lines of home work will best promote work in foreign fields?" and Rev. Dr. A. B. Banks on "How to Strengthen our Forces?" Discussion by other speakers followed each one, and every one brought out clearly the idea that nothing else could do so much for the evangelization of the world as the abolition of the liquor traffic. Miss Ackermann gave a strong missionary address in the evening.

The Pacific coast Women's Press Association gave Miss Ackermann a reception in this city. She gave a lecture here as a benefit to the Red Cross Society, which proved one of the most profitable benefits they have had.

The boys in blue are arriving daily. The new ferry building where they land has been placed at the disposal of the Red Cross Society, and each regiment as it arrives marches in and is served with sandwiches, coffee and oranges. Then they march through the city to their camp-ground, where they are made as comfortable as circumstances permit. Fifteen thousand men are now in camp here. All San Francisco is doing its best for the "boys." Our women are taking them reading matter for the long sea voyage.

In some parts of the state the Anti-Saloon League is doing active work, leading to legislation next winter.

There is a good deal of quiet, persistent work for the Temple fund going on.

Active preparations are now in hand for the school of methods at Pacific Grove in July. That is an ideal place for it and the best time in the year. DORCAS J. SPENCER,
State Reporter, San Francisco.

Michigan.

THE twenty-fourth annual convention was at Saginaw, May 24–27, in the Congregational church. The decorations included a spray of roses for Mary T. Lathrap's picture, draped with the ribbon she sent us at Baltimore, with the lettering, "Michigan, my Michigan."

Four noted sayings of Miss Willard were lettered on white, with a green border, held to the wall by large bows of white ribbon, an object lesson all through to outsiders and an inspiration to workers. General officers, all of the twelve district presidents but one, a goodly number of superintendents and delegates were present.

Report of corresponding secretary, Mrs. Parish, showed activity on all lines and many new unions were reported. Treasurer's report by Mrs. Voorhees, showed balance in the treasury of over one thousand dollars.

Memorial service was the first afternoon, the leader, Mrs. C. H. Johnson. Eulogies on the promoted comrades, and the finished life of Frances Willard were pronounced by Mrs. Benjamin, Mrs. Kinney, Mrs. Parish, Mrs. Johnson, two National and two state officers. The subjects embraced were, her literary life, her helpfulness upon all lines of work, personal recollections of twenty years, the honors that came to her as a reform worker.

The new feature to vary monotony of reports was a county presidents' hour, led by a very efficient county president, Mrs. Densmore, upon this question: "If the county president cannot organize unoccupied places, what is her duty? and if no new unions are organized, is her work a success?" Discussion earnest and helpful followed, as it did also upon the ten-minute papers prepared and read by the district presidents.

Our reports of superintendents showed good work and that we were in line with the National; we combined peace and arbitration with our Christian citizenship department, and we divided lumbermen and miners. We combined non-alcoholic medication with health and heredity; also made systematic giving a separate department. The papers of the district presidents, which were fully discussed, took the place of their reports, which will be found in state minutes. Our evenings were made bright for us by the fine singing, organ and violin playing, for which Saginaw is noted.

The first evening was Demonstration Night, and we were an army with banners. After marching we sung our state song and the superintendents massed on the platform for their two-minute speeches, which were creditable to them and us.

Our president's address was a masterly effort as she outlined the evils of the day and our efforts as an organization to suppress them.

John G. Woolley was the outside speaker, and an audience of over one thousand greeted him. His subject was "Christian Citizenship." His brotherly, Christian advice to voters closed thus: "Go against the enemy with the words and spirit of David, and you will be able to say that there is a God not over but in Michigan."

L. T. L. and Y evening was presided over by the superintendent, Mrs. Coleman. The prize for the best essay on the subject, "Best Way to Conduct a Y Meeting," was won by Bertha Fitch, of Port Huron. The Y banner for greatest gain in membership also went to Port Huron.

We received many fraternal greetings, among them one from Dr. Reynolds, apostle of the Red Ribbon movement; a greeting and a large bouquet of flowers from Gorden Granger W. R. C. The unions of Saginaw gave us hand painted badges, also a souvenir number of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The executive committee presented our former comrade, who lives at Saginaw, a set of silver spoons. After reading and adopting the resolutions, which were upon the press, purity, L. T. L., Y's, non-alcoholic medication, Sabbath observance, curfew law, the Temple, license, dress, Christian citizenship, anti-cigarette leagues and courtesies, with a word of prayer by our state president for divine leading in the new untried year upon which we have entered, the twenty-fourth annual convention stood adjourned.

30 Boxes of Gold.

Easy Mining for Pin Money.

To secure some desired information direct from the people, it is proposed to send a trim little box containing 5 gold dollars to each of 30 persons who write the most interesting description of their experience and observation on the following topics:

How have you been affected by Coffee drinking?

Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?

Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make Postum clear, black and with a crisp pungent taste.

Have you ever discovered a better way to make it than to note the clock at the time actual boiling commences, (not when pot is first put on stove) and keep it boiling moderately for full 15 minutes, using 2 heaping teaspoonsful for each cup of beverage?

Give names and account of those you know to have been cured or helped in health by the dismissal of coffee and the daily use of the Food Coffee in its place.

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., Battle Greek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

Decision will be made and the 30 little boxes of gold sent out on June 30, next.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold will reach many a modest writer whose plain and sensible letter contains the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

What Shall be the Outcome?

The second Congress of Mothers is entered on the list of past events, but its influence is not ended. From Utah, Arkansas, Florida, Massachusetts, from states near and remote, the women came to learn, to teach, to receive, to give, and going back to their homes, they carry with them the enthusiasm aroused by exchange of thought and opinion. The Congress has now assumed an organized form, and the women of the land will be awakened to a new realization of the value of united effort and study; mothers' clubs will be formed and mothers' congresses be held, but in all this effort will be felt a need of definite directions how to work.

The W. C. T. U. has an advantage in that the movement is for us not a new one. Mothers' meetings and Child Culture Circles have been a part of our work for years, so that for us there is no need of starting a new effort, of effecting a new and untried organization. We are ready now to labor, our plans are matured, our work cut out, our leaders in thought equipped and ready. The general secretary of Mothers' Meetings is Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, of Ann Arbor, Mich., the assistant secretary is Mrs. E. M. Adams, Mound City, Kan. The general secretary of Child Culture Circles is Mrs. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich. Each of these is ready to answer queries, to furnish leaflets of suggestion, to advise as to methods. Mrs. Adams is ready to give her personal presence and lecture in the interests of child-training, as is also Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, of Evanston, Ill.

Let the W. C. T. U. hold Mothers' Congresses in each district, or even county, and give to the women who can not go to Washington once a year the benefit of having the topics discussed in their own locality. As one of our leaders says, "Have a school of mothers instead of a school of methods," if you can't have both. As W. C. T. U. women we should seize this opportunity. Hundreds of women are forming new societies who could be brought into our ranks if we were wise and prompt to act. At these congresses we need only to bring forward the specific topics of home interest. Suffrage and prohibition should not be brought forward, but just have a little union of mothers to be educated for the problems of daily home life, and no one could prophesy how soon the minds of the women would open to the reception of these other truths. Every state superintendent of purity work should be ready to push this branch of that department, not along specific purity lines only, but along all lines of child-training. In every state in which there is a separate department of mothers' meetings, there should be united effort of the superintendent of this department and the superintendent of purity to do this work. Every superintendent of parlor meetings ought to follow the call of popular interest and make her meetings mothers' congresses. Every evangelistic superintendent should emphasize this phase of her work. Every organizer should show the people this line of W. C. T. U. effort and bring in the mothers who are looking about for some way to gain an impetus from the breeze of new interest in home problems.

Sometimes I find a feeling among our women that a superintendent of one department should not in any way touch the domain of another. This is not the true spirit. Our work is one and indivisible. There are no lines of demarkation which separate one department absolutely from all others.

Although mothers' meetings stands in our plan as a division of the purity department, I shall be more than glad if the National, state and local superintendent of each and every department constitute herself a special organizer of mothers' meetings, parents' institutes, or child culture circles. Let us lose sight of all save the magnitude, the need, the sacredness of the work.

Your comrade,
MARY WOOD-ALLEN,
National Supt.

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR COMRADES:—I bring you good news all along the line. Relief work is progressing finely. Several boxes have been sent to Medical Director Bloodgood at Naval Hospital for abulance ship, Solace. Word comes from him that all boxes, etc., must come to him prepaid, as our government has made no provision as yet for the carrying to him. Word from Mrs. Stewart, at Tampa, Fla., tells of great work needed, money, delicacies, my pledge cards, literature. Comfort bags can be used in great quantities, but everything should be prepaid, as the union there can not afford to pay expressage or freight. Another letter from one of my very best superintendents in Florida, Mrs. A. E. Rainey, state superintendent, says, "I have started a reading tent in Jacksonville for our soldier boys encamped there. I have sent out letters to different publishers asking for their magazines and papers. We need funds to carry on the work down here. We are not able to do it all ourselves, and must ask for help. We want to give these soldiers, now and then, a little 'At Home,' serve wafers and lemonade. Old newspapers are not wanted, but clippings, tracts, magazines and good late newspapers will be greatly appreciated. Clippings rolled up in pieces of bright tissue papers, as the old-fashioned candy kisses are rolled, and put in comfort bags could be used by the thousands."

Let us answer at once to this call; could not each state take hold of this work for their own "boys in blue," sending their gifts to Florida for our own women to distribute? They say, and with reason, the work is tremendous, and there are so few to help. Now is our opportunity! It is said that at Camp Alger, "notwithstanding General Graham's positive orders prohibiting the introduction of beer and alcoholic liquors, there are not less than fifteen eating houses on the ground where it is sold."

Mrs. A. Burdick, of the Mizpah reading-room, No. 37 Clarkson street, New York city, N. Y., writes me that while the United States cruiser, St. Louis, was lying at the dock there coaling last week, Lela Alison and herself placed fifty comfort bags and quantities of literature. Seven small "Loan Libraries" had already been put on board. Two of the crew had been left behind, at the hospital, and she visited them, taking delicacies etc. Many more such encouraging reports reach me.

Remember that our hospital ship, the Solace, the camps at Tampa, Florida, and Chickamauga, are places where the needs will continue as long as the war lasts, and that everything must be gotten through free or prepaid. For the Solace send to Director Bloodgood, Naval Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y. For Tampa, send to Mrs. Kate P. Stewart, Tampa, Fla. For Chickamauga, send to Mrs. S. P. Lowe, 120 E. Seventh street, Chattanooga, Tenn.

ELLA M. THACHER,
National Supt. Soldiers and Sailors.

N. B.—I have issued a leaflet telling plainly what delicacies are most needed and a plan for comfort bags. Send to me for it.

Anti-Narcotics.

The tobacco mauufacturers are resorting to every device to attract the young. Not content with the harm being done by the cigaret, they now make a chewing gum which contains tobacco. This is called "gum-bacco," and is being sold and given away to children. Desiring to ascertain exactly what this gum contained, I wrote to the city chemist of Chicago for his analysis and reproduce his letter, which is as follows:

"We procured and analyzed several packages of gum-bacco and find that it contains ordinary chewing gum containing fine cut chewing tobacco. Nicotine, the active principle of tobacco, is a virulent poison and produces evil effects in those who use tobacco in any great amount. On account of their susceptibility tobacco affects the child quicker than the adult. The effect of gum-bacco on the user undoubtedly would be to cultivate a taste for tobacco; consequently the sale to children, in the interest of their health, should be as rigidly prohibited as is in most intelligent communities, the sale of cigarets to the young."

(Signed) W. S. MAHORG.

Please do not stop working upon the petitions for the Terry bill pending in Congress. The bill is in the hands of a sub-committee, of which Mr. Ray, of New York, is chairman. He is holding the bill. Why he does not pass it on is one of the conundrums of congressional affairs. People all over the United States are watching him, particularly his New York constituency, from whom he received five hundred letters in one week. We must work for this bill until every member of Congress is pledged to support it; and, there is no legitimate reason why they should not make this pledge. As it is only an interstate commerce law it would not do away with one cigaret, but would make it possible for states to forbid their importation.

I am sure that white-ribboners everywhere will be rejoiced to learn that Mrs. Helen L. Bullock has wholly recovered from the severe illness which held her captive for nearly three months, and is again in the field. She is speaking in New York during June; will hold schools of methods in West Virginia, and at Tully Lake, N. Y., in July and August, and in September will begin work in Indiana. She is open to engagements in the northwest, between the closing of her engagement in Indiana and the National Convention. There is no more thoroughly equipped woman in our ranks than Mrs. Bullock, and for her to go into a state always means that the work will not only make rapid advance, but also that whatever is done will be well done. Mrs. Bullock's daughter is her almost constant companion in her work this year and is said to be rapidly developing into a worthy coadjutor. It speaks well for the future of our work when the daughters step into line side by side with their mothers.

Mrs. Alice R. Ridout, corresponding secretary of Western Washington, writes of the visit to that state of Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake and Dr. Carolyn Geisel, two of the general secretaries in the department of purity. She says: "At the meeting held with the Y. M. C. A., almost the entire roomful of men rose, at Mrs. Lake's invitation, and pledged themselves to lives of purity. Oh, for more such consecrated women!"

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts writes: "We miss Mrs. Ellis in Washington. She did excellent work. The women of the W. C. T. U. have done the best petition work they have ever done. We need now a new volley of personal letters from men whom the women can stir up, or get to sign letters they have prepared." Who will offer themselves to this "stirring up" for righteousness?

Lou Beauchamp, our gifted brother-helper, writes: "I shall be open to work in New York state or the East during August and September—between assembly dates. If any of the unions desire my services in a series of meetings on my plan of no risk to the unions, I shall be glad to correspond with them as to terms. I have been busy all this year doing a good deal of no-license work, always helping the W. C. T. U. and always being assisted by them. I am at the call of the W. C. T. U. at all times, and if the sisters want the fall and winter on my plan, early application will secure the time." Wherever Mr. Beauchamp holds a series of meetings, we hear of excellent results following his work. I just missed hearing him in Peoria last week, to my great regret, but I did hear most enthusiastic commendation. His suggestion should be borne in mind in planning for the fall and winter campaign.

The Honor Roll is as follows:

Mrs. Abbie Hamlin, Milo, Me.

Mrs. Mary C. Johnston, Harvey, Ill.

The Honor Roll is not really in the languishing state which recent reports would seem to indicate. Letters are being received from several of our most active workers, National and state, which indicate that names of new members secured by them are being withheld in order that they may be sent in, in one grand total. Plans are maturing for an active campaign during the summer months, and especially for a grand rally for new members on September 28, the birthday of our beloved leader. I earnestly hope that no public lecture, no county or district convention, no summer school of any kind may be held this year which shall not count a vigorous effort to secure new members as one of its principal features.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

The monotony of office work is occasionally relieved by a little field work. It was the privilege of the treasurer to attend the annual convention of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., held at Chippewa Falls, one of the most beautiful towns in the state. A large delegation was present. Mrs. Vie H. Campbell is a fine parliamentarian, and kept everything moving like clockwork. The reports showed that good work was being done in the home and in some of the departments. The plan of work committee reported, recommending combining many of the departments and discontinuing several others. This was done. When the order of election was reached, Mrs. Campbell, who has been the president for six years, withdrew her name as candidate for president, greatly to the surprise of many, and Mrs. Mary C. Upham was elected. Mrs. Campbell very beautifully introduced her, and bespoke for her the earnest support of Wisconsin women. Mrs. Upham responded modestly, speaking in the very highest terms of Mrs. Campbell's able administration of state affairs. Later, a beautiful ring was presented to Mrs. Campbell with a resolution of fervent thanks for her faithful work during her term of office. The other officers were re-elected. Mrs. Upham has long been the efficient superintendent of the department of work among lumbermen for the National, and has the love and support of the women generally. While we shall greatly regret to lose Mrs. Campbell from our National executive, we shall welcome Mrs. Upham, and we expect to see Wisconsin not only maintain her excellent record, but look for an advance all along the line.

The pleasure of my visit to Chippewa Falls was greatly enhanced by the fact that I was entertained in the home of my old friend, Mrs. Flora B. Ginty, who was one of our most efficient members of the Board of Lady Managers of the Columbian Exposition. She was retained here for several months after the close of the fair, writing up important data for the history of woman's work. Mrs. Upham and I were fortunate in being guests in her lovely home. Success to Wisconsin.

Miss Agnes M. Bigelow has deeded to the National W. C. T. U. a fine house and lot in Nassua, N. H. This is a beautiful gift to our work. Miss Bigelow called at the office a few weeks since to learn the exact steps necessary to make the property over. It is well rented and will give the National a steady income. The earnest thanks of the National are extended to Miss Bigelow, not only for her valuable gift but for her kindly interest and helpful spirit.

We trust all our friends are remembering the National in their bequests to the world's work. If you want your money to do good after your voice is silent and your hand is powerless, give to our great philanthropic society a portion of your means, and it will help to educate the children, to build up better sentiment, reform the unfortunate and secure better safeguards for the home, while you are peacefully free from all the burdens of the work.

A Popular Fallacy.

DEAR SISTERS:—In the Banner of Gold, I find the following valuable article from Dr. N. S. Davis, a scientist of authority, which I give in part in THE UNION SIGNAL Hospital column this week for the benefit of our sisters who may not otherwise see it, trusting that in it they will find the information from a most reliable source which white-ribbon women often stand in need of:

"After an ample clinical field of observation in both private and hospital practice for more than fifty years and a continuous study of our medical literature, I am prepared to maintain the position that the ratio of mortality from all the acute general diseases has increased in direct proportion to the quantity of alcoholic remedies administered during their treatment. How can we reasonably expect any other result from the use of an agent that so directly and uniformly diminishes the cerebral, respiratory, cardiac and metabolic functions of the living human body? Both the popular and the professional beliefs in the efficiency of alcoholic liquids for relieving exhaustion, faintness, shock, etc., are equally fallacious.

"We have now, both in Europe and in this country, large hospitals treating their thousands of cases without one drop of alcohol and with the most satisfactory results. In some hospitals whole wards have been divided, some put upon the old alcoholic treatment, and others upon one entirely free from its use, and the percentage of recovery without it was fully equal to that with it, and in some wards much greater.

"It is a dangerous experiment for a physician to prescribe alcohol as a curative agent in disease, and I am glad to announce that the medical fraternity has at last arrived at a point where it is looking into the dangers of the practice, and hosts of the leading minds are calling a halt in its use. Intemperance is the curse of all curses of modern civilization. So many have been and so many are addicted to the use of alcoholics that a physician in prescribing it in illness little knows what a conflagration he may be kindling by applying the fuel to the lingering, latent spark hidden within his patient. Then when other drugs will answer better he is not excusable for the practice.

Physicians should be wise, thoughtful, judicious and remember that they have not only the welfare of their patients at stake, but possibly progeny yet to follow. They should never prescribe alcohol when it can possibly be avoided, as it is more dangerous and more treacherous than either of the other poisons I first enumerated.

"'Oh,' you say, 'there are times when it can not be avoided.' Here is where, as a medical man, I am compelled to draw a medium line. There are conditions which are difficult to bridge over without the immediate action of a diffusible stimulant, or, as some may choose to term alcohol, an irritant to excite the heart's action more quickly than can be accomplished with ammoniacs. But those instances are very, very rare, and then it is more the mechanical effect that is sought than a curative one. Something else must be looked to for that. But this should be only for a temporary relief when all else fails, as that is the only medicinal virtue it has. Under no other circumstances do I consider alcohol advisable as a remedial agent in the treatment of disease."

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Publisher's Notes.

Fourth of July Program for the L. T. L.

Every union planning for a "Temperance Fourth of July," as suggested by the department of Christian citizenship, should see that the children have a part in the demonstration. No more delightful or effective program can be found than that prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National L. T. L. secretary, in the June number of The Young Crusader. It is just the thing for the Loyal Temperance Legions, or with a very slight alteration can be used by any Junior Society. It can not fail to please, it will inspire patriotism, and the temperance setting will carry the truth home to older hearts.

The June Young Crusader also contains a delightful account of a temperance rally in Iceland, by Jessie Ackermann, while Mrs. Addie Northam-Fields writes of Miss Willard in England, and Mrs. Marie L. Gorman gives a most interesting report of the children's work in Washington, D. C. Single copy, five cents, twenty-five to one address 35 cents, fifty copies for 60 cents, one hundred copies one dollar.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JUNE. "Domestic Science," by Mrs. Marion A. McBride, superintendent of the branch of health and heredity department. The central thoughts given are: "Give us this day our daily bread," and "I am the Bread of Life." Domestic science, it is explained, pertains to the food we eat and the houses we live in, and we are told how to properly pursue this study as a part of W. C. T. U. work. The writer calls attention to the importance of the food question to our "boys" in the army and navy. She says: "To the American woman is given the care of a nation that its defenders shall be strong and well physically." Appended to the Reading are the "ten commandments" concerning health and hygiene, formulated by Miss Willard—commandments or which every white-ribboner should preserve a copy.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE. "Our Calling," by Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, secretary of general rescue work for the National purity department. God never gave a command, she says, that He did not provide both the worker and the ammunition. He is never at a loss for workers. When He called Bezaleel to help Moses He "called him by name" and "filled him with His spirit." We have not as yet understood the privileges of our calling. A spirit-filled man or woman—do we grasp its significance? Christ walks in us! As a business man, strong in proportion to his financial backing, so the Christian worker may be as strong as his spiritual backing. Mrs. Lake points out the forms of service to which we are called, emphasizing the fact that we are called to suffer and to wait as well as to do.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

MEMORIAL Day the Washington unions decorated the graves of the soldiers who were formerly of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Temperance Union.

A NEW Y has been organized on Capitol Hill, Washington, by Mrs. Clinton Smith. Misses Ida Dailey, Lizzie Sellers and Delia Adams are the new officers.

CRUSADE silver jubilees will be the order among local unions, this twenty-fifth year since Crusade days. One has already been inaugurated in New Hartford, N. Y., by the union there.

A MEMBERSHIP contest held by the eighteenth ward Y's of Rochester, N. Y., resulted in a large increase in membership. The contest was close, the winner gaining by only one member. Mrs. Schier was the defeated captain, and gave the conqueror a banquet at her home.

THE active president of the local union of Ottumwa, Ia., W. C. T. U., Mrs. Stout, has for several weeks been seriously ill. She is slowly convalescing but has been forbidden to write, as her illness is a brain trouble. Prayers are requested that she be speedily restored to health.

A LARGE oil painting of Frances E. Willard, handsomely framed, decorates the headquarters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition in Omaha. The picture was painted by Mrs. M. C. Pellette. It will be hung in National Headquarters, the Temple, after the exposition closes, a gift to the National from the artist.

The members of the W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia distributed over 7,000 buttonhole bouquets the morning of Memorial Day to the conductors, motormen, policemen and firemen of that city. Each bouquet was composed of a red or pink carnation, a daisy, a sprig of boxwood and a Scripture text tied with white ribbon. The recipients of the boutonnieres were appreciative of this friendly action.

MAPLEWOOD, Ill., W. C. T. U. has presented a drinking fountain to the city of Chicago. Mr. John G. Shortall, president of the Humane Society, accepted the custody of the fountain on behalf of the organization which he represents. Six little girls unveiled the fountain. Appropriate services accompanied the unveiling. There are fifty drinking fountains in Chicago controlled by the Illinois Humane Society.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions offered by those who are interested in the effort being put forward by the National Woman's Christian Temperance union to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it was by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and at the request of Miss Willard that she has accepted the foregoing trust.

RED-LETTER DAY.

INDEPENDENCE DAY—JULY 4.
The Birthday of Mary H. Hunt.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notes and Comments.

THE Reform Presbyterian Synod recently in session at Walton, N. Y., adopted resolutions denouncing in the strongest terms the toleration of saloons on the part of college faculties.

AS is its custom THE UNION SIGNAL will take a vacation the last two weeks of July. There will be no issues of the paper July 21 and 28. Our readers will please bear this in mind and refrain from writing to inquire "What's the matter with THE SIGNAL?" when those numbers fail to come.

AS will be seen from the letter of Mrs. Inglehart in our Hospital column on page 13, the name of the association is now, by action of its board, "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association." The reasons for the change are set forth by the president in that column, and we call especial attention to the form of bequest therein given. It is a matter for general rejoicing that this institution, which is doing so much to demonstrate the benefits of non-alcoholic medication, should be on such an encouraging financial basis.

THE saloonmen of Deadwood, S. D., have subscribed $30,000 as a start toward a fund of $5,000,000 to build a warship, the entire amount to be raised among the liquor men of the nation. In view of the well known superstition of sailors it is a question whether a vessel built with drink money would not be regarded as foredoomed to disaster. If any ship was ever entitled to the name of "hoodoo" surely such an one would be. We imagine it haunted with the specters of wailing wives and skeleton children, brutal murderers and their shrieking victims, gibbering idiots and an unending procession of lost, despairing souls. We imagine the very rats forsaking it.

COMMENTING on our paragraph last week concerning the rejection of volunteers, the Advance says: "THE UNION SIGNAL innocently asks, 'These men who are physically unable to go to the front to defend their country in time of need, ought they to be allowed to vote?' But, sister UNION SIGNAL, might not the adoption of such a rule prevent the adoption of female suffrage?" Not at all; it might prevent many women voting as it would many men, but, esteemed brother Advance, that is not the point. In your artlessness you have failed to perceive the Socratic irony of our question. Must we remind you that woman's disability for military service is one of the pet arguments of the anti-suffragists?

"CHICAGO young people have opened fire on seven thousand saloons!" Thus the Y. P. C. T. U. of this city heads the announcement to the public of their first "Grand Patriotic Temperance Rally," to be held in the Auditorium on the evening of Tuesday, June 28. This organization of the young men and women of Chicago and suburbs, under the energetic leadership of Miss Eva Shontz, is increasing with amazing rapidity. The young people's societies of the different churches are enlisting in the war against the liquor traffic with immense enthusiasm, and as the dodgers phrase it, are now "fairly ablaze with this new patriotism." The proceeds of the concert are to be devoted to the Temple fund.

THE Massachusetts state prohibition convenon met June 9 at Worcester. It is reported as a most successful meeting, speeches "red-hot," and enthusiasm at white heat. Woman suffrage, in the opinion of the convention, is "one of the bulwarks of the prohibition cause," and its platform contains a strong suffrage plank. The state convention of Kansas, held in Emporia June 8, also declared for a "free ballot regardless of race or sex." Ex-Senator Peffer, of Topeka, was nominated for governor. June 9 Nebraska prohibitionists swung into line, and in state convention at Lincoln reaffirmed their oldtime allegiance to prohibition and woman suffrage. California's prohibitionists convened in Fresno June 9. Large street meetings with brass bands were features of the occasion. The platform supports, among other things, woman suffrage, the initiative and referendum and government ownership. Resolutions indorsing the crusade against college drinking were adopted with cheers. In each of these four conventions money for campaign purposes was subscribed with encouraging liberality.

THE growth of intelligent total abstinence sentiment in this country is well illustrated by the following extract from a letter of a correspondent from Battery B of the Pennsylvania volunteers, Chickamauga Park, to the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette:

The part of the park we are in is in Walker county, Georgia. It is a prohibition county, as are the majority of the counties of the state. That does not in any way interfere with the army canteen. This canteen is conducted under the laws of the United States, and pays no tax of any kind. The profits of the business go into the regimental mess fund. No other intoxicant is sold in it than beer. Battery B has no canteen, and will not have one for two reasons—first, because Captain Hunt, commanding the battery, is opposed to it; second, because there are not enough men in the organization who drink to support an affair of that kind.

This artillery commander, who will not allow a beer-selling canteen in his command, is the son of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, author and leader of the movement for scientific temperance education in the public schools of this and other countries. Captain Hunt's experience as an army officer seems to be an illustration of Mrs. Hunt's theory, that wherever there are enough men who are too intelligent as to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks to support a liquor shop, prohibition will be easily enforced. Another officer from the same battery says:

The men who drink beer here can't stand the temperature of this climate; when exposed to this heat, they drop like flies under a flame. Happily, there is but little drinking in the army, almost none with the ten thousand Pennsylvania troops. Most of the men are actuated by very high moral principles.

Pennsylvania has had a strong temperance education law longer in force than any other state, and we are now seeing the fruit of that study. These abstaining young men who are bearing arms under our flag in defense of the oppressed of another land, learned in school that alcohol is more dangerous than bullets. Similar testimony in regard to the effects of drinking among the troops is current everywhere. It is a case where theory founded on scientific truth is being conspicuously demonstrated.

Current Events.

War News of the Week.

Troops Sail for Cuba. No Change in the Situation at Santiago.

ADMIRAL SAMPSON still mounts guard over the harbor of Santiago, where Admiral Cervera's fleet is imprisoned, waiting for the reinforcements now en route. A force of marines was landed at Guantanamo and two men were killed and four wounded in a skirmish with the Spanish guerrillas. In a fort that was captured the bodies of fifteen Spaniards, one a lieutenant, were found.

Admiral Sampson's ships have for the third time bombarded the batteries at Santiago and destroyed the works on the western side of the harbor. Shells filled with gun cotton were successfully hurled by the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius. Morro was spared because Lieutenant Hobson and his men are prisoners there. Fortifications are destroyed as soon as erected by the Spanish, in order to facilitate the landing of the troops without interference. Admiral Dewey makes the following official report from Manila, where he also awaits the reinforcements which are en route:

"There is little change in the situation since my telegram of June 3. Insurgents continue hostilities and have practically surrounded Manila. They have taken 2,500 Spanish prisoners, whom they treat most humanely. They do not intend to take the city at the present time. Twelve merchant vessels are anchored in the bay with refugees on board, under guard of neutral men-of-war. This with my permission. Health of squadron continues excellent. German commander-in-chief arrived to-day. Three German, two British, one French, one Japanese man-of-war in port. Another German man-of-war expected. The following is a correct list of the Spanish vessels captured and destroyed: Two protected cruisers, five unprotected cruisers, one transport, one serving vessel, both armed. The following were captured: The transport Manila and the gunboat Callao."

The Council General of Catalonia, representing the mercantile intelligence of Spain, has called on the Madrid government to sue for peace on any terms, while the Queen Regent announces her determination to abdicate in favor of the Infanta Isabella, sister of the late King, who is in favor with the populace.

Through General Garcia, the Cubans in arms have notified General Miles that any suggestions on plans for military coöperation sent by him to them will be regarded as orders and obeyed as such. Positive statement to this effect is made by General Miles himself, he adding that he expected 15,000 Cubans to aid General Shafter in the capture of Santiago.

NOTES.

THE government issue of $200,000,000 worth of bonds for a war loan, has met with instant favor. Preference is given to small investors, and the demand is far in excess of the supply.

GOVERNOR LEEDY, of Kansas, has made arrangements to furnish each Kansas soldier going to the Philippines, an aluminum identification badge, to be hung around the neck. California soldiers will be similarly supplied.

MRS. J. ADDISON PORTER, wife of the secretary to the president, has joined the Red Cross society. She intends to go to Cuba with Clara Barton on the first expedition following the army of invasion. Mrs. Porter is a prominent society woman of Hartford, Conn.

THE naval ambulance ship Solace carries a practical embalmer with all embalming supplies, as well as a stock of folding coffins. The latter are away from observation and free from all gruesome appearance. They are to be used only for such wounded as die on board ships.

THE Newlands resolution for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands passed the House by a vote of 209 to 91. It went to the Senate, was at once referred to the committee on foreign relations, which immediately reported it with a favorable recommendation, and present indications are that it will be concurred in by the Senate within the week.

OFFICIAL announcement has been made at Madrid that Senor du Bosc and Lieutenant Carranza have been "invited" to leave Canada

Massachusetts Clergymen to the Front.

IN response to the 3,000 circular letters sent out by Rev. George C. Lorimer, D.D., of Tremont Temple, Boston, asking for a conference of ministers at Worcester, to consider the temperance question, a large number of clergymen participated in a memorable meeting held on June 8.

Dr. Lorimer's letter invited the opinion of brother ministers on the subject of holding such conference. Nine hundred replies were received, the largest number in response to any similiar appeal ever made in the commonwealth. Six hundred answered in favor of such a conference, 290 of whom hoped to be present. One-half of the remainder were "not unalterably opposed to the prohibition party"; the larger part of the other half non-committal, and the rest violently opposed to such a thing.

A few of the replies were bitter in denunciation of the prohibition party, and one clergyman went so far as to say that it was not legal to attempt to stop the manufacture and sale of liquor, and that further it was transgressing the great law of God, "Thou shalt not," inasmuch as it was an attempt to ruin the business of a large portion of the community.

Many of the ministers spoke upon the subject of the call, the best methods to secure the overthrow of the liquor traffic, etc. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, it is a source of congratulation that the clergy of the state so generally realize the evils of intemperance as to express an earnest purpose to do what they can for the overthrow of the liquor traffic,

Be it resolved, that we pledge ourselves and recommend to the brethren in the ministry, to join with us in the pledge to make the temperance cause a special feature of our ministry during the coming year, and that as law is ineffective without the creation of a corresponding public spirit, and as we feel that the pulpit is especially responsible for the kind of moral sentiment that prevails, we covenant with our brethren to do all within our power to educate the people to oppose both men and measures that operate in any wise for the spread of intemperance in the commonwealth.

Be it further resolved, to appoint a committee of twenty-one for the purpose of convening a temperance convention, to be held in the Tremont Temple, or some other suitable place in Boston, the second week in October of this year, to consist of clergymen and lay delegates, to consider what steps should be taken to promote temperance reform and to advance non-partisan temperance legislation; and finally,

Be it resolved, that this convention shall consist of delegations, cleric and lay, either men or women, to be directly appointed by the Christian churches and that all churches of every name be cordially invited to take part in this movement, and to all churches the committee of twenty-one to be appointed shall forward the necessary invitation for action.

Temperance.

THE members of the Cincinnati Preachers' Meeting have made vigorous protest against the establishment of canteens in our military camps.

AT a recent meeting of the Methodist Conference at Montreal, Canada, resolutions were adopted pledging both moral and financial support to the Dominion Alliance in the prohibition plebiscite campaign.

THE police force of Washington has been instructed to rigidly enforce the law passed by Congress August 5, 1861, which makes it unlawful to sell or give away intoxicating liquors to soldiers or sailors in the District of Columbia. The act has never been repealed.

THE court of the fourth appellate division of New York state has unanimously affirmed the judgment which gave to Mrs. Sarah Lawson, of Cattaraugus county, damages against a saloonkeeper who sold liquor to her husband during a prolonged spree, at the close of which he attempted to murder her and kill himself.

A CANADIAN correspondent writes from Toronto: "The Dominion Senate has passed the prohibition plebiscite bill, also new franchise bill on which a vote is to be taken, a deadlock over the voters lists having been compromised by the Senate and House of Commons. A conference was held here on June 11 by the Dominion Alliance and a stirring address to the prohibitionists for an aggressive campaign was ordered.

THE Massachusetts Advent Christian Conference, at its recent annual session, passed the following resolution: "We are unalterably opposed to license in every form, considering the liquor traffic a sin against God, and crime against man. We also consider the use of tobacco very injurious, and record ourselves as against its use in every form, and especially of cigarets among the young, and urge strong action in this matter."

CAPTAIN R. S. WOODSON, the government expert on tropical diseases, makes the following official statement:

Yellow fever is certainly the greatest danger that confronts us. It is to be remembered that the mortality of this affection among the troops from northern climates, who possess absolutely no contra-immunity, will be exceedingly greater should the disease gain access to our midst. Yellow fever, being a disease which attacks essentially the liver and kidneys, will prove particularly fatal to those whose habits of life have reduced the vital resistance of these organs. Especially is this axiom applicable to soldiers with cirrhotic livers and kidneys from alcoholic excesses and those with lithemia from over-indulgence in highly nitrogenous foods. The term lithemia is intended to define that condition of men ordinarily spoken of as "full habit."

So firmly convinced am I of the predisposing influences of alcoholic indulgences toward this disease that I would strike all such beverages from the dietary of the soldier and even from the medical supplies of the department.

In this connection I wish it understood that I am not discussing this question from a moral standpoint; and to those who insist that habitual drunkards require their accustomed stimulant, I would reply that such men should be left behind, or, if carried, should be sent up daily for a hypodermic injection of strychnin or digitalin.

About Women.

MRS. L. P. JOHNSON, a leading business woman of Idaho Falls, has been nominated for governor by the prohibitionists of Idaho.

MISS MADGE E. THOMPSON, of Princeton, Wis., has been chosen by Governor Schofield to christen the new battleship, Wisconsin, now nearing completion in the Union iron works at San Francisco.

DR. ANITA NEWCOMB MCGEE, a Washington woman who has been charged with the selection of all the war nurses for the government during the present conflict, is called the Dorothea Dix of the Spanish-American war.

MRS. HENRY NASH, of Slade End, Wallingford, England, has been elected church warden of the parish of Sotwell, Berks, for the seventh time. Mrs. Nash is an active member of the parish council, a strong supporter of woman suffrage, and an earnest philanthropist.

MISS EVANGELINE E. WHITNEY, was elected Assistant Borough Superintendent of Public Schools for Greater New York, on June 7. She is the first woman to hold this position in New York. Her selection is said to be due to the efforts of several women members of the board, in spite of the pronounced opposition of Mayor Van Wyck.

Educational.

AT the annual commencement exercises of Princeton University on June 15, the degree of LL.D. in absentia, was conferred on George Dewey, Rear Admiral United States Navy.

ALL indications point to a large and enthusiastic gathering of teachers and educators of prominence at the annual meeting of the National Educational Association, to be held at Washington, D. C., July 7 to 12.

BY the terms of the will of Mrs. Annie S. Paton, Princeton University is to receive a legacy of $100,000. This bequest, when it becomes available, will be used to endow the "William and Annie S. Paton Lectureships in Ancient and Modern Literature."

GIFTS aggregating $60,000 were announced at the annual commencement exercises of Lake Forest University on June 16. Mr. Henry C. Durand gives $30,000 for a woman's dormitory, in memory of his mother. The other donors are the Mesdames McCormick, of Chicago.

NORTHWESTERN University at Evanston, for the first time in its history has conferred the degree of doctor of philosophy upon a woman student, Miss Alice G. Twight, of Chicago, being the conferee. She also has degrees from the University of Aix and the University of Paris.

AH, me! the faithful, loveful soul
Can bear ingratitude's lean dole,
Forget the pain of broken vows,
Forgive the malice others house,
Yea, make of lack of earthly pelf
A home for high and noble self.
And yet one deed there is, one thing
That to high souls deep grief doth bring,
Which they can ne'er forgive, blot out.
"Perchance a lover's wrong or flout?
Or loss of all the world holds dear?
Or theft of home or shame's foul sneer?
Some black dishonor wrought by kin?"
Ah, no! it is the smallest sin
That it itself hath done.

Newark, N. J.

In the Coils of a Snake.

In Two Chapters.

BY J. FOWLER WILLING.

CHAPTER II.

TARBELL met Anna at the train and took her to a pleasant boarding place down near Printing House Square. Like most people brought up in the country, she dreaded the confusion of the city, but she had made the most of a good guide book and map, and she trusted to Providence and her own cool, clear head. But, after all, it was agreeably reassuring to be piloted through the crowds by one for whose fine, aristocratic exterior everybody made way.

Tarbell's attentions were marked but most respectful. He came every evening to see if she needed any special advice about her sightseeing and visits to editors and publishers. He did not offer to go with her. When the search for her began, it would be better for him not to have been seen with her in the parks and places of amusement.

He determined to fascinate her if possible, so as little as he relished such tame talk, he drew her out on history, poetry, politics, and what not, she wondering the while at the shallowness of his knowledge and thought. Skillfully as he plied his arts, he never felt sure that he gained a single point.

The house was quiet and pleasant. Her prettily furnished sitting-room and alcove were on the fourth floor. Her meals were served in her room. She seldom saw any one as she passed in and out of the place. Usually each evening after Tarbell came, the maid brought her a tray with a delicate silver and cut glass service and something dainty to be eaten or drunk. When he offered her wine, she pointed to her bow of white ribbon and shook her head. All this "toploftical independence," as he called it mentally, only set more firmly the teeth of his determination. He would bring her down from her pinnacle of puritanic pharisaism. She would yet grovel at his feet and beg of him to make an honest woman of her. He had seen these highsteppers humbled more than once. The more difficult and dangerous the hunt, the greater the victory. He had her in his power. He could afford to give her a little rope. He saw that she was afraid of him, and never off guard no matter how stealthy his approach. He tried hypnotism, but she had read of the subtle influence that subjects one will to another, so it became simply a battle of wills, in which she was never beaten.

The affair began to grow tedious, but his sense of dominance held him to his purpose. It had been cultivated all his days by tormenting cats and dogs, teasing his sisters, lording it over servants, bullying the smaller fry, hazing freshmen, and kindred college brutalities. He gloried in the prospect of this brilliant conquest, though he half hated the girl for her independence and obstinacy. She evidently belonged to the abhorred tribe of new women with their abominable twaddle about a single standard of purity, strength and achievement for men and women.

He decided to cut the work short, so he gave an impecunious editor, an old chum of his, a fifty dollar check, to accept her story.

When Anna tucked the precious bills away in a secure place, she thought of her "popsie's" patent with exceeding great joy. She would go to him in the morning and lift from the dear old heart the double burden of care about her in the big, uncanny city and that of the patent which had dragged its slow length along till it had reached the point where fifty dollars meant a competence and comfort. It was Friday evening. Saturday evening would find them under the hemlocks at Squirrel Inn, and oh, what a Sabbath they would have together in the sweet, quiet and blessed mountains.

She was somewhat gracious toward Tarbell when he called that evening. She would have blanched to her hair if she had known that her passage was engaged with his for Liverpool. When as usual, refreshments were brought in, the decanter and glasses appeared again. She pointed to the white ribbon when he poured out the wine.

"But you are too weary to sleep after your days of going about the city," he said. "You must bend your ironclad principles just the least in the world. It is not every day that one has the chance to taste these rich, ripe, old wines. This is from my father's cellar. We always import our own. This is the very best German brand. I've had many an escapade through the old baronial castle and grounds and among the hillside vineyards where the grapes grew from which this was made. It drew light and gladness from the sunlit air. It is full of music and poetry. It is almost as costly as that in which Cleopatra dissolved the pearl when she drank it in honor of Mark Anthony—or was it the other way about? I'm sure you'll take just a sip of it to please me."

Well for the poor child that her "popsie" was praying his best for her at that very hour. Her anchors held. The wine was untouched. It was drugged, and but one sip would have been enough to drop her through a trap door into perdition!

Tarbell had hoped for an easier ending of his little drama. Tragedy was not at all to his taste. It was apt to be a little bothersome with so many prodded policeman and voracious newsmongers at every turn.

Anna hardly closed her eyes till daylight, and then she was startled out of a short sleep by dreaming of an encounter with a cobra. When she went to the closet for her dress she found that her outer garments, hat, wrap and all, had been taken away and others were hanging in their place. She sunk into a chair, her teeth chattering from fear. A horrible suspicion which had hovered about ever since she had come to the place took tangible form. Her terror-sharpened senses caught up the shreds of proof. She was in the house of which Solomon wrote, "The dead are there," and the "guests are in the depths of hell."

She had read in the White Cross literature of the trick played on the entrapped of obliging them to wear other than their own clothes, and arresting them for theft if they tried to escape. If ever she prayed in her life, it was in the next few minutes. When she was quite calm again, she rang for the maid and asked to see Mrs. Wilson, the landlady. The only reply was a sardonic grin and the information that the madam was engaged. She tried to bribe the girl to bring back her clothes. "Oh, he'll give us ten times more nor that," chuckled the miserable creature, "if we keep ye here for 'im."

I think Anna Clifford would have lost her reason and thrown herself from that fourth story window to the pavement but for the faith of the old man at Squirrel Inn. That very moment he was making an attempt at "prayers" with little Poosie; and so earnestly was he pleading for the safety of the "dear absent one" that he did not notice the child's ridiculous attempt to bring the kitten down to a proper devout decorum. If Anna's own faith had given way under that terrible ordeal another splendid life would have been crushed down into the depths of living damnation. She could not see a ray of light for her deliverance, but she made up her mind to dash toward any door that might be only a crack ajar, trusting God to get her through. A word that her father read that very morning in the uncertain hearing of Poosie and the kitten hummed itself over and over through her agonized thought. "There is no other God that can deliver after this sort." It gave a steady hope that she would get out of this iron furnace of bondage, this awful slavery in which thousands of young women perish every year even in this free America.

Tarbell determined to try the sham marriage game with which he was quite familiar and for which he had all the applicances just across the Hudson in New Jersey. He told her of the passion he had for her from the first hour of their meeting in the halls at Squirrel Inn. She must be his. He could not live without her. She would learn to love him, and forgive the apparently unkind means he had taken to win her to his heart and home. He painted glowingly the luxury of the life she would live as his wife. She could make her father's last years as restful and happy as they deserved to be.

She held back the indignant refusal that blazed in her soul. She bowed coldly, and putting on the heavily befeathered hat that had taken the place of her own modest head gear, prepared to go with him. She would get out of that horrid place and under God's clean sky. The hearts of the people who would brush by her might be as hard as the stones under which they packed every inch of earth, yet "God was in His heaven—." She did not dare think, "All's right with the world," all seemed so horribly wrong. Brave and sure as was her faith, she trembled with agony as she walked along by Tarbell's side toward the elevated road. She had told him when they passed out of the house that she must insist upon being married by an old friend of her father's who lived near Weehawken, on the Jersey side of the Hudson. He assented readily, for it was not far from the house of death to which he meant to take her for the false ceremony. It would be easy to palm off his sham parson as a curate, or something of the sort, for the old minister who would be quite too ill to come.

Her walk beside that libertine, carrying the unclanking chain of her own degradation, did more for the girl to show her own utter helplessness and dependence on God than she had allowed all the preaching and praying of years to do. O the pity of it! The deepest and best lessons of our lives have to be trodden into our hearts by the red hot hoofs of pain.

Tarbell could not understand the change that had come over the poor child sitting beside him on the elavated train and the Forty-second street surface car. He had a low opinion of women. Such men usually rate them as of less consequence than fine dogs and blooded horses. They do not cost so much, and they show off to less advantage. He sneered inwardly at the whole puritanic lot. They were no better than the rest, only a little deeper hypocrites. It was just a trifle disappointing to have her fall so readily into the sham marriage trap; but never mind, she might make the fur fly when it became necessary to throw her off for fresher game.

As they passed into the ferry house at the foot of Forty-second street the boat for the eleven o'clock train was in its slip and the passengers were crowding through the gate. Anna hung back till every one had passed out. Tarbell turned toward her and touched her elbow to quicken her pace. Just as the gateman threw the gate into place, she sprang away from Tarbell past the man and down toward the boat which was moving out of the slip. As the gateman slid the gate to, the man shouted after her to look out for herself. Tarbell tried to wrench the gate open and follow her, but the man held it shut. So intent was he in watching the girl to see what she would do next, thinking whether he would lose his place if she jumped into the river, that he paid no attention to Tarbell's threats and oaths. Anna's foot slipped and before she could catch herself and get to the edge of the wharf, the boat was at least six feet away. With a wild cry to God for help she leaped after it. She caught a hanging rope. She held it with a death grip. Tarbell had managed to get through the gate; but he started back when she jumped. The passengers cried out in as many keys and tones as there were throats stretched, at the sight of her peril.

A tall young man with blanched face and set lips pushed through the crowd of passengers who had rushed to the rear of the boat at the sound of Anna's shriek. He was on the point of throwing off his coat for a plunge into the river, when he saw that she had caught the rope.

Reaching over the rail he seized her wrist with an iron grasp. Tarbell recognized him as one with whom he had seen Anna walking one evening on the Ledge End road at Twilight Park, and who, the old man in the hammock had informed him, was their pastor, Mr. Hildreth.

With an oath that came from the very depths of the hell that was already kindled within him, Tarbell swore between his set teeth that that driveling fool should not have her. She should go to the bottom of the river first. He sent a pistol shot at Hildreth's hand just as the young minister was lifting Anna over the guard. The clear-eyed, steady-nerved Hildreth bit back the pain, and in a flash he caught Anna with his left hand, and she was safe.

They told me the story last year when, in some of my peregrinations, I was entertained by them. After my lecture, I was sitting in their cozy little parlor ingleside, with "popsie" dreaming on the lounge and Poosie playing with the ubiquitous kitten.

"If ever two people gave hearty thanks to the good Christ," said Anna, slipping her hand into her husband's large palm, "we are those two, Jerold and I. Heaven may be better, but it can hardly seem more of an escape from perdition than I made that day. Tarbell has been in Europe ever since. His father paid Jerold ten thousand dollars for the damage done his hand by the pistol shot. He thought he was getting off cheaply to avoid the publicity of a suit. That will give us a good start for our work down in the city. Now that popsie's patent has come through all right, we'll have plenty to do with. Jerold's church will keep him busy, but I'm going to give my time to the fifty thousand girls, more or less, who are entrapped every year and sold into this horrid slavery. Think of it—fifty thousand a year! I am almost glad now that I had a taste of the anguish of it all. It makes me very tender and loving toward the poor things. It's a terrible whirlpool of anguish in which they perish. I dare hardly think of it."

"And the measureless loss to the country and the world and our Lord," said Hildreth, caressing the hand that lay in his. "Talk about the human sacrifices of the heathen! Christian America offers fifty thousand of her fairest and gentlest on the altar of lust every year by a living death. We think slavery is abolished, and yet there is no such foul enslavement on the planet as this which goes on under our very eyes year after year. Yes, Anna, darling, by God's good grace, we'll do something to turn back this awful tide of demonish waste and loss and ruin. He who watched over you and delivered you will not let your terrible suffering go for naught."

The Passing of a Great Leader.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

WITH the closing of the century has passed away the greatest political figure that stood prominent among men through two generations. The memory of the events that stirred the heart of the middle of this century is waxing dim, and it is perhaps only at this hour that many realize what the career of the great statesman who has just closed his earthly race has meant to the welfare of humanity, for it is not only England that mourns to-day her greatest son, but the oppressed nations of Europe equally bewail their liberator and their champion. With Gladstone's death an epoch closes in English history. The contemporary of Peel, Palmerston, John Russell, Derby and Disraeli is gone, but above all has passed away the man who combined the qualities of the great statesman, the enthusiastic churchman, the cultivated scholar and the fearless reformer. No man has combined such varied gifts, and to none probably will it be given again to stand a representative of the classes who unswervingly defended the interests of the masses.

For sixty years the House of Commons was held captive by his magnificent eloquence, and probably in the British Parliament no orator has ever surpassed him. The speeches of Burke, which to-day are classics, are said when delivered to have emptied the House, but the thrill of Mr. Gladstone's voice, the impressive earnestness of his manner, the deep conviction of his whole attitude are never to be forgotten by those who have been held spellbound by his magnetism. It is difficult to analyze in what the extraordinary merit of those speeches consisted; but I believe that for the most part their real power lay in the fact that he was bent on impressing his hearers with the truth of the idea that for the time possessed him. As a financier it is conceded by those who differ from him in politics that he was almost unrivaled, and from the hour that he joined issue with Sir Robert Peel in the corn law agitation, his policy was always in the direction of the reduction of taxation, believing that this affected the general prosperity and developed trade, thereby helping to enlarge the revenue.

The hold, however, that Mr. Gladstone's memory has on the hearts of the English people was not obtained only by brilliant gifts, but was, I believe, rather the result of the impassioned fervor with which he always championed those whom he believed to be suffering any wrong.

The freedom of Italy, the cause of oppressed Bulgaria, his policy for freeing the Isles of Greece, his enthusiasm for the persecuted Armenians, and his sincere desire to solve the great Irish difficulty are evidences of the manner in which he sunk all thought of personal advancement in his longing to make this world a better place for humanity. And so, to-day, not only does the voice of England speak, but from France, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Germany, Greece—come the same tributes of unfailing admiration for the man whose sympathies could not be bounded by the limits of any nationality, but whose great powers were devoted not only to the service of his people but to the uplift of his race. Men of all shades of religious and political opinions to-day join in the universal sentiment that we shall not see his like again. Other great statesmen have passed away, other magnificent careers have closed, but to none I think has been granted such universal respect as to the man who excited perhaps more hostility in his active political life, whose marked opinions were more bitterly commented upon, and whose actions caused perhaps keener political bitterness. But the reason that all blame is silent, and all adverse criticism stilled, is, I believe, because the man himself was so great in his singleness of purpose and his simplicity of aim. Mr. Gladstone's record stands out the best advocate for the integrity of his own career. A man whose reputation has been stainless, who has been unsullied by the vices of his age, whose name has never been associated with gambling or betting, and whose domestic life has been ideal—truly he has been not only a great leader, but he has been a great example. The calm and lofty dignity which characterized his passing out from his political career was worthy of the life that, while it was devoted to public work, never for an instant lost its zest for scholarly pursuits, its loyalty to friendship or its devotion to home. Nothing was small or trivial in the eyes of this great statesman. He would listen as eagerly to the talk of the humblest worker who could tell him something that really affected the welfare of humanity, as he would to the ablest scholar who could discuss with him his favorite pursuits.

Years ago, I remember on one occasion a breakfast being given to a member of the royal family at his house, and I can see now the sweet simplicity with which Mrs. Gladstone rose at the end of the meal and gathered together the roses which had been sent as a present to Mr. Gladstone and put them into a large hamper in order to dispatch them to a hospital, and I can remember Mr. Gladstone explaining where they were going and taking a lively interest in this little domestic detail. It is a pleasure to me to remember that the last time I saw him as our prime minister was when I was a member of the United Temperance delegation which waited on him in Downing street to urge the claim of the Direct Veto Bill, when the voice that had so often stormed the House of Commons now rung out a clear, true note in a declaration of loyalty to that measure.

We ask ourselves often, what constitutes a leader? In Mr. Gladstone we have found an answer to the query. The truth remains that mankind alone can make any man great. His faith in himself never becomes current coin until his fellows have placed their stamp upon it, and they will only do this for those who give their lives to them. The great American, General Grant, would have remained entirely obscure, as he was during more than half his lifetime, but for the needy cause of man, which, in a great emergency, pressed him to the front with the force of gravitation. It is always so with the favorites of fortune, for their fortune really consists in the exigencies of the hour. It bears them on its great beautiful billows upward and onward as if men had lifted them on their shoulders into sight, and there is something so immeasurably pathetic in the method of such achievement, that no one who is, like Mr. Gladstone, really great, becomes egotistical and claims that he achieves the place that he has gained. Those who, like him, have derived power through the gratitude and affection and confidence of their fellowmen will be recognized by the simplicity of their bearing, their characters and lives, and they will perceive that they have no reason to be otherwise, since, after all, humanity alone is great.

No memory of Mr. Gladstone will ever be complete unless linked with his name is that of the woman who has been an ideal wife, a devoted companion, an unselfish friend. It would have been impossible for Mr. Gladstone to accomplish what he has wrought, impossible for him to have continued his public career at so advanced an age, had it not been for the unfailing care of the woman who loved him so well and to whom he returned so ideal a devotion. But the secret of Mr. Gladstone's greatness lay in the fact that his life was founded on that which binds humanity to God, and there is nothing to-day I think that thrills us more than to hear from the lips of those who are called to give their tribute of praise in the center of the nation's life at Westminster, that the secret of his success lay in that faith which pervaded every act and every part of his life; it was "the pure faith of a child, confirmed, by the experience and conviction of manhood," "the faith that made faithful," because to him there was no dividing line between the religious and the secular. His speeches were the result of his prayers, and his prayers were the offering of his service. It was this rare combination of a great political career lived side by side with a deep devotion to a sweet harmonious, life, and an enthusiastic loyalty to his church that has produced the greatest living figure of our day and generation. I remember a relative of Mr. Gladstone's telling me that no matter how late he returned from the House of Commons, or how weary he might be, no matter how thrilling might have been the incidents in which he had been called to stand as a central figure, every night or in the gray dawn when he returned from his labors, he knelt at his little prayer desk as simply, as regularly, as quietly, as a child says its evening prayers beside its mother's knee. What wonder then that when the end of the long journey lay before him he was not amazed or affrighted? He had taken those last years as a preparation and had deliberately laid aside all thoughts of political strife in order to give himself to the quiet pursuits of his study and to make ready for the change that lay before him. And so when he was called to pass through the last purgatory of pain, it was with childlike trust, pathetic gratitude to all around him, and beautiful patience, that he bore his cross over the stony way of suffering until he entered into perfect peace.

There is infinite pathos in the thought that the voice that had so often controlled the wills of men, the voice that had never rung out save to speak what he believed to be the truth, that had read with beautiful, sonorous cadence the words of Scripture for so many years in his village church, whose magnetism had held his friends almost as by magic, the voice that had been silent during those last days, breathed out at the close of the prayer that committed his soul to God, the one word, "Amen." So let it be, that through the darkness and the turmoil and the strife, men's minds may turn to this great leader whose noblest work was his undeviating loyalty to the interests of the many rather than to the privileges of the few.

WHATEVER weakens your reason; whatever impairs the tenderness of your conscience; whatever obscures your sense of God; whatever increases the strength and authority of your body over your mind—that thing to you is wrong, however innocent it may be in itself.—Susannah Wesley.

Woman's Responsibility as a Member of Society and a Citizen.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

NOTHING can be a more serious consideration to a conscientious, thinking woman than the economic situation of our country today. Our social state has reached a climax. The systems based upon the principle of competition have developed mortgaged farms and homes, tenant workers of the soil who should be God's freeholders, capitalist owners of the machine as well as the mortgage, workers dependent upon the capitalist for a chance to work; and, most deplorable and perilous of all, thousands of people who having a disposition to work cannot find an opportunity.

In view of this condition I wish to ask my sister women some questions.

Do you think it possible that any persons in this country could be reduced to the condition of beggars for employment, if the social body were managed according to the principles of right, equality and justice?

Do you think the kingdom of heaven, of righteousness and peace, can come upon earth while the competitive idea of seeking individual interest alone, regardless of the welfare of other members of the social body, prevails as the legitimate method of business?

Do you think that the dependence of the worker, who is the wealth producer, upon the owner of the means of production, is anything less than a form of slavery?

Do you think the dependence of the worker upon an employer, and who has no interest in his personal welfare, and no responsibility to provide for his necessities, a less destructive form of servitude than that which compels the owner of the man to provide him with food and shelter?

Do you think that women are exempt from responsibility in regard to public affairs, local, state or national, because not politically enfranchised?

Do you think that women as citizens should neglect to inform themselves upon all questions pertaining to economics and government?

Do you perceive that the imminent conflicts of our civilization are those which can not be settled with physical weapons?

In the realm of ideas, on the battlefield of thought and of moral forces, do you consider woman less responsible or less potent than man?

Do you think the statement of Victor Hugo's true, that we can withstand an army of bayonets but we can not withstand an army of ideas?

Do you realize that right thinking and love of justice are an operative potency?

Does not woman need for her development the training of a responsible social factor?

Can woman be truly said to have a country if she is not an active student in the country's affairs?

Can you not exercise your thought and earnest desire for the general welfare to promote justice, even though you can not vote for political candidates?

Social economics are a matter of principle and not of policy. An intelligent understanding of principles, and an effective method of making them applicable to affairs is necessary to a government of the people, for the people, by the people. An understanding of principles can not interfere with the home duties of housewife and mother. The persistent thought of a truth is a vital power that sooner or later makes itself a part of the accepted and actualized idea of a community. Likewise the persistent thought of error if accepted from generation to generation is a force that vitiates and finally destroys.

We have it taught religiously that love of our neighbor, doing unto others as we would that others should do unto us, is a divine law. We have it taught and practiced that in business this divine law is not binding upon us; that there is no relation between the obligation to love our neighbor in church and prayer-meeting and to love our neighbor in the shop, the field and the market.

We have the lesson to learn that there is one law in all human relations, because the universe is operated by one law of exact relations, as the working of the One Infinite Power. Civilizations have perished because this inherent law of life, of progress and of harmony has not been applied to business relations, to establish justice and promote the general welfare. Our nation was born from the impulsion of this vital truth, that to establish justice and promote the general welfare is the office of the government. This can only be accomplished by making the interests of others identical with our own. Mutual benefit is the foundation of justice in social state.

There are self-evident truths. Among these are, that every human being has a right to the means of subsistence; that the bounties of nature belong equally to all; that every person who works has a right to the products of his labor. How shall these conditions be secured to every child of earth?

How long shall the worker build houses and pay rent to the landlord? How long shall the toiler plow and plant and gather the harvest to pay usury to the landlord? How long shall the voter be misrepresented by lawmakers whose statutes he has no power to veto when they are adverse to the general welfare?

Will not women study, both at home and in social groups, these momentous questions, and so add to the thought force which will help to bring in the reign of love and justice?

Amendments to the Constitution of the World's W. C. T. U.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—It may surprise many readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that such a step has been proposed. I therefore beg to give my reasons for what I have done.

As the World's constitution reads now, it gives all the power to the executive committee. That body not only elects officers, but amends the constitution and by-laws without appeal to, consultation with, or remonstrance from the convention. As one result, the election at Toronto was made by twenty-seven persons, while a delegated convention of 211 members was assembled.

The votes of the executive committee were unanimous, and therefore not a fair expression of the views of the delegates and constituents who elected them, for there was diversity of opinion among them. Those who differed from the executive were, probably, in the minority, but it is a principle of representative governments, and a most useful practice, that minorities have a right to be heard, to vote, and to have their votes recorded.

The only explanation of, or reason for the present mode of action that I have seen thus far is brought forward in the World's Minutes of the Toronto Convention, page 94, by Miss Slack, secretary, in the following words:

"If this [the present mode] were not so, whatever country entertained the convention, would control the World's W. C. T. U. because it would probably have the largest delegation."

Doubtless there is a difficulty embodied in these words, but there is a very simple way out of it without breaking down foundation principles. We met and overcame the difficulty many years ago in the National W. C. T. U. of the United States. Although not as wide as the "wide, wide world," our country is wide enough to insure a much larger delegation from the state where our annual convention is held, than from those hundreds, and in some cases, thousands of miles away.

To obviate this, a rule was made and was in force in the convention that met at Louisville in 1882, by which the delegates present, even though but one, could cast the entire number of votes the state was entitled to. Should this method be adopted by the World's Union, as I hope it will be, power would be distributed to the different countries, proportionally to the paid up membership, that is those that have paid the one cent (half-penny) yearly dues into the World's treasury.

It would also, combined with giving the convention the power of election, do away with another manifest injustice which now prevails, namely, for a country that has a mere handful of members to wield as much power in the executive as the United States, Great Britain, Canada or Australia, but the present mode permits this.

We all understand that the fairest government is one where the governed are not too many to come together and discuss all measures. The local unions alone can do that. But in the representative organizations necessary to combined action, the greatest care should be taken to give every member the widest and shortest channel of communication with those who decide important, and especially mooted questions.

There is much discussion at present of "Intiative and Referendum" for civil government. Many of our members are interested in these measures. It might be well to try them, cautiously perhaps, upon some questions that have agitated us in the past. The amendments I have proposed give the election of officers, the amendment of constitution and by-laws to the Convention instead of to the executive committee as now. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT,

Honorary Life President of the National W. C. T. U.

A Voice From Louisiana.

DEAR EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—It is not infrequent that your reporters and the officers and organizers of the National W. C. T. U. visit our sunny Southland. That they carry back with them happy reminiscences of their sojourn among us, we have reason to hope from the many kind and pleasant things which, on their return, they have to say about us. They talk of Louisiana's genial climate and perpetual fruits and flowers. They also tell of the gracious and generous hospitality, which, with open hearts and doors is ever ready to welcome them to this land of sunshine and of songbirds. And they never fail to mention the earnest, faithful, loyal women who are at work in the W. C. T. U. of the state. But the highest note of victory reached by Louisiana in her temperance work has not yet been sounded in your columns. I refer to the favor given to scientific temperance by the educated classes of Louisiana. The dense mists of prejudice which, in the more conservative portions of the state have gathered around time-honored customs and usages, are being scattered by the light of science. Scientific temperance has arrested the thought of the intelligent classes.

Many who have been addicted to the use of alcohol in small doses, have been convinced that moderate drinking is detrimental to health. From all quarters of the state the people are asking for greater light upon the laws of wholesome living. Science is more convincing than sentiment. Scientific facts, plainly stated, make a deeper impression than the glowing fancies of fervent oratory. This people who have been famed from afar for their love of what is pleasant and what is beautiful, yet, in matters of morals and temperance will listen eagerly to facts and figures which carry the weight of truth, when they turn jestingly away from flowery diction.

At the recent state convention held in Shreveport, one evening was devoted to scientific temperance. An immense audience, assembled in the spacious court house of that city, listened with sympathy and appreciation for over two hours to the various speakers, many of whom handled the purely scientific side of the alcohol question. And never before have we seen deeper conviction settle upon an audience than upon that occasion.

On the 22nd of this month, in the presence of a large audience assembled at the tabernacle in Monroe, four students from the high schools in the city, competed for a prize for the best essay on "Alcohol and the Narcotics." The prize was given by Mrs. Ruffin, the enterprising local superintendent of narcotics. All of the essays read showed careful study and research on the part of the writers, and thorough training by the teachers.

When we consider that a decade ago meetings like the above could not have been held in the most progressive and cultured city in the state, we might say in the United States, for the simple reason that not only the students in our public schools, but the teachers themselves, were not required to know the nature and effects of alcohol and other narcotics (and if they had been qualified to speak on these subjects, the public would not have been sufficiently interested to listen), we realize the march of the temperance reform, and the increase of general dissemination of scientific knowledge among the people.

Educate, educate! this must be our password through the opening gates of victory to the crowning day of universal temperance.

MRS. WILLIE HOLBROOK MCHENRY.

Temperance in Finland.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It might be of interest to your readers to know a little about the latest temperance movements in my native land, Finland. A new and remarkable means has been recently introduced there in fighting the drink habit. It has been called, "The alcohol strike," and a strike it is of a new and original character.

At a temperance meeting in a small town in southern Finland, a laborer suggested that a pledge be taken for one year's total abstinence from alcoholic drinks, beginning from the first of May, 1898. The suggestion became popular at once, and a great number of men and women took the pledge that night. This new movement soon spread like wild-fire from place to place, from city to city; meeting after meeting was held, and within a few weeks several thousand had signed the pledge. In Helsingfors, the capital of the country (with a population of about 70,000), a great demonstration was arranged early in the morning of the first of May. Over 10,000 people took part, among them a great number from the educated classes, especially students of the university, and 5,322 people took the pledge.

It has hitherto mainly been the laboring classes who are total abstainers in Finland; among the upper classes "moderate" drinking is practiced a great deal and considered to be quite the proper thing. I am glad to say that this peculiar "strike" has "struck" those moderate drinkers. They feel somewhat ashamed to stand outside of a thing where the laborers have taken such a decided action, and they join them more and more. The idea of taking this pledge for only one year is, as I know my people, a very good one. It will now give them (slow as they are by nature) time to convince themselves of the benefits of total abstinence. They will get a good chance to see the advantage of it to health, economy, peace and pleasure in their home life, and even if a number of weak souls should return to their former bad habits, as they probably will, the majority will remain non-alcoholists and a great deal of good is gained.

Yours in the white-ribbon work,

JENNY ERICSON.

Temporary Address Carlisle, Pa.

Local Union.

QUESTION.—How may the W. C. T. U. best utilize the Fourth of July for the presentation of its principles?

ANSWER.—First, resolve that the day shall be utilized. It is so much easier to let it go by default than it is to rouse to a supreme effort to set it apart for temperance and for righteousness. It is true that a Fourth of July celebration involves much work, and that at a time of year when one feels least like working, and yet, if we do not redeem the day for temperance, who will do it? The drunkenness and revelry which run riot in too many communities are mute witnesses of the awful need for this redemption. Let us claim this day as our very own, and never rest content without some effort to make it the manifestation of our principles and of our work.

In some cases it may be possible for the local union to coöperate with the churches or with other societies in a grand temperance celebration. In such instances no suggestions are necessary, as the program would be arranged by a joint committee. Let the white ribbon be in evidence, however, even in a celebration which is not distinctly your own. Some booth or corner can surely be set aside for the W. C. T. U., and pen, ink, pledge cards and literature should occupy conspicuous places there. At no hour in the day should that corner be left without some woman who is using her utmost endeavor to secure signatures to the pledge and to disseminate the principles of temperance and righteousness. Rich trophies will surely be won by such effort.

But suppose the local union is solely responsible for the celebration? What then?

1. The day should be pre-empted long enough in advance to make well nigh impossible the holding of a counter-celebration on the part of "our friend, the enemy." To this end the sympathy of pastors, husbands, sons, brothers and friends should be enlisted, and their cordial coöperation secured. This can, in the majority of cases, be done, if only we set about it in the right way. Never let it appear that the union is being opposed by any one except our openly avowed enemy. In any town which is cursed by a licensed saloon, let it be firmly resolved, and let the saloonkeeper be given to understand that that part of the license law relating to the closing of the saloon on holidays will be rigidly enforced. Surely in any reputable community public sentiment can be aroused to this pitch for one day out of three hundred and sixty-five.

2. As to place. If the saloons are closed no better place could be found for the celebration than the village green or a grove close at hand. If the saloons are open go as far away as can be made convenient for transportation. Perhaps one of the best uses of a celebration in a town in which the saloon is left open would be to take far away from it the material it must consume if its nefarious work is to go on.

3. The nature of the celebration. It may be purely educational and recreative or there may be a thought for financial benefit as well. In the latter instance the first two named features should not be crowded out by the last. The highest aim should always be to put before the community a higher ideal of patriotism and of citizenship. To that end enlist the children. Let you L. T. L. have a prominent place in the program. Interest the children of the Sunday-schools; indeed, the Sunday-schools as bodies. Singing contests have been found most helpful to that end.

Since July Fourth is the birthday of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt as well as of our nation, it is especially fitting that the work of scientific temperance instruction should be emphasized. An interesting drill could be arranged for the children of the various grades in the public school, or of the several schools if there are more than one in the town. A medal contest would be invaluable both as an educator and as an interesting feature in the day's program. If the children have already been utilized as representatives of the Sunday-school, day school or L. T. L., a matron's contest would surely prove a pleasing feature. Thus a celebration of interest and profit can be arranged without importing a noted orator, provided there be not enough money at the disposal of the local union to make such an importation possible. Of course nothing could be finer than a speech by Clara Hoffman, John G. Woolley, Colonel Bain or others of our well-known speakers. But a speaker can be in but one place on a given day, whereas any number of unions can arrange such a program as is indicated above.

As to subject, I believe temperance in its twofold aspect of total abstinence and prohibition, together with Christian citizenship, should be the keynotes of July 4. Emphasis should be laid upon the obstacles which the liquor traffic and intemperance put in the way of the realization of the true ideal of American liberty. Our other departments may have right of way on other days. Let us claim our nation's birthday for its new, higher birth.

By all means let the recreative features be prominent in your temperance Fourth of July celebration, else you will not win a second time the children and youth. Let swings be upon the grounds, and, if possible, a tennis-court and croquet set. If your town is blessed with kindergartners, let them organize and lead the games for the tiny children. By all means distribute literature, and circulate pledge cards, and let the day be closed with a few well-chosen words in which the difference between a celebration with, and a celebration without alcohol, shall be emphasized. Sing "America" with a royal will, but sing, too, "For God and Home and Native Land," and press down deep into the hearts of those who are gathered with you that they can never love America until they are willing to unite to free it from its greatest curse, the legalized liquor traffic.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith? Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear.—Mark 4:40: Isa. 59:1.

What a pity all good people cannot see eye to eye, that they allow preconceived prejudice to warp their judgment, which finally leads them by tongue or pen to do a grevious wrong to a noble undertaking. Alas, how often the cause of the Temple has been wounded in the house of its friends. The latest blow it has received is from the pen of the state president of the W. C. T. U. of Connecticut in the June number of the White Ribbon Banner, the state organ.

We feel that at this critical time, when we are employing every method to complete the $300,000 to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds, all wrong impressions that would prejudice white-ribboners, and other temperance friends from giving to our cause, should be removed.

Mrs. Forbes first states that she has always been opposed to the Temple. She says: "The nature of the reform for which we are working does not warrant the erection of costly buildings even for memorials." The Temple, when first erected, was not built as a memorial, but as Headquarters for our great organization and as an investment that would bring in a revenue for both the National and state W. C. T. U. with which to push their work. The evils we are fighting is the growth of centuries; the reform, therefore, should have a strong material foundation, as the battle will be a long one. She says: "The financial obligations of such a vast project would cripple our legitimate work." We can prove that the unions that have given to the Temple are true ones, and have not been crippled but rejuvenated by so doing.

"It has been," she goes on to say, "a divisive factor from the first." If she and a few others had withdrawn their opposition, there would have been no division on the subject. "A memorial should, as it seems to me," she says, "stand upon ground which is owned, not leased." Surely two hundred years ought to be a long enough ownership even for a memorial, beside, we have every reason to believe it will yet be donated to us. She says: "The financial status of the Temple is not fully understood, many believing that when the $300,000 is raised, we shall own the Temple." We must say, if there is any white-ribboner thus ignorant, she cannot understand the English language. She says: "The Temple originally cost $1,200,000." Its exact cost was $1,265,000.

"The W. C. T. U. put $200,000 into it," says Mrs. Forbes. Yes, they and the friends of temperance. She adds: "It has taken $184,000 to secure $15,300 in stocks and bonds." In this she is greatly mistaken; we have other assets beside stock and bonds, amounting, probably, with cash on hand, to $75,000. We have paid out of the above $200,000 referred to—about $90,000 to Temple Trust Bond holders. This they are now refunding in pledges towards the $300,000 bonded indebtedness, of which we have now gotten over $200,000. She says: "The time is limited for raising this fund to July, 1898." Yes, but no doubt Mr. Field will extend the time on account of the distraction caused by the war, which has greatly hindered the raising of the fund.

"Furthermore," she says, "to make the Temple a suitable memorial to Miss Willard, the W. C. T. U. must own it." In this we agree with her perfectly. "After the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds," she says, "there is still according to the trustees, $825,000 to be raised, plus $15,000 overdue on building bonds, plus $25,000 floating debt, a total of $865,000." Again she is in error. The trustees' statement is: After the Temple Trust Bonds are paid off, $725,000 will put us in possession of the entire capital stock of $600,000, and pay off the bonded mortgage on the building of $600,000. As to the floating debt, $5,000 was paid off on it lately, reducing it to $20,000. It is true we are behind $15,000 on the interest on the building bonds, but as the rent roll is again increasing, we will soon catch up and pay that off; $740,000 is all that will be required to be raised after we pay off the Temple Trust Bonds.

Mrs. Forbes goes on to give figures in regard to the expense of running the building last year, and the amount of rentals. As I am writing this in New York and not in Chicago, I can not verify her statement, not having the exact data with me. I only know that the deficit of which she speaks, accrued in a few years during our hard times and that there has not been a deficit every year since the completion of the Temple, as she states. We have paid the running expenses of the building from the rentals, besides a floating debt of $45,000 and interest on the bonded mortgage of $210,000, making just $255,000 of profit from the rentals, over running expenses, for the six years it has been occupied. Which if times had been as good as when the building was first occupied, would have brought the rentals over and above running expenses to $500,000.

It is true, as she says, that it is not all rented. But think of the terrible six years of financial distress this country has seen. People had to contract their offices into smaller quarters, and rents went away down. But the turn has come, and better times smile upon us. So, on for Willard Temple and its entire ownership.

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Coals of Fire.

NELLIE stood by the kitchen-table watching mamma make a cake. It was a bright, clear Saturday morning, and almost any other time Nellie would have been outdoors at play, but she was very much interested in something mamma was doing, so she preferred to stay in the kitchen and watch her.

Mamma had been making gingerbread cakes, and just now she was decorating a most remarkable gingerbread soldier. He was a very fierce-looking soldier, with his features plainly defined in pink and white icing, and a row of buttons down the front of his coat, with epaulets that gave him a very martial air.

"Oh! Oh! he's just beau-tiful!" exclaimed Nellie, in delight, as mamma put in the finishing touch, by giving him a heavy mustache. "Oh, isn't he a splendid coal of fire?"

Mamma laughed, as if she thought the soldier was a very funny coal of fire, but she knew what Nellie meant. Yesterday the little girl had come home from school in tears to tell her mamma how hard she had been working to get her examples for Monday done that afternoon that she might have all Saturday to herself, and just when she got them finished, with the answers all correct, her deskmate rubbed a wet sponge over the slate and spoiled all her work.

"Wasn't it too mean for anything?" she said, angrily. "I do think Mary Neil is just the meanest, hate—"

"Hush, dear," said mamma, gently.

"Well, mamma, it's every word of it true," insisted Nellie. "And I'm just going to pay her back, so I am. I wish I knew of some way."

"Perhaps I can help you," said mamma.

Nellie forgot to cry, in her amazement, and she stared at her mother with wide open eyes. She could scarcely believe her ears. Was her mother actually going to help her revenge herself upon Mary for her unkind act?

But mamma's next words made her meaning plain. It was not in the way that Nellie had expected that she was going to help her.

"Suppose you try the effect of 'coals of fire'?" suggested mamma.

"I'd like to if they were real, live, burning coals," she answered; "but I know you don't mean that. You mean that I must do something kind to her; but indeed, mamma, it wouldn't do her any good. She's always teasing me, and it wouldn't make her a bit better to be kind to her."

"Have you ever tried it?" asked mamma.

"No'm," answered Nellie.

"Then suppose you try, just once."

"Well, I'll try, but I know just what it will amount to," answered Nellie, very positively.

"I'll tell you what would be a nice coal," she exclaimed, after a minute's thought. "Won't you make me a lovely gingerbread cake to give her, like the ones you always make us on Saturday? She hasn't got any mother, you know, and her aunt never makes her anything nice."

So mamma made the gingerbread soldier the next morning when she was doing her Saturday baking, and Nellie was actually anxious for Monday morning to come that she might see Mary's surprise when she should give it to her. She was surprised to find how her angry feelings were fast disappearing, and Monday morning, when she carefully wrapped up her soldier and started off to school, she watched for Mary as eagerly as if she had been her best friend.

When she reached the schoolhouse she found that Mary was already there, putting her desk in order. Nellie slipped quietly up behind her and put the soldier in her hands.

Mary gave an exclamation of delighted surprise, and then looked around to see who had given her the cake.

"Don't you like it?" said Nellie, smiling brightly. "My mamma made it Saturday on purpose for me to give you."

For a moment Mary did not answer, then she threw her arms around Nellie's neck.

"I'm just ashamed to take it, after I have been so mean to you," she whispered. "But I won't ever, ever tease you again as long as I live."

Nellie returned her embrace warmly, delighted at the results of the "coals of fire," and the two little girls soon became warm friends, instead of quarreling and finding fault with each other as they had been in the habit of doing.

I wish that every little boy and girl could be persuaded to try Nellie's plan when they have a grievance against any of their little companions, and I am sure that they will find it the best way.

With the Children.

BY AMY LEONARD.

"I WISH I had known this morning that you were going Maying after school," said Annie Reed, "now I can't go; you couldn't wait for me to go home and ask mother. I am real sorry."

"Wouldn't your mother like a bunch of the sweet arbutus?"

"Oh, yes, she likes it very much, but I couldn't go and she not know where I was."

"But when you came home with the pretty flowers she'd know where you'd been."

"She wouldn't like it, if I brought her a peck of Mayflowers."

"Well, I think your mother is too funny altogether; a real old maid, I say."

Then the party went off laughing at Eva's wit, as they called it, and Annie went home a little sad. When she told about it she asked if her mother was not rather too strict, and said, "Eva can go when and where she wants to; wouldn't it be nice to have so much liberty?"

"No, I think not; for children to have great liberty sometimes causes great misery. Children that have this great freedom that you think so desirable seldom make the best women and men. You ought to be very thankful for a mother who wishes to know where you are, and if you obey now when you are a little girl you will obey God as you grow older, and you will find that 'Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace.'"

And Eva told Annie the next day, she didn't have a good time for Katy Brown got mad and pulled her flowers away.

Children who think that to always do as you please makes one happy, should read about Nero, one of the most wicked of Roman emperors, who was allowed his own way when he was a child and given everything he desired. His mother, the fair Agrippina, did not try to control him: neither his tutor, Seneca, who though very learned, yet was very foolish. So he grew up very bad; went into all sorts of drink and vice, and at a little over thirty years of age, took his own life to escape from his evil wretchedness.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—You will all be interested in the letter from little Stewart M. Stout, who wishes to exchange cotton seed for flower seeds of various kinds. Many of you have never seen cotton in bloom, and it will be an interesting experience for you to try to raise it. It looks "good enough to eat," like soft, white snowballs, and is really ornamental as well as useful. Cotton enters so largely into the manufacture of much of our clothing that you would be interested in looking up the habits of the plant, how it is grown, etc. When you write to Stewart for the seed, ask him to tell you just how to care for it, and then you must tell me what success you have.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR COZY CORNERERS:—How many of you have seen cotton grow? The flower is cream color, and then turns pink. I will send a packet of cotton seed to any one who will send me any kind of flower seed. I love flowers, and I am a temperance boy. I can read in first reader and print in capitals. I set type on sister's paper, The Midget.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to be one of your nephews. I am a little boy eight years old, and I hardly ever chew gum. I do not drink tea or coffee. We haven't any L. T. The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Noblesse Oblige.

THE hour is five o'clock in the afternoon. The place is a waiting-room of a suburban station on the lake side of Chicago. The annual northeast winds have set in, and at this moment are blowing with keen and cutting force in fitful gusts against the door of the waiting-room, forcing it wide open. With each swing of the door the occupants are deluged with a wave of piercing cold. A mother with her babe in her arms is sitting where the chilling draft strikes her with full force, causing her to cast frowning glances at the door, which she attempts to close once or twice, only to see it swing open again and again, as if in league with the wind. A young woman has taken refuge behind the gas stove, so comfortable herself as to be quite oblivious to the suffering of others. Two stalwart laborers, whose bronzed cheeks show that they are accustomed to the roughest weather, pay no more attention to the searching winds than does the self-conscious little railroad official whose duty evidently does not include the closing of swinging doors.

At this juncture a sixth person stepped in who took in the situation at once. While feeling the cold as much as any one, she promptly determined to shut it out, if possible. Her quiet experiments, however, were quickly interrupted by the man with the lettered cap, who seemed to think her good intentions were out of place, endangering the property of the company. "And besides," said he, "there is no use in trying to close the door; it can not be done."

In answer to Sir Oracle's assertion, the latest comer took up a newspaper, folded it compactly and clamped it between the door and the frame, thus effectually shutting out the cold, greatly to the comfort of all present. The mother with the babe bestowed a look of gratitude, while the crestfallen official had nothing to say.

Every community is exposed to the blighting blasts of misery and death eminating directly from the saloon, a storm that blows the year round, threatening at any moment to rise to the force of a cyclone. The ones who suffer most directly and terribly from this evil are not always equal to the task of subduing it, however great their indignation. Turning to another class, the men of brawn and rude strength, the force they have is too much like that of the blind Samson, and there is a lack of quick sympathy and deep feeling. "It takes a soul to move a body, it takes a high-souled man to move the masses." Another class, like the girl behind the stove, are so in love with ease and luxury, they live so far apart from their less fortunate fellowmen, as to be quite oblivious to their misery. The petty railroad official represents the sordid commerical spirit that is without sentiment, or humanity, having an eye single only to profit and routine, saying in effect, "Business interests are paramount, and besides, the evil of which you complain can never, never be abolished."

Meanwhile, here are the precious groups of tender ones shivering and suffering in the blast, whose unhappy condition imperatively demands the destruction of the evil—is there left any one who is in duty bound to become the deliverer? Yes, it is that large and influential class of persons typified by the lady who closed the waiting-room door, the Christian people of intelligence, resolution and character. The possession of the means and ability of rescue, constitutes the highest call of duty in case of need, and how great is the need! Noblesse oblige. The number of God's noblemen and noblewomen is sufficiently large to shut the door against the saloon in every hamlet, city and state of the Union. The eternal dilemma confronts every strong soul born into the world. Shall I leave things as I find them, avoid what is unpleasant and seek only my own comfort and profit? Or, shall I become a volunteer in the great army of reform? Active reform work is not a matter of whim or officiousness, as some thoughtless people imagine, but a deep necessity of every generous and noble nature. By an inexorable law of our being, the man or woman who hears the inner voice of duty and heeds it not, God may give them their request, but He sends leanness into their souls. "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel," saith St. Paul. But when the call is heartily and resolutely obeyed, the richest personal blessings and the greatest satisfaction are secured.

Mint, Anise and Cummin.

THE criticism which has been made upon the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the union of Nebraska, because they did not abandon their intention to be represented at the Omaha Exposition after the fact was made known that liquor was to be sold upon the grounds has opened up to our thought an old, and yet perennially new, topic. It is the problem of the ages: What shall be the attitude of the forces of righteousness toward the forces of unrighteousness? Two courses are possible; to withdraw wholly from contact with evil, or to submit to contact in a supreme effort to permeate and overcome evil with good. The first method was adopted by the monks of the Middle Ages; the second by their Master. Which of the two should be chosen by the faithful followers of Christ to-day each must judge for himself; only after the judgment has been made, "Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not."

The friends who would have boycotted the Exposition claim that by going there the W. C. T. U. are countenancing, and thus indirectly lending their influence to the sale of liquor upon the grounds of the Exposition. The argument seems to us to prove too much, and would, if pushed to its logical conclusion, drive temperance work and temperance workers out of the vast majority of the cities and towns in our nation; indeed, out of all save a few spots. None can regret more than does the Woman's Christian Temperance Union the fact that the sale of liquor has been licensed at Omaha.

The Nebraska women entered upon a vigorous campaign, the National officers petitioned and threw the force of their influence in the balance against this complicity with evil, but were defeated. What then? Shall they, having been defeated, therefore relinquish all work for temperance in a place affording such wide opportunities for the dissemination of our principles? Such action would, it seems to us, be exactly in accordance with the enemy's desire. Such action would have made it impossible for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union ever to exist, for our Crusade mothers would have laid down their arms as soon as it became apparent to them that what they had striven for with herculean effort was not accomplished. "Where sin abounds, grace should much more abound." Because the licensed saloon is to be a feature of the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition, there is so much the more reason why temperance forces should gather there, and why the utmost should be done to offset the iniquitous work of that licensed saloon.

After all, when one considers the question carefully is there not a splitting of hairs on these points? If the government of the United States protects the saloon, and we are citizens of the United States, does it so much matter whether that licensed saloon exists in Alaska or in Chicago, at an exposition, or down a back alley? It is one people, one flag, one nation, and if we were to drive the liquor traffic out of every state and city in the Union save one, the fact that it existed in that one, under the protection of the law, would be a blot upon our nation's escutcheon, and so far as we were accessories to its existence, whether through silence or through vote, the blot would be upon us as individuals as well. Perhaps we need an occasional object lesson of this nature to show us that one spot can not be really clean until all are cleansed, that the degradation of one becomes the degradation of all.

Our duty as a people, and as temperance workers, in particular, is not to sit down and bemoan defeats, but to rise from every defeat with a strong determination to fight the saloon in the stronghold of its power, the national government itself; and when we shall have won that battle, then exposition grounds, city streets and country lanes will be alike safe and free. And to our thought one of the best ways for carrying on this warfare lies in entering every open door, in going to the places where the power makes itself most manifest, and there, by distributing temperance literature, by circulating pledge cards, by delivering addresses, and by all other means fighting till the death.

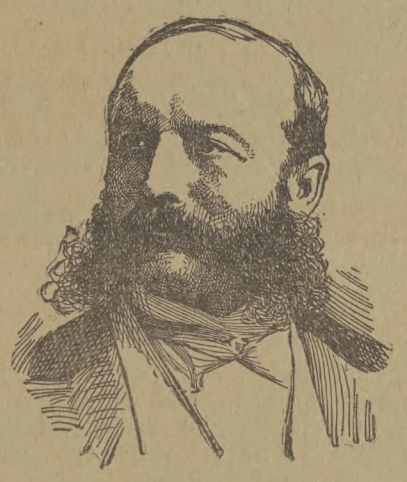
If the Woman's Christian Temperance Union goes to Omaha, it will go there to hold up the white banner of temperance and purity. Who will say that it would be better for the Exposition, and for our nation as a whole, if we were to stay away? Let him who would say this be logical, and let the plan be at once unfolded for deporting the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as a body outside the territory of the United States! Doubtless it is a matter of great importance that the sale of liquor be prohibited in such places. Doubtless, also, it is a thing of infinitely greater importance that it be prohibited throughout the length and breadth of our country. To live in America without protest and refuse to work in Omaha because liquor is sold there, reminds one strikingly of the Master's words, "Ye tithe mint, anise and cummin, and omit the weightier matters of the law."

The Union Signal Arraigned.

PRINTED documents have lately been received at this office containing among others an article headed, "Open Letter No. 2," in which amendments to the World's constitution are proposed, the purity and temperance questions as related to Lady Henry Somerset are traversed once more, and THE UNION SIGNAL is arraigned as not being fair to both sides of mooted questions for many years past.

The memory of the oldest editor does not run back many years, but does extend beyond the instances offered in support of the assertion of unfairness; viz., that nothing was allowed in THE UNION SIGNAL in opposition to Lady Henry Somerset in the matter of her letter to Lord George Hamilton concerning the Indian Army or in regard to her re-election as vice-president-at-large of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union; and that Mrs. Butler's letter of resignation as World's superintendent of the department of purity was not given a place while the letter of acceptance by her successor was.

THE UNION SIGNAL wishes to say that it never declined any articles upon the Indian Army question. It printed all that were offered and solicited others from the highest authorities. It never declined anything on the subject as related to the re-election of Lady Henry Somerset except one document which had already been printed and distributed broadcast, which was a good and sufficient reason for not using it, as THE UNION SIGNAL almost never reprints except for the children. But other and more important reasons were given to the author at the time. At the same time she was assured that we would have been glad to have an article from her discussing the principles involved in the question then of great interest. She was also reminded of previous invitations to contribute to THE UNION SIGNAL, but she did not and has not responded. Mrs. Butler's letter of resignation was not offered to THE UNION SIGNAL, was never seen by the editors, and therefore could not have been refused space. Dr. Mary Wood-Allen's letter of acceptance as successor to Mrs. Butler was printed because it was sent to us by her with a request to that effect. We might pin home a point here by saying that people who wish articles published should send them direct to THE UNION SIGNAL and not take it for granted that because they go to the National or World's headquarters they will reach us. Important papers go on file in those offices, and the officers can not undertake to prepare copy for THE UNION SIGNAL.



The open letter referred to also leaves its readers to infer that the incorrect numbering of the articles of the World's constitution as they appeared in a proposition to change them, made through THE UNION SIGNAL some weeks ago, was a blunder of the paper, whereas copy as received was followed exactly. Another article on amending the World's constitution is found in our correspondence columns this week, which is the exception to prove our rule about not reprinting, for since it was accepted by us, it has appeared in a number of newspapers and in Open Letter No. 2. We give notice that hereafter the rule holds good.

We have no disposition to pursue this subject further or to take up at present, anything else included in the printed budget sent out to the unions with the request that they get the articles published in as many daily and weekly newspapers as possible and circulate among their friends —except to say this: It is customary for our National officers, the World's, and indeed, those of all organizations, to send out their propaganda as a unit. It never has occurred as yet in the W. C. T. U. that any one officer on her own responsibility and without advice or consultation should go straight over the heads of all the others and promulgate her own ideas and make appeals on her own responsibility. We are glad that if this had to be, that it was left for an honorary officer to do it, though the assumption is even more stupendous. In the realms of government such an act would be called by a harsh name.

Another Prophet Ascended.

EX-CONGRESSMAN ELIJAH A. MORSE, whose recent death is the loss of a general to the temperance army, was indeed a prophet Elijah, as compared to other millionaires and congressmen, most of whom are tipplers, and very few, indeed, agressive leaders of any moral reform. In Congress Hon. Morse was the one man who made temperance reform and other Christian reforms a specialty. Many others could be relied upon to vote for them, but gave their chief energy to money measures. Like Hon. Hiram Price and Hon. H. W. Blair, he was regarded in Congress as the reform soloist.

Gladstone, the greatest of statesman, declared it to be the chief purpose of law "to make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right," and the men named devoted their true statesmanship to making such laws. But the judiciary committee, which deals with measures, is about fifth choice, and the committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic about fortieth in the scramble for committee assignments. The present chairman of the judiciary, according to Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, had struggled hard to get the chairmanship of the appropriations committee instead, and the chairman of the committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic would have greatly preferred even the tail of the appropriations committee. One of the other members of the committee explains its four failures to get a quorum on the ground that it is regarded as one of the least of the committees, not recognizing that the liquor problem merely as an economic question towers gigantic above tariff and silver.

What is being done to send such men as Mr. Morse to Congress this autumn? Congressmen who have not lifted a finger to help the Gladstonian measures pending relating to liquors, lust, lotteries, divorce, cigarets and prize fights, will be sent back to Congress in many cases, no doubt, with no question from any constituent as to what they have done or propose to do on these matters that history shows to be questions of life and death to nations. Aye, and Christian voters will, in many cases, help to send back congressmen who have been champions of evil measures. If Christian men cannot yet run the primaries, let them make the most of the "landslide" and the lobby. Let Christian citizenship use the ballot-box and mail-box as its mitrailleuse to overthrow social foes and establish righteousness in politics.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Alice Sudduth, National superintendent flower mission; Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, treasurer of the Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital and others, visited Miss Willard's grave, flower mission day, after the National officers and editors of THE UNION SIGNAL had been there, as spoken of last week, and left additional quantities of choice flowers, which helped to make the spot one of exquisite beauty and fragrance.

Mr. Edward Page Gaston, brother of Lucy Page Gaston, has traveled extensively in this country, and is now undertaking a trip around the world. He carries letters of introduction from the National officers and others. He has acquired note as a lecturer upon Mexico, Cuba, etc., and among his themes Christian citizenship and temperance have a place. His permanent address is 153 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. We can promise our readers an occasional correspondence from him.

Some of our readers well remember Miss Willard's most happy introduction of Rev. Dwight Williams at Toronto, and his unique little speech to the Convention. A letter from his son, Dwight Williams, Jr., comes to us saying that his father passed away peacefully, June 13, at his home in Cazenovia, N. Y. Rev. Williams was a contributor to THE UNION SIGNAL for many years. He cast the first vote for prohibition in Madison county, and was the first candidate for Secretary of State on the Prohibition party national ticket, and was elector-at-large in 1884. He devoted his time largely to the cause of reform as inaugurated by American women. His literary productions were delicate and often exquisite. THE UNION SIGNAL feels that it has lost a choice spirit, and offers its sympathy to the bereaved family and friends.

Mrs. C. R. Goodale-Fairchild, corresponding secretary of Orange county, New York, writes us that Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, president of the same county, and herself, addressed Governor Black in behalf of the county union, in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors to the soldiers, and that the governor's private secretary answered at once in a most polite and cordial manner, assuring them that the governor would interest himself immediately, and thanked them for the interest they had taken in the lives of the soldiers of the nation. Mrs. Goodale adds, "Think of it, sisters, the time has come when we are officially thanked for our interest in the affairs of the nation! Verily we have reason to be thankful, take courage, and move forward. All honor and thanks to Governor Black and his secretary who wrote us the second letter assuring us that the edict had gone forth that no intoxicating liquors should be sold in the state camps."

Mr. A. J. Beveridge, of Indianapolis, made a remarkably fine speech upon the occasion of the presentation of Miss Willard's bust to the Northwestern University. Among other things he said: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the world is one of the marvels of creation of constructive genius. Other great organizers have had something to begin with—a party, a government, an army, a treasury. But this queen of organization had nothing but her cause, her ability and her imperial will." We are promised the address for THE UNION SIGNAL. Mr. F. P. Crandon, represented the trustees, and spoke at length of Miss Willard's public life, and linked her name with that of Orrington Lunt, the one as the chief factor in the foundation of the University, and the other as the chief factor in making it co-educational. He spoke of the artistic skill with which the marble bust had been wrought, and quoted the words of an old sculptor, "It lacks only the power of speech."

Young Woman's Branch.

A Grand Temperance Rally.

THE mammoth chorus organized by the Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union, which has been rehearsing under the direction of Professor Bilhorn for some time, will lead a great rally for temperance at the Auditorium in Chicago, on Tuesday evening, June 28. Rev. Dr. Henson and other noted Chicago orators will make addresses, and the walls of the greatest audience room in the city will ring with temperance sentiments sung by a thousand enthusiastic young people. This rally is the opening gun in a campaign to be waged by the young men and women of Chicago against the saloons.

Y's at Work.

WISCONSIN.

WE have just returned from our annual state convention, and I feel constrained to inform all our dear girls of the facts which rejoice the heart and inspire to greater activity. We have not only a slight increase in the number of Y's and in the membership throughout the state, but there seems to be an increase in interest for the extension of the work among our young people, which gives sufficient reason for expecting a large ingathering this ensuing year.

Our Y unions at Green Bay are most loyal and faithful in good works, the most telling, perhaps, of which is the L. T. L. work, which has been carried on with great success, and the contest work. Then let me not forget their timely efforts for the sailors, among whom they have distributed fifteen packages of literature and the same number among jails, poorfarms, etc.; have sent a large box to lumber camps; have made five scrapbooks for children in hospitals. All this indicates that these are stirring Y's who find time to lift a helping hand and are made happy in doing for others.

The Willard Y of the Milwaukee county hospital, at Wauwatosa, is composed of consecrated Christian nurses! They are twenty in number, and since their organization last December have pledged more than sixty patients, both men and women, blue bows of ribbon being tied to those signing. They write that many of these patients are from the lowest class of society, among whom are found girls who had taken their first step downward by accepting liquor in a beer garden, or similar public places. Games are introduced in the wards for convalescent patients, this to offset the tendency to card-playing. Most of the labors of these sisters is evangelical. They hold many gospel meetings and distribute temperance literature.

Most of the organizing this year has been carried on in Monroe county, where Miss Mattie Lambertson, county secretary, has organized four unions; Oakdale, Valley Junction, Tomah, Tunnel City. All excepting the last were organized during the months of March and April. These unions include many young men, some of whom are superintendents of departments, and we may hope to hear much from their efforts in the near future.

Tunnel City Y was organized last September and has done work in several departments, social purity, flower mission, anti-cigaret and evangelistic being included. Their main efforts have been directed toward defeating the saloons in that place for this coming year. Local prohibition won by a twelve majority, and they feel thankful and happy that God has given them the victory. Yours for the cause,

(MRS.) LOUISE HELMUTH UREN,
State Y Secretary.

DEAR Y WORKERS:—Please notice that my address after June 24, and until further notice, will be 254 Suydam St., New Brunswick, N. J. All remittances for the fund should be sent to this address.

Money has reached me from twelve states. I hope every union which has not yet contributed will send speedily, even though the amount be small.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having been appointed colonial superintendent of literature and reporter for THE UNION SIGNAL at the last annual convention, I am now sending my first report. Owing to illness in the family, I have been somewhat delayed.

Shortly after convention, Mrs. Kirk, our beloved secretary, returned safely from England and America, full of zeal and energy for the white-ribbon movement.

We are steadily going forward, and trust that God's blessing may crown our efforts. Victoria has bid farewell to Mrs. Pearse, who is leaving for America. She was an active worker. Her loving face and words of exhortation and counsel will always be remembered by those who had the privilege of knowing her.

We have been honored by a visit from Mrs. J. K. Barney, the World's prison evangelist, who held a series of meetings in Victoria. Her persuasive eloquence and earnestness created an impression that will not fade, and has added numbers to our ranks. Our members were greatly cheered and encouraged by her remarks. The press spoke in highest terms of her abilities as a public speaker.

The Frances Willard Club is doing good work among our young girls wherever it has been started.

Meetings suitable to the requirements of the town where unions are located have been held. One union has started a new department, individual letter writing.

Our hearts were filled with the deepest sorrow at the sad news of Miss Willard's death which came across the sea. March 20 the memorial service was conducted in the various churches in the colony, and reported by the press. We thank God that He sent Miss Willard for a time, and pray that we may be as faithful in our service "for God and home and humanity."

SINCE the February issue of THE UNION SIGNAL came to hand, bringing intelligence of the fatal termination of our beloved leader's sickness, we have thought much about the consecrated life which has been lifted away from us, up into the light of God's presence. The startling news smote us like a blow; and so intensely was "the wish the father to the thought" that some of us almost dared to hope we should find the news untrue. While fully recognizing that with God no loss is irreparable, we yet keenly feel that woman's work and woman's interests all the world over have received one of the most inscrutable dispensations it has ever pleased Providence to permit; and "earth is all the poorer since she went." Yet from her ashes may some sister-spirit rise, endowed with sweetness and enlightenment such as she possessed. Among the churches here a very gratifying recognition of her qualities of mind and heart has been shown in the various memorial sermon-sketches, and our hearts have been deeply touched by those tributes to the worth of our precious saint. Some of us cherished the pleasant dream of seeing her and giving her a practical proof of our appreciation, but now we must get into the great Beyond before we can clasp her hand. We all feel a sense of loss, and draw a little nearer to each other, like a band of sisters in a household when the gentle mother has been taken. We will love and be loyal to any blessed woman who may succeed her, but our first mother, our peerless "F. E. W.," our now crowned queen, will have precedence in our hearts forever!

On May 2 our colonial union held its special memorial service. The program, a dainty booklet of eight pages, printed in heliotrope, with silver oxford border contained her portrait on first page, a short biographical sketch, Miss Willard's hymn, "On heights of power," and other hymns from the "White Ribbon Hymnal"; a page entitled "The Last Days," culled from THE UNION SIGNAL, and a paragraph or two concerning the funeral services. The service was well attended in the Pirie Street Wesleyan Church, Adelaide. Addresses were given as follows: "Miss Willard as an Educator," F. Chapple, Esq., B. A., B. Sc. (of Prince Alfred College); "Miss Willard as a Woman," Mrs. Hone (colonial recording secretary); "Miss Willard as a Patriot," Rev. A. Metters, (secretary S. A. Alliance); "Miss Willard as a Friend," Mrs. Shearing; "Miss Willard at Home," Rev. Joseph Berry (who met Miss Willard at Rest Cottage); "Her Personal Influence," Rev. G. Davidson; "Miss Willard as a Leader," Miss George (colonial corresponding secretary).

We are trusting and praying that her "beautiful going away" will touch the hearts of bright girls and earnest women and induce them to join our ranks.

Our colonial president, Mrs. Lyall, is at present out of town in search of health. We trust to see her soon restored to her accustomed activity.

Preparations are being made for an intercolonial competitive examination on temperance physiology, under the scientific temperance department. We are expecting good results from this step, as it will bring the subject prominently before the public.

Our Federation is invaluable as an intercolonial medium, and is gaining approval all along the line. Our Australasian president and her coadjutor, Miss Lockwood (Australasian secretary), take no end of pains with this promising infant, and mean that it shall grow to stalwart youth and reputable maturity.

Our Federal Commonwealth bill is making a little stir in political circles just now, and there is much difference of opinion on the subject, but the ballot will settle it in June.

"Wars and rumors of war" fill the air, even in this antipodean land. We are praying that God may defend the right and give the movement a speedy termination.

Cape Colony.

MEMORIAL services for Miss Willard were held on the 20th March in most of the towns of South Africa where the W. C. T. U. is represented. At the headquarters of the Cape Colony union at Wellington, Goodnow Hall was used for the occasion, being appropriately decorated. The pulpit was draped with white looped with white ribbon. On the platform Miss Willard's portrait stood on an easel, draped with the American and English flags tied together with white ribbon, and flowers wreathed around it. The president of the colonial W. C. T. U. presided, and several of those present gave personal reminiscences of Miss Willard, while those unavoidably prevented from being present sent their messages. In the evening the memorial services were concluded with appropriate music, and a sermon from the last clause of Esther 4: 14: "And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." In Port Elizabeth the memorial service was held in the town hall, at four P. M., the address being given by the president of the local union.

The elections for the upper house of parliament have lately taken place with satisfactory results as far as temperance is likely to be concerned. The Innes Liquor Bill, a measure for prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives under certain conditions, may now have a chance to pass, as it has hitherto been lost by only very narrow minorities. As yet Cape Colony is the only country in South Africa where the natives are not protected in this way; perhaps the fact of its being the only wine and brandy producing one may account for this, as the cry is, where shall we find a sale for our liquor if the natives cannot buy it? Petitions for the repeal of the C. D. Acts will again be presented this session, and it remains to be seen how our new legislators will deal with this bill, it also having been lost in the past by very narrow minorities. As regularly as the years come round the W. C. T. U. here begins its weary tramp for signatures in support of these two bills.

I have lately visited Burghersdorp and Aliwal North, at both of which places there are unions, though small ones, and several departments of work are thoroughly carried on. At Burghersdorp I was successful in forming a committee who undertook to start a Young Crusader Band there. Aliwal is the most northerly town in the

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

Colony; it is situated on the Orange river. As in most border places, race feeling between the English and Dutch runs high, and in many cases this is a direct hindrance to temperance reform. For instance, the newly elected mayor of Aliwal is an hotel keeper, but as he is an Englishman his countryman supported him rather than vote for the Dutch candidate, although the latter is a well-known temperance advocate.

Aliwal North being noted for its hot mineral springs and bracing air, numbers of consumptives and other invalids are constantly arriving there. As far as possible the W. C. T. U. flower mission superintendent visits these strangers and keeps them supplied with fruit and flowers. Two of the members hold services regularly in the prison, besides visiting the prisoners and distributing literature among them. A booth is always open for the sale of temperance refreshments whenever opportunity occurs, though it has to be specially erected each time. The stands are put up to auction, so any one wishing to show opposition has only to run them up to a high figure. Here, and also at Burghersdorp, I asked and obtained permission to speak on juvenile smoking in the white mission schools, as the teachers informed me that it was the exception to find a boy who did not smoke, and that they find those who do so are invariably stupid. One teacher at Burghersdorp had been driven to make a personal appeal to the shop keepers not to sell it to his pupils, and they were not of the lowest class.

Burghersdorp is the headquarters of the Dutch Dopper church, which is the one dissenting body to the Dutch church of the Colony. Two of the peculiarities of this sect are that they do not sing to music nor admit Good Templars to membership. Good Templars who are already members are threatened with excommunication unless they retract their vows and renounce their order. I do not know if the objection is to the pledge or to the secrecy with which the meetings of the I. O. G. T. are conducted. It can not be that total abstinence is the objection, as President Kruger, of the Transvaal, is well known as a teetotaler, and he is a member of this church.

I have provided myself with a magic lantern which I carry about with me, and find a great aid in attracting and interesting the people, the natives especially being easily reached by it and temperance truths taught by sight as well as by hearing. At Port Elizabeth I gave an illustrated lantern lecture at a large open air meeting, the slides simply being shown on a white wall. Hundreds came and went in the course of the evening, as well as numbers who remained stationary. The crowd was most interested and attentive, and seemed not to want to lose a single word.

At the annual agricultural show at Port Elizabeth a large sum of money was raised for the W. C. T. U. Children's Home, which will shortly be built there. Friends and well wishers gave a large part of the provisions and dozens of ladies helped in their sale. In March a "Tennyson" concert was given by the Y's to supplement the funds, every item in the program being from Tennyson.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

THE seventh annual convention met in King City, May 20–23. The people gave us a royal welcome and in nearly every business house was "Welcome, W. C. T. U.," made of everything imaginable, vegetables, oranges, candy, neckties and even silver dollars. The convention was welcomed in behalf of the citizens by Professor Powell; by the young people, Charles Ward; by the clergy, Rev. Grossman, and by the unions, Mrs. Jennie Williams. They were responded to by Mrs. Julia Price Towns and Miss Carrie Lee Carter, after which the banners were presented to the unions gaining the most in membership and holding the most contests. Both banners were won by the Martinsville union and they had four delegates present to receive them, who were introduced to the audience by Mrs. Callie Hoover Howe.

All the business sessions were interesting and every one praised the president, Mrs. Lura Hyden Boleyn. Through her able efforts this district was made the "banner" at the last state convention, and she is truly loved by her "children," as she calls them, and they voted to give her $150 a year as a little love token. Her address was fine and it was printed in full in the daily. Saturday evening Miss Carrie Lee Carter addressed a crowded house on "Mind your own business." Sunday morning Mrs. Callie Howe spoke in the Presbyterian church and Miss Carter in the C. P. church, and in the evening they addressed the congregations in the M. E. and Christian churches. They made many friends for the cause and all pronounced their talks as the very best they ever heard.

Sunday afternoon memorial services were held. Two comrades of the fourth district had been promoted and Mrs. Alta Stevens spoke of them very touchingly. Chas. E. Stokes and Rev. Willis Weaver spoke of Neal Dow, and Miss Carter, Mrs. Howe and Miss Ellen D. Morris of our dear leader, Frances E. Willard.

The singing during the convention was fine. The same officers were re-elected for the ensuing year. The treasurer's report showed nearly one thousand dollars passing through her hands in the eleven months since the last convention. The daily issued during the convention was quite a success. The editor, Wm. Bowman, of the Democrat, is a loyal friend of the white-ribboners, and assists them in every way possible. Miss Ellen D. Morris, the state corresponding secretary, gave many helpful talks during the convention. The talks by superintendents and workers were very interesting. Mrs. Maude Willis-Allen read a splendid paper on franchise. The convention closed Monday night, the 23rd, with the "Missouri Legislature." The convention was a grand success, and though the roads were very muddy and it had been raining hard the first day, over sixty delegates were present.

NINTH DISTRICT.

I have received a lengthy report from this district, and will give as much as I can. The district is full of earnest, enthusiastic temperance workers, and interest in the cause is constantly increasing.

Hannibal is the banner union of the district, having thirty-nine members. This union owns a very substantial chapel building, the lower part of which is rented, and the hall above is handsomely furnished and used for headquarters, where they hold their weekly meetings. The money realized from the rent of their building places the Hannibal union in a most prosperous condition financially. It pays twenty-five dollars for state work and ten dollars for district work. The district convention will be held in Hannibal the last week in June. A most attractive program has been arranged. The convention will close with a gold medal musical contest. The best vocal talent of the four counties will enter this contest, as each union in the district will furnish one solo.

New London union is full of good women and good works. Has twelve paid up members and carries forward nine departments of work; has raised $25 for the Temple; will have an oratorical contest in a few days; has a live, active L. T. L.; sent petitions to congress indorsed by three churches and their societies, also one from the union for anti-cigaret law and a petition to prohibit sale of intoxicants in government building, petitioned against Princeton Inn, petitioned for age of protection in District of Columbia and territories; supplies a column in each of the town papers, about half of which is original; sends THE UNION SIGNAL to each of the ministers and also to headquarters; sent an unfortunate sister to the Hephzibah rescue home in St. Louis; observed Willard memorial services, Neal Dow Prohibition Rally day and special day of prayer. Ten members of the union have subscribed for "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard"; takes the New Crusade and eight copies of the Counselor; was represented at county, district and state conventions.

Monroe City has twelve members with six departments of work, meet weekly, and use the published Bible readings, have mothers' meetings once a month and other meetings with various topics, part of each service appropriated to the study of civil government. As a result of Mrs. Field's visit, an L. T. L. was organized with seventy members and five new names enrolled on the list of members in union. The district convention was entertained in this little city last year and the union was well represented at the state convention.

Center has lately been reorganized through that earnest, eloquent temperance worker, Mrs. Fields. Organized with five members, has since increased to eleven, and interest in temperance work has correspondingly increased. Meetings are held in the elegant I. O. O. F. hall. An L. T. L. was also organized with fifty members. Held public service Easter Sunday, gave a box social May 6, when 200 pages of literature was distributed, and $5.14 was realized, $3 of which was sent to the Temple. They edit a column in the paper each week. The county convention was entertained here the 25th of May. As this union does not appear in the state minutes we give the names of the officers: President, Mrs. Martha Sanford; recording secretary, Mrs. S. A. Sears; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. E. Leake; superintendents press, Mesdames M. A. Ely, J. J. Conn, L. Paxton; flower mission, Mrs. N. Rosser; parlor work, Mrs. N. J. Johnson; unfermented wine, Mrs. J. J. Conn.

Palmyra union makes mothers' meetings one of its special lines of work. They have sixteen members. New superintendents for press work and gospel temperance meetings have been lately appointed. They will have monthly gospel services hereafter. Sent fourteen dollars to the Temple. Beautiful memorial services for Miss Willard were held with remarkably appropriate and artistic floral decorations. A choir of fifty trained voices sang the songs our leader loved. Hon. W. R. Anderson paid a beautiful tribute to Miss Willard. This union has the honor of having for one of its members one of our state leaders, Mrs. J. L. Moore, who has lately made a tour through the ninth, second and sixth districts with admirable success.

Philadelphia union has also a new set of officers. Mrs. Belle Lake is president, Miss Mollie Lake, secretary, and Rev. Mrs. Scott, treasurer. Mothers' meetings are held once a month. This was the banner union of the district in contests last year. It lately held a gold medal musical contest when Mr. Rolla Marshall won the prize. Special attention is given public meetings. They feel they could not have successfully carried on the work had it not been for the kindness and courtesy of the ministers of the four churches, who give them temperance sermons whenever solicited. Mrs. Fields was with this union three days, and the people were delighted with her. They have fourteen members and meet twice a month. This is a small country village, but they have a band of faithful workers who are industriously sowing the seed of temperance principles and are hoping some day an abundant harvest will be reaped.

I want to thank Mrs. M. A. Buchanan, the efficient district president, for the above items, and only regret I could not put in all the good words she said of the workers.

SEVENTH DISTRICT.

Mrs. E. E. Streeter, district superintendent of L. T. L., kindly sends a report of that work in her district. She is very proud of the work done by the legions. One year ago the district president, Mrs. Robbins organized a legion in Plymouth, which numbered only thirteen, and was the first one in the district. Now it has grown to forty. Mrs. Zahner was through the district in February, did much good and formed three other legions, one at Ludlow, numbering about forty, one at Rhodes with about the same membership. At Polo they have one of sixty members though there is no union in the town, but it is the hope of the president to organize one soon through the legion.

The Plymouth L. T. L. gave an entertainment last December, assisted in memorial services, two took part in an essay contest and they are now planning for a contest wholly within the legion, the members ranging in age from ten to thirteen.

FIFTH DISTRICT.

Mrs. Addie Northam Fields has been in this district and they found her an able speaker, enthusiastic and pushing in her work. She delivered lectures and visited schools, speaking to pupils in the following places: Savanna, Bolckow, Barnard, Hopkins, Maryville, Grange Hall, Mt. Carmel, Rock Port, Fairfax, Helena, Quitman, Craig, Tarkio and Magnet. The unions were delighted with her work. She organized an L. T. L. at Barnard, where there is no union. Hopkins, Quitman, Tarkio and three other unions promised to organize. They have had our beloved state president in the district; have had Nodaway county convention, and the joint conventions of Holt and Atchinson, the latter being opened with a lecture from Mrs. Hoffman.

OTHER UNIONS.

Montgomery has filled and sent to the proper ones a Yale College petition; a petition to International Sunday-school committee, asking a continuance of the quarterly temperance lessons, and the cigaret petition. They hold gospel temperance meetings first Sabbath in every month with good results. Do good work in flower mission department, push literature as means of educating the masses in temperance and also do some benevolent work; are arranging for a contest of young ladies, have lately had Mrs. Burger, who gave two very fine lectures that were well received by the people. Held county conference April 26–28, which was full of interest and instruction. Temperance work in Sunday-school department had special observance May 15.

Eldon union has a membership of twenty-eight, and holds regular meetings once a month. The April meeting was devoted especially to mothers with the topic, "Home amusements for children," and proved very helpful. Eldon is free from saloons and the white-ribboners are ever on the alert to keep it so. The ladies have done good work in breaking up the "ballroom" simply by persuading the girls not to attend.

State Reporter, Bethany.

Wisconsin.

THE twenty-fifth convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wisconsin assembled in the First M. E. church, Chippewa Falls, Tuesday A. M., May 24, continuing in session until Thursday evening, May 26. The weather was most propitious; the attendance was good, considering the location of the convention, 103 voting members registered, with many visitors. The union at Chippewa Falls is not large, and it deserves great credit for the royal hospitality tendered us, and we hope for an increase of membership in the local union, as well as enlarged opportunities among the people as results of our stay with them.

Tuesday evening a full house listened with great interest to a diamond medal contest, conducted by our state superintendent of medal contests, Mrs. Lizzie Axon, which reflected great credit upon herself as well as the young people who participated. Miss May Belle Case, daughter of Rev. G. W. Case, D.D., pastor of Lake Street M. E. church, Eau Claire, won the beautiful diamond, which was presented to her with a few appropriate remarks by Mrs. Upham. On Wednesday evening Mrs. Helen M. Barker, of Chicago, gave us a grand lecture on "The Duty of the Hour," which was replete with information and encouragement as well, and we are satisfied it will bear fruit in the oncoming years. The last evening (Thursday) we listened to "our own" Mrs. Edith S. Davis, of Appleton, who held the interest of her audience for an hour and a half as she portrayed the doings of "The Modern Jezebel," and we trust that the "arrest of thought" caused by her burning words, and evidenced by the solemn hush that fell upon her listeners as she ceased speaking, may turn the current of many a life into active hostilities against this "evil spirit."

"Memorial hour," in charge of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, was a never-to-be-forgotten time, when "the touch of the vanished hand" seemed so near, and "the sound of a voice that is still" could almost be heard; the inspiration and revelation vouchsafed each one of us in that hour will abide with us forever. The presence of dear Mrs. Henry was a continual benediction throughout the convention. Our state president, Vie H. Campbell, gave an excellent address—thoughtful and searching—on the questions of the hour, and her report of field activities was a surprise to those of us who knew of the painful accident which made a prisoner of her so many months during the year and from which she still suffers.

For six consecutive years Mrs. Campbell has stood at the head of Wisconsin's white-ribboners, and it was with regret that we learned that she could not stand for re-election. An unending circlet of gold was presented to our sister at this "parting of the ways" as a loving testimonial from those who had so long followed her leadership; she accepted it as a symbol of the love "tie that binds" which can never be broken and which has no end, so, while we said farewell with regret to Mrs. Campbell, our hand lingering lovingly in hers, we "faced about" for the "forward! march!" of our incoming leader, and turned our tear-dimmed eyes toward that bright future which must bring us victory, and said, "All hail!" to Mary C. Upham, our new state president. Mrs. Upham needs no introduction to THE UNION SIGNAL nor to any white-ribboner, as she has been National superintendent of lumbermen for many years, and we predict that she is yet to win fresh laurels in her new position. The other officers elected were: vice-president, Mrs. Amy K. Morse, Parkfalls; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. A. Lawson, Baraboo; recording secretary Mrs. Augusta E. C. Strong, Baraboo; treasurer, Mrs. Ida M. Cook, Green Bay.

The reports of officers and superintendents revealed the fact that much had been accomplished on many lines the past year. Petitions by the score have been turned and returned with added weight in each revolution. Scientific temperance instruction, mothers' meetings, evangelistic and literature were most prominent as departments adopted, while the W. C. T. U. Home at Eau Claire, which has been the means of saving ninety-two per cent of all the girls sent there since its inception, has this year, as every year, been the "Mecca" of our best endeavors, and the raising of the debt thereon is now the all absorbing topic among the unions; other plans for this needy institution are under consideration whereby it is hoped that the financial burden, which is necessarily heavy, shall be so shared by those "whose burdens we would share" that again shall be set up that standard of justice, the universal establishment of which is so earnestly sought by the W. C. T. U.

Miss Jessie L. Hagerty who has been state secretary of L. T. L. branch and city missionary for Milwaukee W. C. T. U., is now a student in Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago. We are sorry to lose this efficient worker among the children and young people and know she will be missed all over the state and especially by the newsboys of Milwaukee who were her particular care. Miss Mary Money, of Milwaukee, was elected secretary of the L. T. L. branch for the coming year, and we believe Miss Hagerty has a capable and worthy successor and that the Wisconsin L. T. L. will still be found "in the van."

Many collections for the Temple have been taken within our borders, some have been reported, more have not but will be later on.

Our motto, "What ought to be done can be done," tells the story of what may be expected of us on this line, and we are united with one accord to pray and labor for the coveted $300,000. Wisconsin stands on the broad foundation of the "do-everything" policy, and while our commonwealth is known the world round for its "beer men," we are determined, and have set our faces as a flint, that it shall be known the world over for its beer*less* women and beer*less* children. What Wisconsin women ought to do they can do, and what

Flower Mission.

June 9 is the birthday of our promoted National superintendent of flower mission work, Miss Jennie Casseday, and was celebrated not only in our country, but in lands across the sea. The work is international in character, and the World's superintendent, Miss Amelia J. Pemell, lives in New South Wales, Australia. It is constantly growing more and more evangelistic, and the Scripture texts have been the means of bringing many a soul to know Christ and His redeeming love. It is a personal work, and the joy that comes through the mission reacts upon our lives.

It was my privilege to visit the University Settlement mission of Chicago, June 9, and present the kindergarten children with flowers. The weather proved disagreeable, and the foul odor that came from the Chicago river made me sigh for the perfume of the orange blossoms in fair California, where for ten years past I have celebrated the 9th of June by visiting the hospitals, jails, the sick, and the strangers in the beautiful San Bernardino valley. We were met by the visiting nurse, Miss Burkholder, who kindly accompanied us to the kindergarten, where we were most cordially received by the principal, Miss Whiteside, and her corps of efficient teachers. The hope of our nation lies in the education of the children in temperance and right living, and I resolved to add my mite to aid this beneficent work by becoming an associate member of the Chicago Settlement.

We next visited the crèche or day nursery, and were introduced to the matron, Mrs. Garnham, who kindly showed us through the building which was so clean and neat. After distributing our flowers and texts, we hastened away to Rose Hill cemetery to meet with a committee to decorate Miss Willard's grave. Her last words, "How beautiful to be with God," echoed through my heart again and again as I placed the flowers and the following Scripture text upon her last resting place, "Eye hath not seen, nor ears heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him," and I renewed my vow to do what she would have me do and to work with more zeal and earnestness to carry forward the beautiful department which she created.

I read this morning from "Daily Strength for Daily Needs," the helpful words of George Macdonald, and the thought came that it would be nice to pass it along to those who are traveling the same beautiful road to our Homeland. "He has an especial tenderness of love towards thee, for thou art in the dark and hast no light, and His heart is glad when thou doest arise and say, 'I will arise and go to my Father.' For He sees thee through all the gloom through which thou canst not see Him. Say to Him, 'My God, I am very dull and low and hard, but Thou art wise and high and tender and Thou art my God. I am Thy child.' Then fold the arms of thy faith and wait in quietness until light goes up in the darkness. Fold the arms of thy faith, I say, but not of thy action; bethink thee of something that thou oughtest to do, and go and do it, if it is but the sweeping of a room or the preparing of a meal, or a visit to a friend; heed not thy feelings, do thy work." Trusting that all of our hearts may respond to this beautiful sentiment, I remain most faithfully yours,

ALICE L. SUDDUTH,
Nat. Supt. Flower Mission.

Kindergarten.

DEAR COWORKERS:—I am constantly receiving letters from newly-appointed local, and, I am glad to say, a few state superintendents of our kindergarten department, asking for instructions. It is very unsatisfactory for the National superintendent to advise the local superintendent when there should be a state superintendent who would know and understand the situation much better and be able to give more helpful suggestions.

Our dear Miss Willard realized the great importance and the far-reaching influence of this department, and was most anxious for its success. Will not all the state presidents, the state, district and local superintendents of this department take this as a personal message and see to it that superintendents are appointed for this department in all the district and local unions? Insist upon the kindergarten subject having a place on the programs and being properly presented at all conventions and mothers' meetings. Urge the systematic study by the unions of books upon the subject and kindergarten magazines. Interest the people of your city or town in the kindergarten, and when possible, establish and support or help support such a school.

Be careful to secure as kindergartner one thoroughly prepared for her work by nature and training, and alive, interested and posted along temperance lines, for she can do more to sow the temperance seed and arouse the parents as she goes into the homes and meets the mothers in the kindergarten mothers' meetings, than you can who have not the care of the children from the homes. Reach as far as possible all heads and directors of kindergarten training schools and secure their sympathy and help in training the young women they are sending out as kindergartners in this great temperance work and point out to them their responsibility in helping to arouse the people they come in contact with to the great danger of alcohol in all its forms and to assist in its overthrow.

We are needing new workers to lift the burdens from the shoulders of those who have so long and nobly borne them. There can be no surer means of securing new recruits and bringing to our aid those who should and could do much for the advancement of the cause, than through the kindergarten. Use the press to help spread the interest, not alone the temperance, but the secular and religious press.

Please correspond with me about this department. I will be more than glad to aid at all times and in any way possible.

Yours most hopefully,

Form of Bequest.

I give and bequeath to "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" the sum of (———) for the use of said institution absolutely.

DEAR SISTERS:—"The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" sends greetings to its hosts of friends, and begs to call attention to the change of name, which was finally decided upon at the last business meeting of the board, held at the hospital June 6.

The question of a change had been discussed at times since our beloved leader's death, but some members thought that a better financial footing must be secured before the change would be advisable; however, after the reading of the treasurer's report all arose and sang the doxology, thus giving an expression of thanks for the raising of the heavy burden of debt which has so crippled the work of the hospital for the last three years. The favorable moment seemed to have arrived when a public honor could be conferred upon one whose memory our white-ribbon women delight to honor, thus we voted to give her name to an institution which Miss Willard thoroughly indorsed during her lifetime, and was ever ready to aid.

In THE UNION SIGNAL of January 13, 1898, Miss Willard sent out an appeal for the hospital to her ever true and loyal constituency, saying, "I doubt if any one has been more warmly devoted to the idea of the hospital than I have since it was first brought forward at the Detroit Convention in 1883." Her interest in this work was ever warm, and all she could do she did for its advancement.

The old building which we now occupy is not well adapted to our needs; some repairs are now going on which will tide us over for a time, but the matter of a new building must be met in the near future if the Lord opens the way. We shall rigidly adhere to our first principles of incurring no heavy debts. A modest building to accommodate from seventy-five to one hundred patients is all we have ever planned for; the cost would probably not exceed $50,000, and physicians tell us that an institution of this size would, well managed, be self-supporting.

Miss Willard approved of the building, and sent out the "Clarion Call" for this object in March, 1896, but little has been realized from this call, owing, doubtless, to the great financial straits of the past times. Shall this year be the time to begin to accumulate the fund with which to make a more worthy memorial to her honored name? Sisters, the question lies with you largely to answer. The principle for which the hospital stands is one of the greatest of the temperance reforms. The institution should "no longer be subject to the vicissitudes of dwelling in a hired house," but rather "endeavor to establish itself permanently in the solid stone, brick and mortar of its own fixed abode."

Yours for the new hospital,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The National Union is arranging for a Temperance Congress to be held under the auspices of the Bureau of Education of the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha. The committee on arrangements consists of the National president, corresponding secretary and treasurer, the National superintendent of fairs and expositions, the presidents of Nebraska, Colorado, and Kansas and four active members of the Omaha and Council Bluffs unions. The dates are not yet fixed. As soon as they are they will be announced, likewise the program as soon as details are arranged. Meantime will not those of our prominent workers who think of attending the Exposition, notify me of that fact and of the probable date of their visits. We desire to consider the greatest good of the greatest number.

Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, our well known National evangelist, has wholly recovered from her illness of the past winter and is again ready for the field. She will be accompanied, during much of her work this year, by a young niece who is a fine singer and thorough student of music and, withal, a devoted white-ribboner, eager to give her young life to our cause in the capacity of a Gospel Temperance singer. Without doubt there are many local unions which would be glad to avail themselves of the services of such well-equipped workers for a series of Gospel Temperance meetings. For terms, which are very reasonable, Mrs. Palmer may be addressed at Boone, Iowa.

The name of Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin is the only one to grace the Honor Roll this week. Mrs. Conklin seems to have exceptional ability in securing new members, or rather, in securing reports from the local unions as to the members which have paid their dues. I am convinced that our National organizers and, indeed, our workers of every rank, both in state and nation, secure many more new members than is ever made apparent because of lack of system on the part of the local union. Try to keep exact record of new members secured, and forward their names, as soon as dues are paid, to the one through whose labors they were won to our cause. Do all you can and tell what you do, might well be adopted as a motto by the majority of our local unions,

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

Last week I spoke of the generous gift from Miss Agnes M. Bigelow of a beautiful house and lot to the National. This morning the deed and insurance policy came, and the white-ribboners are indebted to this good woman for this practical recognition of their worth and the great help it will be to the work. I am sure I can extend to Miss Bigelow the earnest thanks of every white-ribboner who loves Mother National. We have entered upon the last half of our fiscal year, and soon the time will come for annual accounting, and what shall that account be? Will we be able to show growth, as the result of consecrated activity, renewed effort and constant vigilance, or shall we merely hold ground already acquired? In the department of organization there has been much seed-sowing, but in many localities the harvests have been small. We trust this year we shall reap the fruit of our sowing. There are many signs that point to an advanced sentiment on the lines of total abstinence and prohibition. The order issued in Washington, D. C., prohibiting the sale or gift of liquor to our soldier boys in camp in the District is a hopeful sign. England and America are coming to see that intoxicants do not impart courage and do not give strength, but on the other hand, that their use brings weakness, disease and inefficiency. The Y. M. C. A. and the W. C. T. U. will do all in their power to save our boys in blue from the pernicious canteen and the liquor-giving saloon-keeper. Some of us feel that our brave boys at the front are in greater danger from alcoholic drink than they are from Spanish bullets. Should any one wish to help us in sending literature and hospital supplied for this purpose, we shall be glad to receive their contributions for that purpose, and can assure them that every penny will be used for this beneficent cause. Mrs. Thacher, our National superintendent, is greatly straitened for want of means to push her work.

Mrs. Baxter starts on her western trip in a few days. She is one of our best speakers, and any union will help its work by securing her for a series of meetings. Do not forget to look up your old coins and confederate stamps and send to her. She will transmute them into the "coin of the realm" to help our work.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—I make my bow, and extend a word of greeting to you all, as I send my first message to our Corner. I feel very far away from most of you away out on this Pacific slope, yet the same tie binds us, and your kindly words through our dear UNION SIGNAL make me feel I know you personally. Since my appointment last November I have labored only in this state, as the state officers of West Washington have greatly desired me to work here, and indeed, the field is "white unto the harvest." But the extensive amount of traveling required in this state of magnificent distances, and the expensive traveling, make the work very difficult, both financially and physically. During the fall and winter I have held a large number of meetings, and have journeyed many long miles, sometimes homesick and weary, yet ever cheered by the precious promise, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Next November the question of "woman's emancipation" will be submitted to the vote of the sovereign citizens of Washington, and we are waiting and working with great anxiety. May God grant that this vital question may be settled right! I have endeavored to arouse the people upon the subject, and if nothing prevents I expect to give much time to this special work during the coming months, but let me assure you right now, I shall not lay aside my white ribbon while I am at it.

The state convention of West Washington meets in Centralia this year, my own home town, and the last few weeks I have devoted to arranging for it. We expect a good time, and hope to receive much benefit from the visit of Mrs. Maude L. Greene and Miss Hattie Henderson.

My sisters, no words I can command can express the feelings of my heart when on the evening of February 18, that day never to be forgotten, I read in my daily paper that our precious leader had gone from us, and as I thought, and talked, and wept, I was ever impressed with a deeper sense of duty to toil on and, in my poor little way, help to hold high our white banner. I fully believe the grandest tribute we can ever pay to the memory of our blessed Saint Frances is to know "no compromise," but to work unceasingly for this holy cause until victory shall come.

Loyally yours for "God and home and humanity,"

MATTIE N. GRAVES.

The Alum Heart.

Many people are suffering from some form of heart disease who have no idea of the cause of it.

Any disturbance of the digestive organs affects the heart's action, and therefore every food which interferes with digestion is responsible where there are troubles of this character.

It has been discovered that the use of baking powder made from burnt alum coagulates the blood very rapidly, which interferes with its free flow through the arteries and valves of that organ. Formerly alum was used as a specific for children's croup, but owing to its tendency from the cause named to produce heart failure, physicians no longer employ it.

In face of such facts and in view of the overwhelming testimony of scientists as to the poisonous character of this drug when used for food purposes, can there be any excuse for the ignorance or unconcern which permits any one to take from the grocer a package of alum baking powder, simply for the sake of saving a few cents in price?

It is a healthful sign that many states are limiting by law the sale of the alum baking powder. Very soon it will be prohibited in all states, or treated as a poison, as it should be. But for such laws, how are the alum powders to be known by consumers?

Where alum powders are not branded as such, nor their sale prohibited by law, it is better to avoid the use of any new or doubtful brand until it has been analyzed. The purity of all powders may be suspected if they are sold at a price lower than the price of the best standard brands. We know the Royal to be a first-class cream of tartar powder, and if consumers insist upon having that brand, they will be sure of a pure, healthful article. In view of a recently reported case of poisoning of a whole family living near Logansport, Indiana, from the use of alum powder, it behooves every one to use extraordinary care in purchasing their supplies. We do not hesitate to recommend the Royal to all who are in doubt as to the powder they have been using, as the United States Government tests placed that brand at the head of all the tartrate powders.

Publisher's Notes.

Philanthropy Fund.

The following letter from one helped by the philanthropy fund enables one to realize how much good may be done by a little self-denial and a small investment:

"I have been shut in from active work for more than six years by illness and other trying circumstances. Have not been to church in that time. Can not walk any distance, nor could I get even a respectable outfit in which I could appear on the street. I had to sever my connection with the W. C. T. U. because I could not pay my dues. Won't you ask the Lord to give me strength and means to take up the work again whenever the purpose of His discipline is accomplished? I have been a temperance worker all my life, and am a sufferer from the drink curse because my husband began to take whisky as a medicine, against my wishes, and is now so far astray that nothing but a miracle of grace can save him. He cares nothing for me in any way and persecutes me because I will not give up my religion. Sometimes I am able to sew a little and will do my best to earn the amount due for THE UNION SIGNAL in the near future, but if I am not able to pay for it, I must stop taking it, for I can not rest easy when in debt."

Fourth of July Program for the L T. L.

Every union planning for a "Temperance Fourth of July," as suggested by the department of Christian citizenship, should see that the children have a part in the demonstration. No more delightful or effective program can be found than that prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National L. T. L. secretary, in the June number of The Young Crusader. It is just the thing for the Loyal Temperance Legions, or with a very slight alteration can be used by any Junior Society. It can not fail to please, it will inspire patriotism, and the temperance setting will carry the truth home to older hearts.

The June Young Crusader also contains a delightful account of a temperance rally in Iceland, by Jessie Ackermann, while Mrs. Addie Northam-Fields writes of Miss Willard in England, and Mrs. Marie L. Gorman gives a most interesting report of the children's work in Washington, D. C. Single copy five cents, twenty-five to one address 35 cents, fifty copies for 60 cents, one hundred copies one dollar.

The Official Etching.

Those who have seen the beautiful etching of Miss Willard pronounce it a work of art of high grade and especially well adapted for school rooms, college walls, libraries and the drawing-rooms where choice pictures hang.

The photograph selected by the officers of the National W. C. T. U. for this purpose was the celebrated Evangeline portrait. This exquisite picture combined with the soft tones and lifelike effects of the etcher's art has produced a truly ideal portrait of our beloved leader. The etching is printed on Holland paper 20x24 inches. Price $2 postpaid. Send two cents for circular and proof. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple, Chicago.

Encouraging Words from Delinquent Subscribers.

A letter containing $4 is just at hand from a faithful reader of THE UNION SIGNAL, which says: "You may continue to send THE SIGNAL. I want my children to read it. I shall not become delinquent again." With another inclosure of $6 comes the touching message: "The within bill I very cheerfully pay. My wife passed to the better world last December, but I love to read THE SIGNAL, and will continue as a subscriber."

The memorial volume of Miss Willard's Life should be obtained from the Publishing House of whom you have purchased your prospectus. If you have not placed your order, it can be filled at regular list prices by sending $2 for cloth edition, $2.75 half morocco, $3.75 full morocco, to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple. We do not carry these books in stock but can place your orders with our general agents, through whom the book is sold by subscription.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE. "Our Calling," by Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, secretary of general rescue work for the National purity department. God never gave a command, she says, that He did not provide both the worker and the ammunition. He is never at a loss for workers. When He called Bezaleel to help Moses He "called him by name" and "filled him with His spirit." We have not as yet understood the privileges of our calling. A spirit-filled man or woman—do we grasp its significance? Christ walks in us! As a business man, strong in proportion to his financial backing, so the Christian worker may be as strong as his spiritual backing. Mrs. Lake points out the forms of service to which we are called, emphasizing the fact that we are called to suffer and to wait as well as to do.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JUNE. "Domestic Science," by Mrs. Marion A. McBride, superintendent of the branch of health and heredity department. The central thoughts given are: "Give us this day our daily bread," and "I am the Bread of Life." Domestic science, it is explained, pertains to the food we eat and the houses we live in, and we are told how to properly pursue this study as a part of W. C. T. U. work. The writer calls attention to the importance of the food question to our "boys" in the army and navy. She says: "To the American woman is given the care of a nation that its defenders shall be strong and well physically." Appended to the Reading are the "ten commandments" concerning health and hygiene, formulated by Miss Willard—commandments of which every white-ribboner should preserve a copy.

Agents.

We do not sell the official etching or any picture of Miss Willard in our stock through agents, but will make special discounts upon orders by the dozen. Our Warships are splendidly illustrated in the July "St. Nicholas" from a series of remarkably well-taken photographs of the Maine, Iowa, Massachusetts, Indiana, Texas, New York, Brooklyn, Columbia, Minneapolis, Vesuvius, etc., etc., and in the same number Lieut. Philip Andrews, U. S. N., writes of "Ceremonies and Etiquette of a Man-of-War."

THE SUMMER NUMBERS OF "ST. NICHOLAS"

will contain much that has to do with interesting phases of the Spanish-American war.

An expert account by a naval officer of the power of the big guns and the trusty armor of our vessels will have unusually fine illustrations, and there will be a story of an amusing adventure in the Philippine Islands. The student of nature will be especially interested in a clear explanation of the origin and course of the great ocean storms with which men-of-war have to reckon.

A historical article in the July "St. Nicholas" is devoted to the services of Benjamin Franklin at the French court during our Revolution, and it tells some amusing stories of the sturdy old republican envoy's life in Paris. "St. Nicholas" is always well filled with whatever bright pens and clever pencils can create for its young (and older) readers. It is an influence broadening beyond all that the best-equipped school or the most refined home can furnish to boys and girls.

we will send to any address the numbers of "St. Nicholas" from May to October, inclusive—no better vacation reading can be had. The Century Co., Union Square, N.Y.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

THE Wenatchee union, of East Washington, has bought a lot and building in the business portion of Wenatchee and is conducting a public reading-room.

THE state conventions of South California and Michigan had grand demonstration night celebrations. The department parade was the important feature of the demonstration. This always rivets attention and drives home an impression never forgotten.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY has organized thirteen unions since the National Convention at Buffalo. Her time is largely taken up for the summer. Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Prohibition Park, Rhode Island, will be among her objective points. She is to be at Cuba, N. Y., for the prohibition camp meeting August 9 and 10.

THE new president of Indian Territory is Mrs. P. M. Lee, of Vinita. Mrs. Radcliff, the former president, was obliged to resign on account of ill-health. Mrs. Allenette Cook, the corresponding secretary, has met with a great bereavement, in the death of her husband, a man highly honored and much loved.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN conducted the services at the Missouri penitentiary at Jefferson city, morning and afternoon on flower mission day. She made a feeling and appropriate address to the prisoners, and each one was given a bunch of flowers. The prisoners seemed to appreciate fully the effort to brighten the gloom of their surroundings.

THE tenth district convention, St. Paul, Minn., closed with a matron's medal contest. Mrs. R. M. Lawton won the medal with the selection, "One Standard for Both Sexes." A hygienic luncheon was served by four nurses from Battle Creek Sanitarium. The secretary, Mrs. E. L. Farnsworth, reported sixteen unions in the district, with 180 active members.

A W. C. T. U. institute, held at Edgewater (Chicago) by the new union there, was of exceeding interest. The district president, Mrs. T. C. Reilly, was on the platform, assisting whenever necessary. Mrs. P. P. Bilhorn, wife of the noted singer and composer, is the president of the union, and most capable did she prove herself. Several ministers gave short addresses. A question-box in charge of Mrs. Fanny H. Rastall was of great value to all present.

THE Kentucky W. C. T. U. has undertaken to supply each of the volunteers of the state with pocket comfort bags, containing thread, needles, buttons, pins, safety-pins and tape. Into each bag is stitched a little square of white cotton, on which is printed the total abstinence pledge and a Scripture text. About two thousand have been distributed, and the officers testify that they can see the greatest difference in the appearance of their companies. More than half of some of them have signed the pledge.

For Seasickness.

Use Hosford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. FOURNESS-BRICE, of S.S. Teutonic, says: "I have prescribed it in my practice among the passengers travelling to and from Europe in this steamer, and the result has satisfied me that if taken in time, it will in a great many cases prevent seasickness."

A FATHER recently wrote to Oxford University: "What are your terms for a year? And does it cost anything extra if my son wants to learn to read and write as well as to row a boat?"

EXCITED LADY (on the beach)—"Why isn't something done for that ship in distress?" Coastguard (hurriedly)—"We have sent the crew a line to come ashore, mum." Excited Lady—"Dear me; were they waiting for a formal invitation?"

BRAWN (to dentist)—"I won't pay anything extra for gas. Just yank the tooth out even if it does hurt a little." Dentist—"I must say you are very plucky. Just let me see the tooth." Brawn—"Oh, I haven't got any toothache; it's Mrs. Brawn. She'll be here in a minute."

RED-LETTER DAYS.

INDEPENDENCE DAY—JULY 4.
The Birthday of Mary H. Hunt.

FRESH AIR MISSION DAY.—AUGUST 3.
The Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

A Wise Declaration of Independence.

[The National Declaration of Independence contains a pledge, and the temperance pledge is likewise a declaration of independence against a foolish and harmful custom.]

WHEREAS, One who totally abstains from the use of all alcoholic liquors can not possibly become a drunkard, while one who uses them may become a drunkard; and,

WHEREAS, One who uses alcoholic beverages may possibly lead others to become drunkards by his example, while one who does not use them can not possibly ruin others in this way; and,

WHEREAS, Alcoholic beverages, even when they do not lead to intoxication, are injurious to health; and,

WHEREAS, Alcoholic beverages cannot possibly be considered necessities of life, and in many cases are destructive of life, therefore,

With a firm reliance upon God, I hereby make my Declaration of Independence against King Alcohol, whose intoxicating drinks I pledge my sacred honor never to use.

[Signed.]

Notes and Comments.

PLEASE take notice that there will be no issue of THE UNION SIGNAL for the dates July 21 and 28. As stated last week, we take our annual vacation at that time.

A TELEGRAM from Mrs. Carse, who is still in the East, announces that Marshall Field has once more extended the time of his proposition to the Temple. Its friends now have until January 1, 1899, in which to raise the balance of the necessary three hundred thousand dollars.

AN exchange calls attention to the suggestive fact that the first American soldier to die in the war with Spain was a Confederate, the second a Union soldier and the third a negro, and says "the blood of these three mingled on the same deck and sealed the unity in the patriotism of types of Americans."

APROPOS of the Philippines as a winter resort and the "excellent fishing" to be found there, our friend Dr. Gray of The Interior hopes "to write a series of Philippine Musings." The W. C. T. U. expects to do something more than muse on the Philippines. It hopes to bring them into the white-ribbon fold and take them "for Christ's own kingdom some glad day."

SPEAKING of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools a saloon journal expresses the hope that "some day pupils will be taught how to use alcoholic drinks reasonably." The more our scientists and educators study the effects of alcohol upon the human organism, the stronger becomes their conviction that there is no reasonable way in which to use alcohol as a drink.

THE UNION SIGNAL is always patriotic in its make up, but this number, being our Independence Day issue, is distinctively so. Its pages are intended to be of especial interest to the men who have enlisted in the war for Cuban freedom and to the women whose loved ones have responded to the country's call to arms. We trust W. C. T. U. workers everywhere will order extra copies to send to the United States soldiers and marines stationed at the various camps and on the ships, and also for general distribution at home.

WHITE-RIBBONERS will be pleased to learn that the efforts of Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell and her husband, who is state archivist, have been crowned with success, and that a bust in bas relief of Miss Willard has a place in the new capitol building at Albany, N. Y. It is carved on the grand western staircase, is a three-quarters presentation of life-size, the back forming a solid square eight or nine inches thick, which is inserted in a corresponding cavity made for it in the south side wall of the staircase between the second and third story of the building. The material is a light sandstone and the likeness a good one.

ALTHOUGH it is not to be expected that Spain will see it now, future history will show that the progress and general welfare of her people will be served by that which now seems to them such a calamity, viz., defeat at the hands of the United States. We believe with Lord Coleridge, one of the speakers at the recent notable Anglo-American banquet in London, that "it is for the interest of Spain, no less than for the interest of America and of common humanity, that victory perch upon the American banner."

AS a result of a conference by the leaders of the Canadian senate the deadlock which existed in that body for a week has been broken and a compromise effected, by which the plebiscite bill has passed through its final stage and been adopted. The bill empowers the government to set the day upon which the vote shall be taken, sixty days notice to be given. Both the temperance and the liquor forces of the Dominion are now working vigorously in view of the possibility of the vote being ordered as early as August.

MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY, National superintendent of our peace department, says that she has never been more busy with her work than at the present time. The effect of the Spanish-American war has been to excite wider interest in this department, and people from all parts of the country are writing to inquire concerning its aims and methods. The growth of the peace sentiment is also indicated by the statement of a New York publisher, that since the opening of the war there has been an increased demand for the publications of the American Peace Society.

ON June 15, the National Brewers' Association met for their annual meeting at Atlantic City, New Jersey. The president in his address reported that the consumption of beer had fallen off 1,402,999 gallons during the past year, and that the tax paid into the national treasury for beer produced and sold in this country was $1,312,073 less in 1897 than in 1896. He further stated that there were one thousand less liquor sellers in the United States in 1897 than there were in 1896. These facts, taken in connection with the work of the W. C. T. U. department of scientific temperance instruction, as set forth by Mrs. Hunt in her article on "The Opening Future," page 4, are highly significant.

War News of the Week.

First Battle on Cuban Soil—A Score of our Men Killed—Many Wounded.

ON June 23, Admiral Sampson and General Shafter officially reported the landing of troops at Baiquiri and the laying of plans to attack Santiago, front and rear. The Spaniards were deceived by a feint, and the troops landed where they could not have been expected. Four picked crews removed seven submarine mines from Guantanamo harbor under a heavy fire from shore batteries.

Captain-General Blanco notified the American blockading fleet that he will hereafter recognize no flag of truce, adding that every vessel within six miles' range will be fired upon, whether flying the stars and stripes or a white flag. He added that Lieutenant Hobson is not exchanged for the reason that the lieutenant and his companions had an opportunity to see the defenses of Santiago harbor.

The first serious engagement by our troops in Cuba occurred Friday morning, June 24, five miles from Santiago. Less than 1,000 American cavalrymen dispersed 2,000 Spaniards, driving them back to the city. The American loss was nearly a score killed and fifty wounded, including six officers. Many Spaniards are believed to have been killed.

The camp of the United States troops is seven miles from El Morro and overlooks the harbor of Santiago. Dispatches to Secretary Long indicate that Admiral Sampson, General Shafter and General Garcia have planned an active campaign which includes an immediate assault on Santiago itself.

The Spanish Cortes has been suspended by royal decree, martial law proclaimed and the Sagasta cabinet has resigned.

NOTES.

GOVERNOR LEEDY has announced that the two battalions allotted to Kansas under the second call for volunteers will be recruited from the colored population.

KING ALFONSO, of Spain, was confirmed in the Catholic church at Madrid, on June 22, with great ceremony, in the presence of the Royal family, the court dignitaries, the cabinet ministers and the grandees.

THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Jacksonville, Fla., has placed a large tent at the disposal of the Second Illinois for the purpose of conducting classes in Spanish. Quite a large number have joined the class.

THE German Emperor has summoned Von Buelow, secretary of foreign affairs, to a conference, and the secretary is drawing up an appeal to the American government for peace, to be presented upon the fall of Santiago.

REPRESENTATIVE DAVENPORT, of Pennsylvania, has introduced a bill granting a pension of $100 a month to Harriet V. Gridley, widow of the late Captain Charles V. Gridley, who commanded the flagship Olympia in the battle at Manila.

THE troops are four miles from Santiago waiting for the artillery to come up. The Vesuvius has gone past the Merrimac in a night reconnoiter and it is reported that Admiral Sampson will go in and attack the fleet simultaneously with the attack by the land forces.

THE American Bible Society is distributing Testaments among the soldiers at Tampa. Nearly 5,000 have already been used, and the demand is strong for more. Christian people desiring to help this good work are requested to send contributions to William Foulke, treasurer, the Bible House, New York city

SENATOR FORAKER, by request, has introduced a bill authorizing the enlistment from the nation at large of a volunteer division of negro immunes, to consist of not more than five regiments and not more than 6,360 negroes possessing immunity from diseases incident to tropical climates. The officers are to be appointed by the President. The usual apportionment among the states on a basis of population is not to apply to these enlistments.

Club Women in Session.

THE largest convention the Federation of Women's Clubs has yet held, opened in Denver, Col., on June 22, with 435 accredited delegates in attendance. Special trains carried large parties from the East and South, and the club women of the West were out in full force to do honor to the distinguished gathering. The Broadway Theater, where the convention met, was packed with 2,000 women at every session.

Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, of Chicago, the well known and popular president of the Federation since its inception, was the central figure of interest and her ability as a chairman was never so marked as at this, the last convention over which she will preside, for the present at least, as she retires this year.

The principal address of welcome was delivered by Gov. Alva Adams, of Colorado. He said in part:

It is fitting that this great confederation of women's clubs should meet in Colorado. While you are not a suffrage association and may not care to vote, the ultimate of your intellectual aspirations must be the elimination of sex from the statutes of equality. Colorado has added a soprano to the symphony of political liberty, and we offer our laws, our homes, schools, institutions as object lessons to those who would doubt the results of equality before the law. The growth of women's clubs is the greatest movement of this generation, and as representatives of that beneficent influence we greet you to-day. In the name of the women we love I welcome you to a state where the word "male" has been eliminated from the laws and the word "obey" from the marriage service.

Mrs. S. S. Platt spoke in behalf of the women of Denver. She said in part:

We do not welcome you as women of the East, of the West, of the North, of the South, but as women of the country. Because you represent the United States, because you, the women of the blue and the women of the gray, represent the graves that belong to both of us; because you represent the country that has a Dewey from Vermont and a Fitzhugh Lee from Virginia, a Hobson from Alabama; because you represent all that is glorious in these great United States. For this week, and longer, ladies, this city is yours to command. We have sent our children into the country. We have promised our husbands that if they efface themselves during the day they can listen to you in the evening, and now we have nothing on our hands to prevent our entertaining you.

Mrs. Henrotin responded gracefully for the Federation, and closed her remarks with these words:

Now, at the end of this convention I am to leave you, and I want every woman to so bear herself that when I leave I can feel that this last biennial was the crown of them all.

Two interesting and interested guests were a couple of Japanese women direct from Tokio, who came to the convention as special emissaries from the Empress of Japan, who wishes women's clubs established in her own country. The women are Mme. Fude Watanabe and Miss Uma Tsuda, teachers in the Peeresz school, and in order that they may study the advancement of the American women, the Japanese government appropriated $2,500 for each of the girls and granted them five months' leave of absence. A letter to Mrs. Alice Ives Breed, who has recently returned from Japan, from Count Okuma, former prime minister of Japan, states that any courtesy shown these sojourners will be considered a personal favor to the nation.

The regular business of the convention was promptly dispatched and the sessions were devoted to the reading and discussion of papers, subdivided under the following heads: "Phases of Economic Work in Clubs," "Home Economics," "Civic Clubs and Village Improvement Associations," "Club Methods," "The Press," etc., with special evening addresses and literary programs of remarkable merit.

The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Philip Moore, of St. Louis, was interesting. The federation now includes 595 clubs, with a membership of 60,000, and thirty state federations, made up of 2,110 clubs, with a membership of 150,000. Taking out duplicate membership, it leaves 160,000 women in the country pledged to the motto, "Unity in Diversity." There is an honorary membership of twenty-one. It was also mentioned that the greatest success of state federations had been along the lines of education, traveling libraries, art leagues, industrial and manual training for women.

Mrs. Frank Trumbull, of Denver, the treasurer, showed receipts in two years amounting to $8,677, with expenditures of $4,979, leaving a balance of $3,692.

The Federation adopted the rule providing for the payment of a ten-cent per capita to pay the expenses of future meetings.

Social courtesies of a very elaborate character were extended to the club women by the citizens of Denver. Mrs. Rebecca B. Lowe, of Georgia, and Mrs. Sarah S. Platt, of Colorado, are, as we go to press, the leading candidates for president and vice-president.

About Women.

THE Ohio supreme court has held invalid an act of last winter authorizing the governor to commission women as notaries public. The court holds that the act violates the state constitution.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Belgrade, Servia, says ex-Queen Natalie is organizing an expedition to the seat of war between Spain and the United States, in order to nurse both Americans and Spaniards.

IDA LE ROY, of Cincinnati, has offered her services to the war department of the United States for balloon signal work. She says that she can take photographs or use explosives from her balloon.

MISS MARIAN HOVEY, of Boston, has given $5,000 to the city of Gloucester, Mass., the income to be paid to the graduate of the high school who passes the best examination for entrance to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Temperance.

THE Catholic Total Abstinence Union will hold its national convention in historic Faneuil Hall, Boston, August 10-13.

THE Patrons of Manitoba have reorganized as the Independents. Prohibition is made a plank of the new organization, as it has been of the Patron party in that province for several years.

COLONEL GAITHER, of the Second Kentucky regiment, is credited with this reply to one of his line officers who urged a regimental canteen. "No! I brought these men here to make soldiers, not drunkards, of them. You can have a temperance canteen, but no liquor will be sold in this camp."

A COMMITTEE representing the Pastors' Association and citizens of Chattanooga sent a committee to Governor Atkinson, calling his attention to the disorder prevailing just outside the military reservation at Chickamauga Park, a result of the drinking places and gambling dens that have been opened there. The governor has decided to call a special term of court for the trial of the county officers and others charged with violating the law.

A NEWSPAPER correspondent writing from Tampa, Fla., says of the Illinois troops: "Colonel Turner's men are beginning to realize the wisdom displayed by their commander when he closed the First Regiment canteen and prohibited the eating of ice-cream and drinking of injurious liquids by his men. While they had their own way the hospital was always well filled with men, with whom there was nothing serious the matter, but who were too ill to do duty. Since the colonel closed the canteen there is very little sickness of any kind."

At Home.

THE United States has paid to the British ambassador at Washington $463,151 on account of the Canadian sealing claims.

IT has been decided to hold the international conference between the United States and Canada at Quebec, July 15. The Canadian representatives will be Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Richard Cartright and Sir Louis Davis.

A PROLONGED strike among the employés of the wood-working factories at Oshkosh, Wis., followed by the employment of non-union men, has resulted in serious rioting on the part of the strikers. The state troops in camp at Milwaukee were called out June 23, the city officials being unable to cope with the mob. One man was killed, several wounded and considerable property destroyed.

Awake to Freedom's Call.

BY ALBERT JUDSON FISHER.

[As sung on the battleship Oregon, by the First Regiment of Illinois and rendered by the Chicago Y. P. C. T. U. at their patriotic concert, June 28, in the Auditorium.]

Air: "John Brown's Body.

O'ER the bosom of the waters, from the islands of the sea,
There is borne upon the troubled air a cry for liberty;
Lo, a nation, stretching forth her hands, is praying to be free,
Awake to Freedom's call!

CHORUS—Glory, Glory, Hallelujah! Glory, Glory, Hallelujah!
Glory, Glory, Hallelujah! Awake to Freedom's call!

There is weeping in her palm-groves, there are watch-fires on her hills,
While Death's angels, War and Famine, all the land with horror fills;
In her struggle with the tyrant every heart of patriot thrills;
Awake to Freedom's call!

Then how long, O God of battles, shall Thy sons in terror wake?
It is written that the weak and bruisèd reed Thou wilt not break;
To Columbia Thou art calling now, My sword of vengeance take!
Awake to Freedom's call!

By the memory of our fathers, who to us sweet Freedom gave;
By the memory of our brothers gone, who died our land to save;
By the memory of our sailors lying dead beneath the wave;
Awake to Freedom's call!

The New Independence Day.

BY JOHN F. COWAN.

(Associate Editor of the Christian Endeavor World.)

"SAVING up for a red-hot Fourth."

"Whereagointo?"

"To Wolf's Lake. The hullabaloo the saints took a fainting fit over last year won't be a circumstance to the rip-roarious time we'll have this. A carload of beer, chicken fights, a hard-glove scrap between Paddy Ryan and Nigger Steve, free-for-all dance. It's outside the town limits and if the country 'squire lips in we'll wreck his shebang."

"Got the grounds?"

"Sure of 'em as death."

"Are you, though?" was the mental question of Burt Kitchener, the wide-awake young real-estate agent of Graniteville, who had been an unintentional listener to this dialogue as he locked his office door. Daylight would have shown a look of intense loathing on his face at the picture which the street corner chat had suggested to him.

"So you are sure of Wolf's grounds for your disgraceful orgies?" he asked half defiantly, snapping his fingers. "Not so fast. I have a document in my pocket here," and he gave his pocket a slap. "I must see Mr. Mason about this."

"Good evening, Burt. Why so out of breath? Some new big real estate deal on hand? Hasthe glassware company accepted the town's proposition?"

"Glassware company anchored here all right, Mr. Mason. No new accessions to our industries in sight now, but all the same I've a bigger thing in tow than a one hundred thousand dollar factory."

"What, new waterworks?"

"A new Independence day."

"What?"

"See here, Mr. Mason; you know how things have been going the devil's way out at Wolf's Lake every year."

"To my sorrow and shame," groaned the minister.

"It's an ulcer on the morals of our young men, and a contagious disease that is poisoning the boys. How can we expect to have young men fit for their country's service, physically or morally, if this prostitution of Independence day goes on?"

"It's all too true, but what can we do? I've preached against it and written it up in the county papers."

"Then let's try practicing against it."

"Can you suggest a practical plan?" demanded Mr. Mason, with a touch of skepticism in his tone.

"My thoughts are foggy, but you can help clear them. First," and Burt laid the forefinger of his right hand across that of his left, "I feel sure that we can secure the grounds ourselves."

"What grounds—not Wolf's?"

"To be sure. I know we can."

"But we wouldn't dare hold a Sunday-school picnic there. They would resent it in some ruffianly way. Besides, the price would be too high, even if Mr. Wolf wouldn't rather the toughs had it."

"I didn't mean to oppose such a foe with a puny Sunday-school picnic. As for Mr. Wolf's preference for the rowdies, I have an option on the property in my pocket."

"Go on; I'm growing intensely interested."

"That means I must be growing intensely interesting. Thank you. The mischief is that the forces of righteousness in this town are so divided up. If we could only unite them!"

"The other churches would apprehend disorder, too, and be timid about taking children there."

"Then let's take men there. Do you know that Post Commander Smith, of the G. A. R., is dreadfully cut up because so many of the boys of the Graniteville company were rejected by the recruiting officers on account of 'tobacco hearts,' and other physical disabilities plainly due to dissipation, Dr. Conroy says. Why not appeal to the veterans to help save the country again?"

"That's a bold idea, but as chaplain of the post I promise you my influence."

"Then, suppose we ask the Sons of Veterans to police the grounds? You know the mettle of the men."

"A capital thought. Such men as Cashier Shaw, County Clerk Willard, Conductor Brennan and Superintendent Polk, of the Granite works, would carry weight and overawe lawlessness."

"Then, there are the W. C. T. U. ladies; they could be of inestimable service on the committees, and their social and moral influence would add much strength."

"Good! They can always be counted on, too. You are giving me some confidence in the scheme. I believe, now, that I see the way clearing for our Sunday-school to take part."

"I'm almost sorry you are giving in so easily. You know I am used to building up confidence in larger schemes than this, and I've lots of resources up my sleeve yet. For instance, I'm president of the C. E. Union, and I'm sure that our Christian Citizenship committee will jump at the chance and stand ready to provide one of the best speakers in the state. Then there are the Epworth Leaguers, the Boys' Brigade, with their drum corps, the Grange and the Good Templars."

"I really didn't think that we could muster such a showing for law and order. But there is one feature that may intimidate them—you have forgotten the expense, I guess. Of course, we'd be willing to take a collection, and the Republican might publish a sub—"

"Hold on! Not that way, please. To begin to beg means defeat. Let me do a little financiering for Christ. I have done a great deal for Graniteville. The privileges for refreshment stands and for checking bicycles and carriages and feeding horses, with the commission I shall make the railroad company pay on the traffic we give them, will foot all the bills—if we only get a crowd. But people will think it a feebly planned church affair if we begin to ask for funds and stay away."

"Young man, you have the audacity of a Napoleon. When did you think all this out?"

"Part of it between my office and your gate, and the rest sitting here talking with you. 'As iron shapeneth iron,' you know. And pray, why shouldn't I be as audacious for Christ as for Graniteville? Why need all the audacity be monopolized by a majority of disorderly fellows and the majority suffer from their timidity? But it's not so audacious. My business experience in booming this town has shown me that difficulties have a way of vanishing when you boldly challenge their right to stand in your way. Evils become bold simply through our tolerance of them; naturally, they are cowards."

"Nevertheless, you must prepare for trouble. The hoodlums will not vacate their haunts without a blow."

"It's only the whisky and rowdyism we ask to vacate. The young fellows are welcome. We want to innoculate them with new notions about keeping the Fourth."

When Graniteville heard of Mr. Burt Kitchener's plans, they were first amazed at what the Rev. Mr. Mason had called the "audacity of the thing," and then they said, "But it's just like young Kitchener to go in for something big. See how he has transformed this dead old town into a modern beehive of industry, just by his confidence in its resources. Why shouldn't he make his picnic go, too?"

The very bigness of his plans appealed to their local pride; it would give them something to crow over, so he soon had plenty of helpers.

"How is it, Burt," demanded Mr. Mason, "that you have enlisted young fellows on your committees whom I could never get to lift a finger in church work? There's John Loyd, for instance."

"Why, when I explained my plans to John Loyd and asked him to undertake the finances, he looked up at me and asked incredulously, 'Do you really mean to run it without appeals to the public or collections?' 'Sure, John,' said I, 'are you thinking a bad day might leave us in a hole?' 'No,' said he, 'and I'm with you. But,' and he smiled a curious smile, 'it's the first time I was ever asked to do anything in the name of religion but some peanut job that was only fit for a cripple or half-witted fellow. This is worth while.'

"And that's the way Will France looked at it. I asked him to become our legal wing. 'Do you mean business?' he demanded, 'or will your brave attitude simmer down to a moral lecture to the erring?' 'Will,' I said, 'I mean to give the people as good order as they could have in their own churches.' 'Put her there!' he cried, stretching out his hand. 'If this means that the better class of people are done with rowdyism, they can have it so, but it makes me gasp to think of such big undertakings after being begged in the name of work for Christ to do petty things that a wheezing consumptive would laugh at. If the churches are really going to strike a blow worthy of them, I'll get my war paint on.'"

There were tears in the Rev. Mr. Mason's eyes when he realized how he had failed to call out the activities of the best men in town simply by not daring to think of deeds heroic enough to appeal to their innate love of adventure and risk.

There was some furious gnashing of teeth when "the boys" found that a march had been cleverly stolen upon them and the only attractive pleasure grounds in the county had been snatched from them. They blustered and threatened. There would be plenty of drink on the grounds, they said, and the goody-goodies would be driven away.

But when they were confronted by the determined mien of the representative men of the town, whose caliber left no doubt that they would bite as well as bark, and when Squire Martin moved his office temporarily to the grounds, the weaker ones gave in, accepted the inevitable and joined shamefacedly in the orderly doings within. The ring-leaders pressed their scowling faces against the pickets for awhile, and then took to the adjoining woods, with bottles bulging out their pockets, Paddy Ryan and Nigger Steve at their heels, intent on malice. But before they had a chance to realize what sort of a cyclone had struck them, the pugilists were cooling their heels in the county jail, and the rest hired a livery team and fled to Shantytown, declaring that no one could hinder them having a "hell of a day" over there.

"Then we'll have a holiday here," remarked Burt, "which seems to be the sum of the difference between their ideas of Independence day and ours."

"Hooray for the new Independence day!" shouted Jim Powell, on his way home sober that night. "The boys that's comin' on will have a chance to be wuth somethin' ef this is kep' up."

And that was the verdict of Graniteville. And Graniteville's victory repeated a thousandfold would rejuvenate our land.

Boston, Mass.

The Opening Future.

BY MARY H. HUNT.

THE clang of bells, the roar of sunrise guns, the snap of Young America's firecrackers, make sleep impossible and recall the fact that it is just one hundred and twenty-three years ago this morning, June 17, that the first real battle of the war of the Revolution was fought not far from my own door, yonder on Bunker Hill. Well may the Bostonian of to-day give up the morning nap and join in this rejoicing, for this is the anniversary of the event that made sure the birth of our nation. And we celebrate it to-day because it was a triumph for that principle of liberty to which we owe so much and for which we stand before the world, while we forgive "the ancient wrong" that severed us one hundred and twenty-three years ago from our kinsmen of the mother country beyond the sea, to whose sons and daughters "of the self-same blood" and "of the self-same clan" with us we pledge our love and plight our troth for united service for humanity's sake at the great Master's call.

The thoughtful observer who studies the detail of the great events that have gone to make up our history cannot fail to be impressed with the fact that there has always been in God's thought an ultimate largeness of purpose, especially in our wars, that has at the outset been beyond the actor's thought or grasp. Our Puritan ancestors little dreamed when they crossed the ocean to find a place were they could worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, that in the divine purposes a continent had waited since the beginning for their colonization. Our Revolutionary fathers had no thought of independence when they began to agitate against "taxation without representation," but the ultimate result was this republic launched as an independent nation with the blot of human chattel slavery on its eschutcheon. We entered the war of the Rebellion to save the Union, but as the conflict went on, that great soul, Abraham Lincoln, felt the throb of God's thought, and knew that only through emancipation could the Union be saved, and history to-day points to the abolition of human slavery as the object sought in that war by the divine purpose that shapes the ends of nations as well as of individuals, "rough hew them as we may."

We have begun a war with Spain to free Cuba because we could not abide her barbarous treatment of her own subjects who are our neighbors, but what larger thought will yet appear to be the ultimate purpose that is now mysteriously and imperatively pushing us on in this strife, only time can tell. One thing even now is clear, we have broken from our old moorings, and can never go back to that isolation from the affairs of the outside world that has made us hitherto a hermit nation. Students of living history already recognize us, if we do not ourselves, as a world power that has leaped like Minerva from the head of Jupiter, with the strength of mature growth on its brow. How much of a new departure this may mean to us, we wait with bated breath to see. We are face to face with the unknown, while we are not blind to the fact that our past history illustrates our mission to be that of the evangel of liberty to the oppressed of the nations of the earth. Without intending to be, we are mixed up with the affairs of Europe and the Orient.

Are we to become a colonizing nation holding peoples of differing races and civilizations tributary to us? If thus we are to fulfill our mission of the evangel of liberty, this will come as did our destiny in the emancipation of the slave in the civil war. Hawaii, the Philippines, Cuba, Puerto Rico and other Spanish islands already loom above our horizon. In addition to being "Lord Chief Justice of the Western Hemisphere," has "the making of our foreign empire already begun," as our friends across the water affirm? If such a task is before us, well may we with Kipling pray,

> Lord God of Hosts be with us yet,
> Lest we forget! Lest we forget!

Our dealing with native races is not altogether a blameless one. The rum and whisky we have carried wherever the stars and stripes have gone have destroyed more than our gospel message has saved, making our tread among the barbarous races like that of Attila the Hun. How can a beneficent Providence call a nation with such a record as this to be sponsor for primitive peoples? The omniscient eye has seen the unobtrusive forces destined to change all this in our nation, which have been at work for the last sixteen years.

The first temperance education laws enacted in the United States began to go into force in the schoolrooms of our largest and most populous states, thereby reaching the largest numbers, in 1885 and 1886, and three years thereafter, in 1888, this persistent infiltration of truth against alcoholic drinks had reached the adult population through the children to such an extent as to begin to affect the per capita consumption of those drinks for the whole country. And now comes the important information which we quote from the Medical Record, published in New York, one of the most influential journals of the profession, that while the per capita consumption of alcohol is increasing in France, England and other countries, it is decreasing in America, where the decrease since 1888 amounts to about thirty per cent. The fact that scientific temperance education in the public schools has been the only new temperance factor added to those hitherto at work is conclusive proof of its being a prime cause in producing this result, and that the decline in the consumption of alcohol is due to the most abiding reasons, the intelligent conviction of the people against it.

Sixteen million children in the United States are under temperance education laws. We may safely compute that millions of these are each day of the school year, learning the dangerous and evil nature of beer and kindred liquors as they learn other laws of health. Such knowledge so generally diffused is beginning to tell on the habits of the people as shown by the wail of the brewers and report of the internal revenue department. The day is not far hence when this nation will rise from its sleep on the alcohol question, and in the strength of an awakened intelligence, will shake off this drink system that now hangs like an incubus about its neck, and will enter upon the new era of abstinence from alcoholic drink that shall make it a fit evangel of true liberty to the other nations.

Boston, Mass.

The World's Great Object Lesson.

BY MARY F. LOVELL.

IN these eventful days the eyes of the nations are turned on the "Great Republic," and various are the motives of statecraft or policy which inspire their praise or censure; in fact so interesting has become the problem of impending change consequent on the war with Spain, that already the causes which led to it are in danger of being practically overlooked. In the mind of the world what appear to be greater issues are involved. This is owing in part to the persistence with which Spain herself has ignored the iniquitous course which resulted in American interference, and to the facility with which the average human mind can be diverted from main questions by specious pleas, and the inability of the many to trace effects back to their causes.

War is horrible; it is wholesale carnage; it develops vice of every kind; it is a relic of barbarism; it is the great anachronism of the age. War with Spain ought not to have happened. On the other hand, the misrule and barbarous cruelties in Cuba should have been forcibly stopped long ago. If, in a boys' school a cruel bully is found to be exercising tyranny over a smaller pupil, the boy who acts as the champion of the weak, by fighting and overcoming the bully, is accounted a hero, and it can not be denied that he is, all the while that a semi-developed civilization renders that form of heroism necessary. But there is a better way to cure the evil; one which does not require the striking of a single blow; that of subjecting the culprit to the force of united opposition and disapproval.

The world is a school. For centuries Spain, in what she calls her glorious conquests, played the cruel tyrant over the weak. To the inhabitants of Central and South America she came as a frightful scourge. The result of her policy, whatever its name might be, was wholesale extermination. Her greedy adventurers condemned the unfortunate native peoples, who in their simplicity gave them welcome, to the most dreadful slavery. Thousands died under the lash in a tropical sun, and other thousands in the darkness of the mines. Draper, in his "Intellectual Development of Europe" states that the Bishop of Chiapa affirmed that more than fifteen millions were exterminated in his time. Whole races and nations were cut off. Criminals of the worst type were sent to the Indies and given liberty on condition of finding treasure for Spain. They found it by the infliction of cruelty from which death was a welcome relief. It has been truly said that the greater part of South America, Mexico and the West India Islands were for centuries the Armenia of Spain.

Other nations included in what is known as the civilized world have records of base oppression and cruelty for which they must needs blush—America's treatment of her Indians is indeed a shocking page in her history—but for most of these nations the day of the recognition of the evil has at least dawned. The plea for justice and mercy has some public hearing. It is an accepted part of nineteenth century growth, and has begun to manifest itself in legislation. Not so with Spain. But the cruelties which she could formerly inflict with impunity have now become intolerable, not only to the victims, but to our nation; and after waiting years, while multitudes miserably perished, we have at last gone to the rescue with "armed intervention," the only effective intervention in our power as an individual nation. We are the hero in the school rescuing the weakling from the grasp of the tyrant.

But we have said there is a better way. Spain is cruel, and the nations called civilized are fully cognizant of it, but apparently they are not sufficiently advanced in humane development to unite in averting the evil and horror of war by demanding of Spain the withdrawal of her armies from Cuba. Were a humane alliance of the powers possible, there would be an end of war in the civilized world. Why is it that at the close of the nineteenth century no such alliance between the nations exists? For the student of the humane propaganda the question almost answers itself. What is the evident and unmistakable cause of the indifference to suffering shown by the Spanish nation? Persistent and systematic education in cruelty. Can a people whose national amusement is the hideous bull-fight be expected to have bowels of compassion? As well expect grapes from thorns or figs from thistles. A nation whose women, from the highest to the lowest, and whose little children, are trained to hear greeted with shouts of savage exultation such a diversion as the disemboweling of pitiful, broken-down, worn-out horses by bulls maddened by every circumstance of torture, can have no more conception of what is meant by humane sentiment than have the ferocious beings who are the chief actors in this demon's play. Well was it once termed by a Roman pontiff, "a pastime of devils." Well would it be for Spain if her church had promulgated his opinion.

There is no humane alliance between the nations, because those called civilized, though scorning to revel constantly in a sport adapted to please a Nero, do not yet, to any extent, teach humaneness, even through their religions. Yet humaneness is an indispensable feature of righteousness, and it is righteousness which exalteth a nation. When humaneness is really a part of national policy, the tyrant in the school may indeed sometimes appear, but the consensus of opinion will repress and keep him in subjection without spilling of blood and the other evils of war. What the world needs is humane statesmen and stateswomen, and humaneness in all the grades of life. To attain this, the children must be trained humanely. It is the glory of England that her great son, just dead, the foremost statesman of modern times, was a righteous, a humane man. The name of Gladstone will shine imperishable on the pages of history and serve to stimulate virtue in the generations of the future, while the conquests of the cruel will, if remembered at all in the better day which is to be, serve but to make the epitaph appropriate to infamy.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

"A LITTLE lad of twelve came into my office to sell gum, a year ago," said a business man, in Willard Hall, "and I talked with him about living a Christian life and helping others to be good." As the boy went out of this man's presence, he said to himself, "Why did I listen to that religious crank?" But the words clung to his heart, and out of that conversation has grown a boys' brigade and religious class, with about forty boys pledged as Christians and to help others to be good.

Requests came asking prayer for spiritual blessing on a family caring for a worker for Jesus' sake; for a brother in the country, frail in body and needing God's guidance; for a young lad; for a lady dying and afraid to die; for a lad hungry and out of work, that he might go to the right person; for a Christian struggling with the morphine habit; for a man, and others like him, that he might have strength to vote as he prays; for a sister and a brother; for one vile and full of sin and crying for mercy. Oh, pray that they may be guided and strengthened and led by the Spirit into the fullness of God's promises!

The past week has been one of unusual practical self-study. Personal habits and influence were handled with forceful eloquence by Dr. Wm. B. Leach. In our building of character keep the tongue from impure language, the lips free from liquor and tobacco, the ears from debasing stories, the eyes from obscene pictures, the hands from stealing and the feet from low resorts. One man from Florida said he went away from these meetings convinced that hereafter he would be a better man and more watchful of his influence over others. The earnest, eager faces and intense quiet in the hall during the Scripture lessons prove the efficacy of God's word to touch men's souls. A mother with blinding tears asked what to do with her boy, who used to be good but now is so wayward. His father ran away and left her before his birth, and he has been as the apple of her eye all these fourteen years, but evil companions and the idea that he is almost a man makes him reject her advice.

A wife is broken hearted because her husband who had signed the pledge and for two years lived a Christian life, has forgotten his vows and, seeking work in a saloon, has let the demon of strong drink get the mastery again.

A friend asks prayers for a young man who is forgetting himself and all his mother's counsels.

Sisters, when you read of these petitions, kneel right down in your homes and ask God to guide us in our efforts to advise and comfort, and petition Him to hear our cry for help.

Soldiers at Camp Alger.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The "cruel war" is upon us, and our boys full of patriotism and "war fever" throughout our beloved country are enlisting to march against the foe.

The curious, idle throng watch those who have enlisted as they march by, commenting on different ones, laughing and joking over little things to which their attention has been called, and as the soldiers disappear in the distance, turn away with no thought of what it all means. Some of the enlisted are mere boys who go for the first time from the influence of pure, good homes, in company with those who perchance have no home at all. Some go with "God bless and watch over my boy" from father and mother sounding in their ears, while others have but curses to follow them. Some are comfortably clad and carry with them little home comforts, while others go empty handed. These thoughts I experienced as I watched a company formed in line of march in Washington on the morning of June 9, our "flower mission day," and how I wished I could go from one to another with our little card tied with its white ribbon and say to each, "God bless and keep you."

I could but silently pray, with tears ready to flow, that God would watch over them every step of the way and make them true soldiers of their country and true soldiers of His, so that if called upon to lay down their lives through sickness in camp, or on the battle-field, they might be mustered into a greater and grander army among the redeemed "just over the line"; or if, when duty to their country was faithfully discharged, they were spared to return home, they could come holding up their heads as brave, true men ready to help humanity in the great battle of life.

Last week six of us white-ribboners visited the hospital at Camp Alger, taking with us delicacies for the sick, comfort bags, and our flower mission card with its white-ribbon bow attached. We found young men whose mothers were white-ribboners too, and some were Loyal Legion boys. All seemed the happier for the words of cheer spoken to them while they were suffering—some I fear from the worst of sickness—homesickness. Poor, sick boys, how our hearts went out to them! There is no canteen in this camp of twenty-seven thousand men. General Graham had it abolished. Liquor is sold underhandedly round about the camp, but officers of the law are on the alert to catch the law breakers. Colonel Barnett of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Indiana Regiment, on arriving at camp with his men, found a canteen near by and would not allow tents to be pitched till it was closed. He and most, if not all, of his officers are earnest Christians, and it is a daily occurrence in many of the tents to have morning and evening worship. His regiment was the first to take a decided stand against the canteen, and we are happy to say that the regiment which went from the District of Columbia has no canteen.

Naturally the soldiers at Camp Alger are anxious to come to Washington to visit the points of interest, and unfortunately many wander into the saloon where is spread its free and sumptuous lunch. I met two mere boys on the street one day at noon, and to my query as to what they were seeking, they said, "we are looking for a drink." I pointed to my white ribbon and told them they had met with just the one to lead them away from the drink and after talking with them a few minutes, I sent them to W. C. T. U. headquarters, where they met with an earnest worker and friend in Mrs. Weightman. She talked with them and gave them each a comfort bag. As I could not see them when we went over to camp, I wrote them, and here is the reply:

CAMP ALGER, June 12, 1898.

"MY DEAR FRIEND:—I received your kind and most welcome letter to-day and must say I was very glad to hear from you. I will tell you right here with an open heart that from this day on there will never be a drop of intoxicating liquor pass my lips. I was very glad you caught us in time the other day. Your words pressed my mind all that day. I did not drink another drop after you spoke to me. I was pretty near full when you saw me, but believe me I will never touch, taste or handle again. I know I will feel better than I have the last month. We both looked for you over here but did not see you. I will look for you to call on us when you come here again. When you come ask for the Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. You won't have any trouble in finding us. . . I am very thankful for the small bag you gave us. It just came handy. I had a coat to sew and it was what I wanted. Well, I will have to close for this time. Hoping you will have good luck in finding our company, I am a new friend to you. Good-by, answer soon."

It was a great pleasure to receive this letter, and I shall, at my earliest opportunity, go over again, and shall surely find out these new friends. We are contemplating the starting of a "free lunch" in opposition to the saloons. They have money in abundance to back them, but we have the "Lord of hosts with us," and He will provide the way and the means. Two of our sailor friends are going away soon—will be on the U. S. S. Buffalo. They are Christians. Many marines have gone with whom I was acquainted, and on board the Maine were several sailors whom I knew. But I have written too much already and must stop. My heart goes out so fully to our soldiers, sailors and marines, that when I commence to write about them 'tis hard to break off. I trust the white-ribboners will arouse themselves throughout this broad land to render help and comfort to our boys in blue. Here is a work which calls for helpers, and our National superintendent needs you, so come to the rescue.

Standing as the soldiers, sailors and marines' friend, I am yours in the good cause,

LAVINIA H. CHASE,
Supt. Soldiers and Sailors.

The Canteen at Chickamauga.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—THE SIGNAL of the 9th came while I was making a visit at Camp Thomas, Chickamauga Park. Surgeon and Major Armstrong asked me to thank you for himself, his assistants and the regiment for what you have said in your paper about the Twenty-first Kansas regiment. The Kansas people are beginning to send supplies, and I hope the worst of the troubles at Camp Thomas are over.

All towels, bed linen, pajamas, gowns, etc., designed for hospital use should be marked with a red cross. The two strips of the cross should each be three inches long and one inch wide.

The canteen is present in force, but I found five regiments without it, the Second Ohio, Sixth Ohio, Fifth Pennsylvania, Fifth Missouri and Twenty-first Kansas, and I heard that the Third Wisconsin has none, but I did not verify this, and my list is, of course, not complete.

The men detailed to run the canteens are our soldiers—a petty officer as head saloonkeeper, with privates to assist. Our government receives our boys to fight for her safety and honor and makes saloonkeepers and bartenders of them. The sales of beer are large, and the whole effect of the thing is pernicious. Boys who at home never went near the saloon go boldly into the canteen. I saw a canteen crowded with young men drinking beer, from a regiment which in one company has more than twenty soldiers from one college. Many of those who will come home unharmed by shot or shell will have an appetite for liquor and a familiarity with the saloon that will be a life-long curse. What a cruel shame for our government to take young men, innocent of the taste of liquor, and return them to their homes with the liquor habit fixed upon them. Let all the people know that the colonel can banish the canteen if he will. He has no right to evade the responsibility by asking for a vote of the officers. He can shut it out or let it in. The surgeon also can shut it out by making a written statement that it is prejudical to the health of the regiment. Major-General Brooke can shut it out of the whole camp at Chickamauga. He should be showered with petitions, sent by churches and Sunday-schools and temperance organizations. Every mother and father and sister, having a son or brother at Camp Thomas should send a letter to General Brooke, and a letter to the colonel of the regiment to which the son or brother belongs. We should not sit down in willing submission to such a wrong as this. It is too serious a matter; and if need be, we should say, "No more of our young men for the army until we have the assurance that they will be protected from the canteen."

Two chaplains told me that they favored the canteen at first, but one of them also said that it had not worked well, and the officers were of the opinion that they should have to put it out. In a meeting of the Chaplain's Association one chaplain (from Wisconsin, my informant said) openly spoke in favor of the canteen, said he himself liked a glass of good, cool beer. The friends of the canteen claim that it is condusive to temperance and good discipline to have the sale of liquor where they can regulate it, etc. The fact is, that the canteen regiments have disorder and a full guard house. These "prisoners," as they are called, do the hard and dirty work of the regimental camp as punishment. An officer in one of the temperance regiments told me that they did not have enough "prisoners" to do the police work (cleaning up), and had to detail a company every day. According to the canteen advocates, this temperance regiment should have had a full guard house of soldiers who had broken through the lines and gone off to get liquor, because, you know, "they will have it, and you can't help it."

Several surgeons told me that a good share of the sickness in camp is caused by the canteen. The boys are tempted to drink in some of the canteens by getting six glasses of beer for twenty-five cents, and if they are out of money, they are always allowed credit to the amount of two dollars. Some canteens are open all day and till nine o'clock at night. Others are open only three times a day; others are never open in the evening. Some restrict the number of drinks per day; others have no limit. How about the personal liberty of these limitations from the standpoint of the trade? Why not do away with the whole business? REV. G. W. DUBOIS.

Testimony Concerning the Cigaret.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Much interest has been created recently in cigaret smoking, by the statement in the daily press, that examining surgeons of the United States Army have rejected many applicants for enlistment, because of the cigaret habit, tobacco heart being the most frequent cause of the rejections. The figures as given are that twenty-five per cent of all applicants are rejected, and during the Civil war the per cent was only fifteen. Also that ninety per cent of all cigaret smokers are rejected. The American Tobacco Company is now making great effort to deny this statement. For many years this company did not think the efforts made by the W. C. T. U. were of sufficient interest to notice, but they have changed their ideas since forty-two states and the District of Columbia have passed laws forbidding the sale of tobacco to minors, and four state legislatures have passed laws forbidding the manufacture, sale or importation of cigarets. The trust has also become alarmed because so many anti-cigaret leagues have been organized. These leagues throughout the country are becoming very pronounced enemies of the cigaret trade; in New York alone there are 250,000 young Americans pledged against indulgence in the vice of cigaret smoking. The Tobacco Trust is looking for testimony in favor of its product, and so I, too, am collecting expert testimony, and a few extracts are appended hereto:

E. P. Neely, Superintendent Public Schools, St. Joseph, Mo.: I consider the cigaret the most injurious form in which tobacco is used. It is the universal testimony of the teachers in the St. Joseph public schools, that those of their pupils who are in the habit of smoking cigarets are invariably sluggish, languid, dull, unreliable mentally and often morally, incapable of applying themselves to study, and without exception the poorest scholars in the school.

William G. Moore, M. D., Member School Board: I consider that cigaret smoking by boys is scarcely inferior to whisky as an obstacle to their mental, moral and physical development.

J. W. Kellogg, M. D., Battle Creek Sanitariam, Battle Creek, Mich.: We should remember that there always is present in cigarets nicotine, a far more deadly poison than opium. I do not know of anything that can be added to cigarets to make them worse, it is not so much the adulteration as the original depravity.

L. D. Drake, Superintendent Missouri Reform School for Boys, Boonville, Mo.: I very frankly confess that I can find no words to express my abhorrence of the pernicious habit of cigaret smoking. The effect upon our boys is very manifest, and it is with the greatest difficulty that we are able to get them to desist from such practice. Their minds are oft times unbalanced and their nervous system completely wrecked. They find as much comfort in the smoking of cigarets as the morphine or opium fiend can possibly do in the use of such narcotics.

Samuel B. Lyon, Medical Superintendent Society of the New York Hospital, Bloomingdale, White Plains, N. Y.: I can express my firm conviction that it is injurious for boys to smoke, not only cigarets, but any form of tobacco. The inhaling of smoke is injurious to the lungs as it makes a deposit not removed by any of the ordinary secretory organs. The temptation to more continuous smoking is incurred by the convenience and cheapness of cigarets.

Walter Kempser, M. D., Milwaukee, Wis.: In some places cigarets are made from the coarse stems stripped from the tobacco leaves. I have visited establishments both in this country and abroad, where I have seen these stems and other refuse, swept from the floor and ground up by machinery and then made into cigarets, the coarser parts used for cigarets, the finer for snuff. The floors had been expectorated upon, and were otherwise filthy, and when I called attention to this fact, the reply was that it made no difference. My practice has been devoted to the treatment of nervous diseases for more than thirty years, and I have treated a number of young people whose diseases were either caused or aggravated by cigarette smoking.

J. B. DeMotte, Bryn Mawr, Pa.: I have seen tobacco mixed with liquid, the liquid made from rum, glycerine and opium.

M. V. B. Knox, D. D., LL. D., president Red River Valley University: I have seen no one addicted to cigarets succeeding in moral issues, or in the field of intellectual endeavor. They are a foe to physical growth and well-being, to mental strength and progress, and to all spiritual discernment. Their use should be made to cease by the influence of home, of school, and by the strong hand of the law. The habit threatens our young people's whole being, and by that constitutes a menace to home, society, church and nation. Let it be stopped.

Professor Leflin: Cigarets create a thirst for strong drink, containing as they do, five poisons, oil in the paper, the oil of nicotine, saltpeter to preserve the tobacco, opium to make it mild and the oil in flavoring. The trouble with the cigaret is the inhaling of the smoke.

Dr. Mussey: In the practice of smoking there is no small danger. It produces a huskiness of the mouth which calls for some liquid. Water is too insipid as the nerves of taste are in a half-palsied state from the influence of tobacco smoke, hence, in order to be tasted, an article of a pungent or stimulating character is resorted to, and thus the kindred habit of smoking and drinking.

Fighting Beer in Army Camps.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—General Howard has recently returned from a visit to the army camps at Tampa, Chickamauga and Mobile. He is speaking strongly of the evils of the canteen system in the army, and says there is an idea prevalent among the men that it is necessary to drink some kind of alcoholic beverage to keep away disease. Some regiments take pains to have great quantities of strong beer at hand, and there is every facility for any of them who want drink to get it. We do not wonder that mothers tremble as they see their boys march away to face such temptations.

General Howard says that under the present condition of things, the best way we can help these men is to try to reach them individually.

With a view to giving the soldiers help in these directions, General Howard and other prominent Christian workers have organized the Army Christian Commission, and it has been authorized by the War Department to carry on its work in all the camps of the army. They are putting within reach of each regiment a large tent, fitted up with comfortable seats and supplied with good books, papers, writing material, etc. Each tent is in charge of a Christian worker whose business it is to give them any Christian help he can.

In addition to this, the Commission is sending to each camp, as fast as possible, some of the best known ministers and evangelists of the country. Among those who have already gone are General Howard, Maj. D. W. Whittle, Dr. H. M. Wharton, Rev. R. A. Torrey, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Mr. Ira D. Sankey, and Mr. J. H. Burke. These ministers hold daily services which the men attend by the thousand. Many of the soldiers have already been converted.

A work of this kind ought certainly to receive the liberal support of all those who desire the best good of our brave soldier boys. Mr. D. L. Moody, of East Northfield, Mass., is chairman of the evangelistic department of the Commission, and all contributions sent to him will be promptly acknowledged.

ONE OF THE MOODY WORKERS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world. They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee.—1 John, 4:4; Jer. 1:19.

MRS. MARY T. BURT, as chairman of the New York county committee on raising funds for a memorial to Miss Willard, on the day before the call came for her to follow our Chieftain, wrote a letter which has since been printed. The following is an extract from it.

That some memorial commemorative of the life and labors of Frances E. Willard should be erected comes naturally to the thought of her co-workers in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to the friends of the cause everywhere, and to all believers in the moral efforts of the world, to which her life was such a splendid inspiration and example.

It is rare, indeed, that a monument truly typical of the life and work of the one to be honored, is found already erected. But in the stately and beautiful Temple at Chicago, for which she labored until called to the heavenly mansion, stands the representative and fitting memorial.

The list of patronesses of New York county memorial committee, is headed by the name of the venerable and venerated Mrs. Wm. E. Dodge, New York city, who has subscribed $1,000 to the fund. Miss Mary E. Rossiter, of New York, a very bright business woman and an active white-ribboner, has the work of raising the fund in charge, under the direction of the acting chairman, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes. Miss Rossiter has the fullest faith that a large sum can be secured in the fall for the fund when people return to the city, but it is now too late to do anything before the first of July and she and Mrs. Barnes beg us to get an extension of time from Mr. Field until January.

If our dear white-ribboners had bestirred themselves in April to send money to the $300,000 fund as they have been doing for the last week or two, it would not now be necessary to ask Mr. Field for an extension of time. Some days lately we have been receiving in Chicago over $500 a day in cash, besides what is being sent to Miss Dow. Added to this in my eastern trip, I have received pledges for many thousands of dollars. Let us all, therefore, take heart and hope and work on until the Temple is secured as Miss Willard's memorial. The excitement and uncertainty in financial circles caused by the war has worked against us, but all this is but the trial of our faith. "I am with thee saith the Lord, to deliver thee."

If all our women had only exploited the fifty-cent subscription cards as some have done there would now be $200,000 in our treasury from that source alone, and it would only have cost each one eight cents for stamps to send the cards to four friends outside W. C. T. U. lines. We beg our women to take up this plan. It is the most feasible one yet suggested for raising money for the Temple, and it doesn't take any money either out of the pockets of white-ribboners, or from the treasury of the local union. The South New York union, Mrs. Sarah Teetor, president, has just sent the last installment on a $100 pledge. This union is situated in the lower part of New York, among people of very small means. They have raised the above amount almost entirely through the fifty-cent subscription cards and Temple Wheels. Their indefatigable president says they will keep right on raising money by the above means for the Temple, and will continue so to do until it is paid for. Mrs. Teetor is also going to act as agent for Miss Willard's picture, and will give all her commissions to the Temple.

The Cleveland, O., unions are also earnestly at work raising money, and are pushing the work in every direction. By some oversight, $100, which the Federated unions of Cleveland gave last winter in response to Miss Shontz's appeal, has not been mentioned before. It should also be noted here that the Review Club, of Newark, O., through Mrs. Evalyn Graham, sent $5, and has the honor of being the first woman's club that gave toward Miss Willard's memorial.

Orders for Miss Willard's new and beautiful tinted life-size picture are daily increasing. Miss Ellen D. Morris, of Kansas City, Mo., state corresponding secretary, writes: "The picture of Miss Willard is here. It is exquisitely finished, and so beautiful. I never saw one of her before that was so like her. I will sell all of them I can, and take no commissions." Miss Elizabeth P. Nichols, Providence, R. I., writes: "The beautiful picture of Frances E. Willard has just come, and I hasten to express my pleasure. It has a glorified expression, and is a very fine painting."

But I just can't be nothin' 'cause I got to go to school.

Most all great men, so I have read, has been the ones 'at got
The least amount a' learnin' by a flickerin', pitch-pine knot;
An' many a darin' boy like me grows up to be a fool
An' never 'mounts to nothin', 'cause he's got to go to school.

I don't see how my parents kin make the big mistake!
O' keepin' down a boy like me 'at's got a name to make!
It ain't no wonder boys is bad, an' balky as a mule;
Life ain't worth livin' if you've got to waste your time in school.

What good is 'rithmetic an' things, exceptin' jest fer girls,
Er them there Fauntleroys 'at wears their hair in twisted curls?
An' if my name is never seen on his'try's page, why, you'll Remember 'at it's all because I got to go to school.

The Freedmen's Fourth at the Capitol.

BY M. S.

BY special consent of Abraham Lincoln the grounds of the White House had been given to the colored people of the District of Columbia for their exclusive use on Independence Day. In April they had celebrated the anniversary of their emancipation; but this was doubly a free public festival.

The capitol and public buildings were gay with the stars and stripes; cannons boomed, the firecrackers announced the Fourth long before sunrise. What a strange procession it was to parade the streets of a southern city! Thousands of rejoicing people proclaimed their joy in freedom at the very door of the White House. The beautiful grounds spread over rounded knolls, like little hills set in a forest of old oaks, pines and maples. The grass was as deep as softest, greenest moss. The singing of hundreds of wild birds, the blossoming of Southern roses as they flushed the gardens and grounds with beauty, added a note of color and of song to the gala joy of the day.

As Frederick Douglass addressed the glad crowds, from an upper window Mr. Lincoln with uncovered head leaned out, bowing and smiling in response to the shouts and cheers and screams of the crowds. His dark, sad eyes were pitiful in their intense gaze, fixed on the strange groups before him. They were of every shade of blackness, bronze and yellow. There were throngs of the old, bent, decrepit and feeble; there were throngs of children in gay ribbons, grotesque dresses, like moving rainbows for color; many aged people were lying on their faces; they wept, groaned and cried aloud: "O, Mass'r Linkum! Bress de Lawd fo' dis day! Mass'r Linkum—he fotch us fro de Red Sea! he brung dis people safe to de promised land! O, Lawd, bress his name!"

Little Tad, who ran all day from his father's room to the "scene of action," back and forth, carrying his wild messages, leaned sometimes from the window, close to his father's face, with one small arm around his father's neck; and when the groans and lamentations grew too intense, Tad had a way of silently laying his face against the dark, sober one beside him. I saw strong men turn away—ashamed of the tears which this boy brought to their eyes most unexpectedly.

After Mr. Douglass' speech came the grand exercises. The big platform seated fifty children at once. "Ole Virginny" and "de eastern sho' of Maryland" showed representatives of "de fust families." What gestures—what orations! I wish they could be described. From the wilds of Africa and the sands of Egypt these dark-faced children must have sprung! Led by one of their Sunday-school teachers, they sang:

"I'm so glad de angels bro't de tidings down,
I'm so glad!"

The old men and women pushed toward the platform. They swayed back and forth, joining in the refrain, "I'm so glad!" with all the melody of their race.

Rev. John Pierpont, then almost eighty years old, sat on the south porch of the White House with Mrs. Lincoln and a party of friends. When the President joined them for a few minutes, Mr. Pierpont said: "Out of the shadow and bondage of slavery, into the sunlight of freedom—by your own hand, Mr. Lincoln." The President leaned his head wearily against the pillar of the porch and replied: "Don't give me praise—it is of the Lord."

Next came a little ebony girl, who recited in a high voice the then new "Barbara Frietchie":

"Up from the meadows rich with corn,
Clear in the cool September morn."

When she reached the lines,

"Forty flags with their silver stars,
Forty flags with their crimson bars—"

the thousands, as one, rose to their feet, shouted, cheered and groaned, while they threw banners and flags at her little feet, and almost covered her with flowers.

The child went on:

"Up rose old Barbara Frietchie—"

but for all the rest, only the tree-tops heard.

"Oh, Lawd! heah dat chile! Jes' see her gittin' learnin'! Look now at Cynth Ann! She am a pictur'—standin' dar, like one ob de Lawd's own angels, all in white—jes' ready fo' dem golden streets! Jes' kivered wid blossoms!"

Again another wild chorus of song.

"Gabriel's trumpet's going to blow,
By and by;
Oh, get ready for to go—
By and by."

"Uncle Jeremiah" was stately and pompous, very black, and very tall. He lived near the Arlington estate, and his six grandchildren were doing the "Lees" honor that day. "Grandpa Jerry," as everybody called him, was almost transported with joy and pride. He broke out suddenly:

"Jes' one thing, Mr. Douglass, I mus' say! Ef ole Mass'r could 'a' seen dis yere day—ef he had cotched dese yere niggers walkin' up an' down, up an' down, on de berry steps of de President's house, h'd jes' tromp about wid dem sharp eyes of his'n ablazin'! An' he sholy would ha' sed, 'Aw-da-shus, low-down niggers! ter mak' therselves so free wid de gentility! Po' white trash ter 'low 'em.' But Mass'r Linkum, he is de Lawd of dis freedom!"

As the sun went down over the Virginia hills, slanting across the beautiful trees and the white walls of "the mansion" an army of freedmen were crossing homeward "Long Bridge"—on foot, in carts, in wagons drawn by cows and horses, in the most absurd fashion; until far in the night we heard their voices and shouts ringing across the hills: "De glory am sholy cum! Bress de Lawd fo' dis day!"—The Home Guard.

"The Straight Thing."

A DEAF and dumb boy was asked, "What is truth?" He stepped to the blackboard and made a straight line.

"And what is falschood?"

He then made a zigzag, crooked line. This was a good answer, wasn't it? We hear boys in their play pledging each other to do "the straight thing," meaning, of course, being true and truthful. And when we hear them say that a boy is "crooked," we know that he lies and deceives.

A little girl who tried it said, "The trouble about telling a lie is that when you have told one you have to tell ever so many more to cover the first one up."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Before we have another chat in our Cozy Corner the anniversary of our nation's birthday will have come and gone! I wonder how you will celebrate it! The Fourth of July always calls forth a wave of patriotism that usually finds vent by "spontaneous combustion," especially among the boys.

This year the day has a deeper significance, if possible, for we are at war with another nation, fighting to give to an oppressed people the same freedom we now commemorate. Perhaps this circumstance will give strength to the movement for inaugurating a "new Fourth of July"; one that will be free from the drinking carousals and gambling sports to which the day has been largely given over of late years. With the horrors of war upon us, the knowledge that our men are dying to make other men free, shall we not celebrate our own freedom in a seemly way? If all my boys and girls will lend their influence to this cause of true patriotism, we shall surely have, ere long, a Fourth of July that will be the birthday of a nation freed from the greatest curse of slavery, strong drink.

Lovingly yours,

The New Fourth of July.

THE dear, old-fashioned celebration of our national holiday is a thing of the past. The glorious Fourth as we have known it since the days of our youth will remain, but be irradiated with a strange brilliancy and clothed with a new meaning. Never again will we witness the strut and noisy self-consciousness that smacked of youth and provincialism. Nevermore will we hear the grandiloquent oratory that in the same breath trounced England and extolled our country to the sky. The utmost stretch of our eagle's wings was from the eastern to the western ocean. So illimitable seemed our vast domain that in our wildest dreams we never thought of looking beyond its borders. The one endless engrossing and profitable thing was the exploration of the land and building of cities, roads and factories. Riches beyond the dreams of avarice, and power of all sorts, began to accumulate in our hands, potential of untold good or evil. Suddenly, in the nick of time, God in His wise providence, threw down the walls of national isolation and, pointing to our weak and struggling neighbors, bade us go to the rescue. The first gun fired at Manila was the signal that a new order of things was about to be inaugurated. Every mile traversed by our soldiers toward foreign shores, carried our nation farther and farther from the narrow life of the past. "The roar of their battles was but the echo of God's footsteps marching on."

The rising sun of the Fourth of July of this year will greet a nation that has reached its majority. We no longer grope our way, uncertain of ourselves and our position, but all sectionalism and pettiness have vanished forever, and we stand forth a world power in the full maturity of its strength and worth. In the light of recent history and in comparison with tardy and benighted Spain, we see as never before the priceless value of the principles on which this government is founded—liberty, intelligence and righteousness. Not boasting, but thanksgiving is in order.

Again, we can not celebrate our national holiday this year without realizing the world-wide application of the Declaration of Independence. Liberty is not for one nation, but for all. In reaching out a helping hand to others, we are simply carrying a little farther the declaration of the founders of our country, when they gave as the principal reason of their undertaking, "the great hope and inward zeal they had of laying some good foundation for the propagating and advancing the kingdom of Christ, in these remote parts of the world." Our forefathers builded better than they knew. What was at first national, now becomes universal. The United States is the Good Samaritan binding up the wounds smitten by cruelty and tyranny, it is liberty enlightening the world.

And this higher and nobler position we are called to occupy, brings in its train many new duties and responsibilities. Now that the eyes of the world are fixed upon us, and the islands of the sea wait for our coming, selfish ease and carelessness of conduct would be doubly reprehensible. We must prove to Spain and to the world that we are disinterested, that we do love our fellowmen, and have high ideals of manhood. We owe a duty to bleeding Cuba and the Philippines, we dare not shrink from our "manifest destiny." This requires no little courage and faith and insight, but has He not raised us up against this time of need? What manner of men and women ought we to be in view of such a glorious destiny? The way of greatness is the way of duty.

The Divine Ideal of Patriotism.

IF one had viewed the Bible from every other standpoint, there would still remain a vast, unexplored territory should he have failed to consider it from the standpoint of a patriot. Indeed from beginning to end it may well be called a manual of patriotism. The intense love of the Hebrew for his nation, for the laws and institutions which make up that nation's corporate life, as well as for the geographical setting of that national life, breathes from well nigh every page. From Abraham to Paul, one continually catches this keynote. Christ's tears over Jerusalem were the tears of a patriot as well as a Redeemer, while John's innermost conception of the glories of the future could not rise beyond the thought of a new Jerusalem. The city of his heart's love was to be so redeemed as to become the city of his soul's hope.

This intense love of county is nowhere more apparent than in the prophecies of the Old Testament, and perhaps it there finds its highest expression in Isaiah. From first to last in his utterances you feel the pulsebeats of a heart in which love of country ranks next to love of God. Many of his most impassioned words, to which the interpreters of a later day have given a purely spiritual significance, unquestionably belonged, in his thought, to the temporal kingdom of Judah.

But what is this Biblical conception of patriotism as voiced through Isaiah? Does it savor of the "jingoism" which passes current under that title to-day. Could it be classified under the axiomatic heading, "my country right or wrong"? Did it condone crime and excuse folly? Did it hurrah with the crowd and stand for the winning party, regardless of the principles of righteousness which had been sacrificed before the victory of that party could be possible? Undoubtedly patriotism of this order was at that time rampant among the exiled Jews, but it was precisely against such patriotism that the prophet thundered.

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people"—what? Their wealth of resource? Their accumulated treasure? The beauty of the fatherland toward which their hearts were turned? Their ancestral inheritance? The pride of the nation's former achievements and prowess? The fact that they are God's chosen people, set apart by the Divine Will for a special purpose? No. "Show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins."

"Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid His face from you, that He will not hear," and so on in an awful, well nigh endless arraignment.

Isaiah could hardly have been a popular man in his day and generation. It is greatly to be doubted if he stood in well with the influential men of his people. He was strangely deficient in tact, and lacking in savior-faire. He would neither condone nor flatter, and yet, if we are to take God's word as our inspired guide, his patriotism was after the Divine ideal.

It is this type of patriotism which, above everything else, our nation needs to-day. The United States government needs friends who will prove their faithfulness in that they dare to wound where the wound is necessary to truer life and health. And if the Woman's Christian Temperance Union stands for one thing more than another in its relation to our common country, it is for this type of patriotism. No one who knows our history, as an organization, can justly accuse us of a lack of love of "native land." Its redemption is the goal of our heart's highest ambition. As its name ends our motto, so its salvation crowns our hope. But our ideal of patriotism is founded upon that of the prophet Isaiah, we cannot truly love our country and remain silent toward the iniquities which are fostered in its midst. We cannot be patriots unless we, too, "cry aloud and spare not."

So to-day, in the midst of the shoutings of a newly kindled patriotism, with our boys at the front, ready to lay down their lives for the flag, we dare remind our rulers and our voters that, while Spain may have killed her thousands, alcohol has slain his tens of thousands; that the very flag for which they are fighting does not protect our boys in blue from the fear of a death infinitely worse than any that could come to them from Spanish bayonets. To our thought there has been nothing in this age more pathetic than the alacrity with which the youth of our land has sprung forward to protect this nation which every day and hour shows that it values revenue far more than it values their lives and their manhood.

By all means let us be patriotic, but by all that is sacred let us never in our patriotism cease to reiterate this message until the enlightened conscience of our nation shall be at last aroused, and we shall turn, as a people, away from the iniquity which is separating us from our God and hiding from us His face—the manifestation of Himself in our own individual and national life.

Soldier Saloon Keepers.

EVERYBODY knows by this time what the canteen system is in our army. But not every one knows that soldiers are detailed to be bartenders. Imagine you son enlisted to protect the honor of his country, or to rescue a down-trodden people, and then imagine him with a white apron on handing out beer schooners day after day. He has no choice or conscience in the matter. It is his to obey.

The brewer furnishes the tent and fixtures and beer and ice, and sells to the government at wholesale. The proper officer details men to run the saloon, and behold the result! Do not fail to read the correspondence concerning the soldiers in this issue. Surgeon Hartsuff is the chief surgeon at Chickamauga, and can shut out the entire canteen system if he will, as also can Major-General Brooke; the quantity of water is still utterly insufficient and the hospital supplies are still under lock and key. In the meantime regimental surgeons who will not have the canteen are having sick men to care for with no cots, nothing but the ground for a bed; not a night gown or sheet or pillow or wash rag, and no food except hardtack and salt pork. One who spent two weeks investigating says: "The hospital service at Camp Thomas has been unspeakably and inexcusably bad so far as the United States authorities are concerned." Regimental surgeons have made requisitions of the chief surgeon again and again and have received nothing worth speaking of.

Friends outside of camp have furnished cots, sheets, etc., and money for ice and milk, but it is only a drop in the bucket. It is openly said that Chief Surgeon Hartsuff advises surgeons to open a regimental canteen to get money to care for the sick. It is time, therefore, that the parents of the boys warn Chief Surgeon Hartsuff that they hold him responsible for the lack of these necessaries, and for the harm of the canteens. We advise a flood of letters to this effect to be sent to him, and one at the same time to Major-General Brooke, asking the canteen to be abolished. Address them at Chattanooga, Tenn. In the meantime, while Washington is getting around to an investigation and some of our boys are suffering the tortures of the condemned, if not of the damned, let our women stir up the churches and communities to come to the rescue. Cincinnati has inaugurated a Soldiers' Relief Pound Party, with headquarters open all day for reception of articles. The first week they sent one thousand pound to the First Ohio Regiment. Their headquarters is donated, the goods are sent free, and the women are busy making pajamas, night shirts; the churches are to the forefront, and the daily papers announce donations. Will the unions having entertainment for the soldiers or having a hand in any relief work for them report it at once for our W. C. T. U. news column. Look on our back pages under "Soldiers and Sailors," for a list of addresses to which all kinds of supplies may be sent. Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer, the Temple, Chicago, will receive donations in money for the relief of soldiers and sailors, or it can be sent direct to Mrs. Thacher, Florence, N. J., for distribution to the most needy places. The needs are great. The time is now.

In the midst of the rush to meet the pressing needs of the camps just now, it is equally important to send letters (without waiting for petitions) to senators and congressmen to vote for the Ellis bill to forbid the sale of liquors in army and navy canteens, soldiers' homes and immigrant stations. Such a law would prevent the whole thing. It stands a chance now of coming to a vote, and may pass if the voice of the people is heard.

The Drink Bill of the United States!

THE author of the figures appended, in regard to the cost of liquors in the United States, Dr. Hargreaves, of Philadelphia, is probably the highest authority in the world on this subject. He has made it a life study, and his statements are of the greatest value. We hope our boys in camp will study the question of how to free our beloved land from this enormous waste at the bunghole, and what is of far more serious moment how to free our own reconcentrados from the sickness, starvation and death entailed from the traffic. Every year more are slain by this enemy of human happiness than the entire loss in Cuba. Redeem Cuba from the dominion of Spain, and then return home and redeem the men and women and little children of your land from the dominion of the saloon.

Our national drink bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, was over twelve hundred and nineteen million dollars ($1,219,866,272); or more than two hundred and nine million dollars of increase over 1889, being an average of $19.47 per cent for each man, woman and child in the United States.

The drink bill of the United States from 1890 to 1895 inclusive stands as follows:

1891	1,307,656,862
1892	1,378,410,895
1893	1,583,461,988
1894	1,372,684,641
1895	1,278,054,865
Total	$8,140,135,523

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, there were registered and operated 3,158 distilleries, grain and fruit. Fruit distilleries produced 1,440,810 proof gallons; grain, etc., distilleries produced 67,039,910 proof gallons, or a total of 68,480,720 proof gallons of fifty per cent alcohol, which, when prepared for market by rectification reduction of alcohol to forty per cent, will make for consumption 72,140,864 gallons, which at $6 a gallon to consumers, will be $432,845,184. There was not less than the above when we consider that during the year there was discovered, seized, destroyed, 2,241 illicit stills, and 829 persons arrested for the business. During the same period there were 1,830 breweries that produced 35,826,098 barrels of thirty-one gallons each, or 1,110,609,038 gallons of fermented or malt liquors (ale, beer, porter, etc.), which at $20 a barrel retail, will cost the consumers not less than $716,521,960.

Besides the above domestic liquors named, there were imported foreign liquors, on which duty was paid and entered for consumption in the fiscal year 1896.

The drink bill of the United States of 1896 was not less than as follows:

Domestic spirits, 72,140,864 gallons, at $6 a gallon, $432,845,184.

Domestic ale, beer, etc., 35,826,098 barrels (1,110,609,038 gallons), at $20 a barrel, $716,521,960.

Imported spirits, brandy, 259,704 gallons, at $10 a gallon, $3,597,040.

Imported other spirits, 1,249,895 gallons, at $10 a gallon, $12,498,950.

Still wines in casks, 2,834,898 gallons, at $5 a gallon, $14,174,490.

Ale, beer, etc., 3,283,404 gallons, at $3 a gallon, $9,850,212.

Still wine, bottled, 314,190 dozens, estimated cost, $3,144,193.

Champagne and other sparkling wines, 246,303 dozens, estimated cost, 5,246,393.

Total, 560,493 dozens.

Total gallons, 1,190,377,803, costing $1,196,878,422.

Add the drink bill of 1896, $1,196,878,422, to the drink bill of the five previous years, $8,140,135,523, and we have a grand total of $9,337,013,945, or, in round numbers, more than nine billion and a quarter for that which makes a man a sure victim of yellow fever and cholera; that which hobnails the liver, paralyzes the nerves, injures the eyesight, affects the heart action and deadens and benumbs the brain, and if taken in sufficient quantities, will make a maudling idiot or a fiend out of a strong, good man.

Lady Henry Somerset's Eligibility.

WE give space below to two letters called out by the editorials in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 2, as touching the charges made against Lady Henry Somerset. Mrs. Leavitt and Anna Shaw each has a word to say:

MRS. LEAVITT'S REPLY.

EDITORS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—Kindly allow me a little space to remark upon one or two points in your recent editorial comment upon an article of mine in The Voice, and really, but not ostensibly, upon "Open Letter Number Two," which I have sent out widely.

When you said you had read all of Lady Henry's testimony before the Royal Commission, you did not mention the fact that I sent three copies to the ladies at Headquarters that they all might read all of it. None of you knew probably, that when, in replying to a letter of mine to the General Officers, Mrs. Stevenson accused me of quoting unfairly, I sent to England at considerable trouble, to procure copies to send to Headquarters. Is it likely I should have done this had the document disproved my contention? You also accuse me of treating Lady Henry's testimony unfairly, but you do not quote her words from my article, or from the entire document, one word to disprove what I have said. I ask you to do this. I wish you would publish every line of the document that contains her testimony, in order that our membership may judge for themselves. There is nothing garbled nor unfair in my treatment of Lady Henry's testimony. [The document referred to would fill nearly two entire UNION SIGNALS at a rough estimate.—EDITORS UNION SIGNAL.]

I do understand the posture of affairs in England. I do understand Lady Henry's entourage, if a foreign word will make the idea stronger I do understand the purpose of the Royal Commission, and there is nothing in them all to justify the president of the World's W. C. T. U. in making such utterances as she did in answer to question 31,699: "I am not at all certain that if there was a great diminution of drinking, and the possibilities of obtaining drink were not forced upon the people in the way they are now, that I should say in no cases should public houses (saloons) exist." Nor in answer to question 31,638: "Would you wish to make everybody a teetotaler?" "No, I should not wish to interfere with anybody who chose to take alcohol in moderate quantities."

You, too, have taken up the "drinking per se." Of course, in the act of swallowing liquid there is no sin. In that sense the per se, or the English equivalent, by or in itself, is quite correct. But it is a sin to drink, that is, swallow liquid for the purpose of committing suicide. So the W. C. T. U. has always held that it is a sin to drink alcoholic beverages, because alcohol is a poison, and because drinking it is a more or less slow suicide. It is a new thing for THE UNION SIGNAL as well as the Voice to use such quibbles in favor of drink.

You say that I asked the General Officers to request Lady Henry to resign before I wrote to herself. In that you mistake. I wrote to Lady Henry first, but mailed the two letters on the same day.

Every point in my contention holds. The gist of the whole thing lies in the want of harmony between our published principles and actions and Lady Henry's views.

I have no personal grievance against the lady. I have always liked her. I rejoiced at her coming among us. It was with great grief I began to hear and have continued to hear of her unsound views. No doubt she was too suddenly and without sufficient indoctrination elevated to the post of leader. As it is, she cannot lead the W. C. T. U. in right paths. She ought not to be re-elected in 1899.

Very sincerely,

MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

REV. ANNA SHAW ANSWERS A QUESTION.

WIANNO, CAPE COD, MASS., June 12, 1898.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have read with interest in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 2, your review of the document sent throughout the country attacking the acting president of the World's W. C. T. U. The review seems very just to all parties, and should stop the controversy. But in open letter No. 2, the question is asked individually of the members of the W. C. T. U., if, knowing the statements therein made, she would have voted for Lady Henry for President?

I most emphatically state that had I been a delegate to the Toronto Convention I would, had I then known these statements, have voted for Lady Henry Somerset as vice-president-at-large of the World's W. C. T. U.; and were I asked now, in the light of the changes which have come through the loss of our unequaled leader, if I would vote for her as president, I should answer unequivocally, YES.

Lady Henry's courageous act in confessing her error on the subject of the C. D. Acts, and the clear honest and truly womanly manner shown by her when she realized that her position was not the wisest or right one, show her to possess a courage as noble as it is rare, and prove her worthy of the highest esteem and confidence of the white-ribbon force.

I agree with THE UNION SIGNAL that at such a time as this when Lady Henry should feel the united influences of all the members of the National unions encompassing her, to safeguard her from the attacks of the common foe, it is wore than cruel to make such an attack as this which hinges upon a mere quibble of words.

I wish I might be permitted to protest with all my strength against all personal attacks through the press upon any worker, however humble, because she differs from us in methods of work. I have never heard or read of such attacks which, having been traced to their source, have not been shown to rise from jealousy or a desire to injure persons, rather than a desire to advance principles. Rather let us remember that it matters little who receives credit for work done, who claims the victory; but it matters everything that temperance, justice and the right do prevail.

A "Due Tea."

OUR "Due Tea" was simply a parlor meeting with a little different object. It was a graceful way of intimating to our Y members that it was time to pay their dues, and saved the treasurer the unpleasant duty of asking them for the money.

We met at the home of one of our new members, had a program consisting of music and readings, after which the treasurer received the dues. Then games, calculated to promote sociability, were played, and light refreshments were served. Of course, no questionable games were introduced.

We received a few new members, and every one had a pleasant evening. We felt that our "Due Tea" was a success, and our treasury replenished. (MRS.) ELLA C. BRYANT,

GEORGIA.

OUR work in Georgia is growing slowly. The three or four unions in the different colleges are in excellent condition. The schools closed in May for the year; since then our work has not been so active, but I am sure many of our Y's will go out to do good service in the country.

Anti-Gambling.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On hearing the sad news of the death of our beloved leader, dear Miss Willard, my mind was irresistibly carried back to the World's Convention in Toronto. At the last executive meeting when the superintendents of departments were appointed, I was asked if I would accept the position of superintendent of anti-gambling. I did so gladly, as I felt only too willing to do any service for God in our grand and glorious cause.

Anti-gambling is the last department added to the World's list by our gifted Chieftain. It is a work that is sadly needed among all classes, men, women and children alike. Gambling is a hideous monster, twin evil to our ruthless foe, strong drink. The misery and degradation, the debasement of soul and general deterioration of character caused by gambling quite equals, if it does not surpass, that of alcohol. It causes selfishness to grow and flourish in the heart of man until all benevolence and goodness is withered and dried up, causing him to become an Ishmael with his greed against every man. Gambling carries crime and despair in its train and frequently drives its victims to a suicide's grave. It is a great producer of crime, especially theft and embezzlement. Chaplains and governors of jails are unanimous in their testimony that a great proportion of these are the result of gambling.

This giant evil is appallingly on the increase, especially among women and children, more particularly in the forms of betting and speculation. There are such facilities for betting that the unwary can not fail to fall into the trap laid for their unsuspecting feet. Newspapers spread the knowledge, touts, roughs and bookdealers lie in wait at every street corner and infest every saloon, while even the schoolboy is given an easy opportunity to commence a habit the indulgence of which will surely lead him on the road to ruin.

Women in all the industries and walks of life have taken to betting, and there are women who tout for bets openly in the large cities. The work of the W. C. T. U. has always been for women and children, and if we wish to help in stemming this torrent of iniquity which is making such rapid progress all over the world, we must indeed educate, educate, in every possible way, by the platform, the press, and more particularly by individual effort. Let us, one and all, continually voice a protest against gambling in all its forms, proving at all times that its basic principle is simply covetuousness.

I most earnestly entreat that all countries and unions will appoint a superintendent of anti-gambling. It is a work that will bring the blessing of God with it. May He so stimulate many good women that they will gladly give part of their time and prayers to the furtherance of this most important branch of our work for God and Home and Every Land.

Your loving comrade,

(MISS) J. WARE,
World's Supt. of Anti-Gambling.
Present address: Care Messrs. Cook & Son, Ludgate Circus, London, Eng.

Tasmania.

WE are now busily engaged in circulating a petition praying that the franchise may be extended to women. This petition is to be an expression of the wishes of the adult residents of Tasmania, and will be presented to Parliament during the coming session. The canvassers for signatures are meeting with much encouragement, and we believe that a strong embodiment of what is desired for women will go up to our Parliament. We are sure that our American white-ribboners will unite with us in the prayer that God will crown our efforts with success. A bill to enfranchise women has twice passed the House of Assembly, and the same number of times has been rejected by the Legislative Council, although last year the majority against the bill was smaller than on the previous year.

Mrs. Nicholls, Australasian president, has been visiting the south and midlands, strengthening and building up unions, and holding public meetings, and some for women only. At Richmore the L. T. L. took part in a good public meeting, presided over by their secretary, Miss Ethel Searle. At Oatlands an exceedingly good meeting was held in the Rechabite Hall. A cordial welcome was extended by Mr. Terry on behalf of the I. O. R. This is the first time a W. C. T. U. meeting has been held there. At Tunbridge and Ross meetings were held and quickened interest in our work was created.

Campbell Town, where a small union exists, was next visited, and here Mrs. Nicholls held two fine meetings. One when the Sunday-schools held a united service at which Mr. Hart presided, Mrs. Nicholls' address was listened to with interest, and in order to encourage the children to thoughtful hearing, Mr. Hart offered two prizes for the best report of the meeting. The other meeting was held on the following night, when the Rev. F. Fergus occupied the chair, and Mrs. Nicholls spoke on the aims of the W. C. T. U. From Campbell Town, Mrs. Nicholls proceeded to St. Helens, and there succeeded in organizing a union and also an L. T. L., thus planting for the first time our holy principles on the east coast of this island. A good franchise meeting was held, when the Rev. L'Oste took the chair. To Evandale was the next step, and there a small union was strengthened and encouraged. Meetings were held at Longford, and but for the inability to get a president a union would have been formed. Hagley was next visited, and here a stirring public meeting was held, at which the Rev. A. Hardie presided. Mrs. Nicholls spoke vigorously on the need of combined effort to overthrow the drink traffic, and dwelt largely upon the rapid growth and development of the W. C. T. U. in all lands.

The members of the Strahan union (just in its infancy) are holding meetings with the object of raising funds to build a W. C. T. U. hall.

At a meeting of the Church of England Synod lately held in Hobart, a resolution was passed by a large majority—particularly of the clergy—which admits members of either sex on the parish circuit. This innovation will doubtless tell for good, and is the beginning of an entrance into a wider sphere of service for Him who is the Head of His church.

News from the Field.

Minnesota.

FARIBAULT county held its eleventh annual convention in Blue Earth City early in May.

Mrs. Fannie S. Norton, the president, reported that she had visited all the unions in the county, and organized three new ones. The convention expressed, by a rising vote, its hearty appreciation of Mrs. Norton's work. Sixteen departments of work are taken up by the county, and most of them received a fair share of attention. The president, in her annual address, especially urged the importance of work among the children as among the most helpful and fruitful in results. The Y hour was conducted by Miss Sharp; music and reports so filled the available time that recitations were regretfully omitted. The Catholic Total abstinence Union sent inspiring words of cheer through its president, and the work of that organization was reported by Miss Julia Casey, who stated that the society has 237 members in the county. Excellent papers were read by Dr. Helen Hughes, Mrs. Dr. Durgin, Mrs. Root and Mrs. Klinefelter, on Mothers' Influence, Environment, Christian Statesmanship and Suffrage. In the evening a large audience was addressed by Rev. Alice Palmer.

Wells union, one of the new ones organized by Mrs. Norton, has taken hold of the work very energetically. Their memorial meeting for our beloved Chieftain was carefully planned and carried out, resulting in a good collection for the Temple, besides the educational power for good in the community which must result from such meetings.

Delavan union, also in the same county, is an old and well established working union, "very much alive," their president declares. They brought the license question before the people and gained many friends, although defeated by two votes. Victory surely will come if they continue to gain friends.

Hennepin county's thirteenth annual convention was held May 3 and 4 in Minneapolis. Two days filled with a feast of good things, reports of work done, exhortations to yet more liberal planning and thorough execution, discussions of methods, made up a program hard to condense. Mrs. Frances Neal, the beloved president, in her address, recommended having a vice-president in each church, whose especial duty it shall be to solicit members, active and honorary, for the W. C. T. U.; the wearing of the white ribbon faithfully was urged, also reporting work done; "white-ribbon women are famous for work, but not good at reporting. The records of these days will be helpful to the future." The National Temperance Hospital was recommended to the unions, and the Temple, "for which our now sainted leader gave all she had and then laid down her life." The first evening of the convention was occupied by a gold medal contest, and on the second our "brother-in-law" Rev. J. B. Hingeley, gave an address.

LeRoy union has held three silver and one gold medal contest. In one of the contests given by matrons, three of the speakers were women who suffer from the drink evil in their homes. The sight of their sad faces and the pathos of their sorrow-toned voices pleaded most eloquently for the extermination of the curse of the saloon. In one of the young people's contests the most unassuming and unexpecting speaker won the medal. The union has distributed a very large amount of literature, mostly to lumber camps; has sent their nickel-a-member offering to the National Hospital, and filled ten fifty-cent cards for the Temple, besides holding gospel temperance meetings and inducing pastors to preach on Sabbath observance. They also held a memorial meeting for our National and state workers gone on before.

Waterville union held a similar memorial service, using the occasion in part to impress upon the audience the necessity of united effort and earnest work. A new member for the union was gained, and a very good collection taken for the Temple. They set apart one month in which to make special effort for the Temple. A "Brother-in-law Social" was held, which was a grand success in attendance, entertainment, refreshments and receipts, and the brothers-in-law covered themselves with glory, having proved themselves admirable hosts. Miss Hollister visited the union recently. Her lecture "seemed only half long enough," writes one of the workers. Before her coming some of the workers had gone to the neighboring town of Elysian, trying to work up a union there. Miss Hollister then went thither, speaking one evening and holding a parlor meeting. But, although the lecture as well as the courtesy of the Waterville union in sending Miss Hollister to them was much appreciated, the Elysian people did not feel quite ready to form a union. But they urged Miss Hollister to come again very soon, and promised to read the goodly quantity of literature left with them.

Redwood county held its annual convention in Redwood Falls, continuing two days. The attendance was good despite inclement weather. An address by Miss Hollister on purity, and one by G. H. Way, on the relation of parents to the public schools, lent much interest to the first afternoon. For the second afternoon Miss Hitchcock, state evangelistic superintendent, had arranged an evangelistic service which was most edifying. Miss Hollister spoke again, on the field and the need, and Rev. K. White on the pulpit in its relation to temperance and purity; and Rev. J. F. Barrackman talked of the responsibility of Christian citizens. Several excellent papers were read, including one by Miss Cora Adsit, of Belview, on what young people's societies can do for temperance. The morning sessions were occupied by business routine and reports of superintendents. The first evening there was a juvenile medal contest which proved a great attraction. The first and second prizes were won by Masters Smith Tiffany and Claud Jennings. On the second evening Miss Hollister gave a fine address.

Redwood Falls union is rejoicing over the transformation of a saloon into a grocery. One of the saloonkeepers was in the habit of selling beer to children to carry home. The ladies induced the county attorney to prosecute the man for allowing children to visit the saloon, and at the trial gave evidence proving the visits. The saloonkeeper's attorney claimed that the children did not remain in the saloon long enough to come under the meaning of the law, and the jury disagreed. But the county attorney secured an admission from one of the partners that he had sold beer to a minor. He was charged with that offense, and would have been tried, but preferred to walk up and pay his fine, after which the saloon closed and the grocery opened. Would that such a change of heart and occupation were everyday occurrences.

Granite Falls union held a memorial service, addressed by two of the ministers of the place. The church could not hold the people who desired to attend, and many were turned away. The union held services on Good Friday, three of the pastors addressing those present, all of whom felt well repaid for attending. At a recent meeting this union entered upon an unique contest. The president and vice-president "chose sides," after the manner of a spelling school, each side to try to secure the larger number of new members, and whichever side wins provide a supper for all the union, especially inviting the new members.

Wood Lake union held a memorial service, the principal address being by Mrs. Carrie Estey Miller; a large collection was taken for the Temple. The Y of Wood Lake has recently taken up medal contest work and are planning largely along that line. May success attend them. They have also invested liberally in literature for department work.

A letter from the state evangelistic superintendent speaks of the success of gospel temperance meetings held in various places in the state; Mankato unions are especially mentioned. Miss Hitchcock urges everywhere the forming of communion circles, house-to-house visitation, and the adoption of Prof. Harper's Bible club course of study, which she considers especially good.

A letter from our state president gives a glimpse of her journeyings. She had just attended Winona and Olmstead county conventions. Winona unions are greatly grieved over the death of Mrs. E. Hallowell, who died very suddenly of heart trouble. The Winona county convention had expected her to take part in the program, and her name was printed thereon, but instead of listening to her counsel, the convention adjourned to attend her funeral and take part in the last sad tribute, carrying flowers to drop upon the casket as it was lowered in the grave.

Mrs. Scovell remained in Winona a week, speaking four times publicly, visiting normal and high schools in the interests of the work, speaking at a parlor meeting one afternoon and meeting the young ladies on another.

Hastings union held a Temple entertainment some little time ago, receiving therefrom $11.50 for our House Beautiful. The same letter which tells of this speaks also of a new union organized at Farmington, these two being the only unions in Dakota county. New members are being added to these, and indications are encouraging.

"HOW best to carry forward the work," are words oft repeated in every county in our state. The state central executive (five officers) was in session May 10–12 at the home of our state president. Letters were sent to each county president setting forth plans, etc. We decided to have Miss Willard's last message about the Temple, the National officers' communication and a state official letter in June Bulletin. The paper was sent to every union in the state, and to each state president, etc. The appeal decided by the state executive committee was, that while heartily approving of the plan recommended by National W. C. T. U., we also recommend that a voluntary offering of one dollar per member be contributed to the Temple in order to make it a Willard memorial. This is to be a free-will offering from the unions or members, as all will desire a part in this sacred memorial.

Organization in needy counties, department work, arrangements for the state convention, to be held in Reading, October 14 to 18, were among the many things claiming our attention. It was my pleasure to meet with the workers in Reading for two days, and truly we find it "better farther on," as we come to the next "gathering of the clans." Already the women have the printed paper and envelopes, with motto, bow of white and different committees thereon. We believe in the "improvement plan," and the sisters in Reading are wide-awake and up-to-date.

At the conference on Sabbath Reform, held in Philadelphia May 17 to 19, Mrs. O. P. Amies, state recording secretary, gave greetings for the W. C. T. U. in an able and pleasing manner. Mrs. Chambers, state president, and H. Frances Jones, state corresponding secretary, presented the work, and assured the members of the organization of our hearty support and coöperation. From our state superintendent of Sabbath observance, Mrs. R. J. George, we have this message:

"Some months ago Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts said that 'Sabbath desecration was on the increase, and would grow worse and worse till the churches would be aroused.' Happily we now see some indications of such an arousement.

"The stirring resolutions in church assemblies owe their origin to certain revelations of the perils surrounding our Sabbath. It will be well if the tide can be turned. Faithful, prayerful laborers to circulate the best literature in this department is the need of the hour."

Our faithful superintendent of mothers' meetings, Mrs. E. Stephens, is afield doing excellent work. In one trip she says, "I have spoken every day but two for four weeks, and have three weeks more engaged. Have organized mothers' meetings in every place where they have not taken up the work, and have secured thirty-five new members." Miss Angie M. Lewis, Potter county, writes: "W. C. T. U. work is keeping up well in our county. As press superintendent I edit a column in one of our weekly papers and, as the news comes from the local unions, I am kept well informed as to their work and meetings, and can truthfully say the interest seems to be increasing. Miss Willard's death touched many hearts, and we have a harvest of new members. I am again using the plan so successful when I was corresponding secretary a number of years ago, of having a county honor roll to be displayed at our convention. We had a very interesting Christian Citizenship meeting at Genesee recently. Especially were we pleased with a paper by one of the merchants, 'A Business Man's Idea of Christian Citizenship.' We have an active force of county superintendents. I have been a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL and Bulletin since I came to know the work. [No wonder she is up-to-date in all her work.] We have had excellent work done by Mr. C. J. Hall. He secured members (100 in one place) for all unions visited."

Northumberland county is neither dead nor sleeping. The county president, Miss Margaretta Watson, now in office for over seven years, is a firm believer in the cause and that will make a good officer wherever placed. They held an interesting annual, and also mid-year convention. The annual was held at Milton. The first evening was devoted to president's address, and an address of welcome by the prohibition mayor, etc. The second evening's program was a gold medal contest with a reception.

The energetic county president also writes of the activity in all the unions. She is visiting the workers and reports that we can count on her county to be loyal in every effort to promote the best interests of the work.

"Mistakes will occur in the best regulated family," and some how one slipped in last time about Delaware county. Miss E. A. Shrigley writes, "We have about 550 members. At the semi-annual convention twenty-five unions reported an increase of 180 members since annual report."

In Clinton county we find the workers in Nittany Valley W doing all they can in various ways. The collections from memorial services are to be sent for the Temple fund. The high school celebrated arbor day by planting trees for Miss Willard and Hon. Neal Dow. Gospel temperance meetings are held every Sabbath afternoon. "Nickels" are being gathered for the Temperance Hospital and their aim is to double their membership.

Mrs. Preston, state secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion, made a ten days' visit in Lebanon county. Two new Legions organized, one Y and a number of new members added to the W. C. T. U. and the L. T. L. Thirteen meetings were held, each one being full of interest and creating and strengthening temperance sentiment. One of the most interesting meetings was held at Campbellstown, where Mrs. Preston succeeded in organizing a Legion with thirty-six members. At the close of the evening meeting a number of young women crowded around her eager to hear more of the work of the L. T. L., when some one asked, "Can we not organize a Y right now?" "You can," and it was done—seven of the members giving their names to the new organization. Mrs. Bruce, the county president of the W. C. T. U., and Miss Becker, the county superintendent of L. T. L., were ever ready to aid and were both at Campbelltown to help start the work there.

Bucks: In response to a call from the county superintendent, representatives from seven of the Legions met at Dolington, despite the rain, on Saturday, May 7, for the purpose of organizing a county L. T. L. Mrs. Preston, state secretary of Pennsylvania L. T. L. branch, was present and spoke of the advantages of perfect organization. A constitution was adopted and the provisions for county membership—the signing of triple pledge and payment of five cents county dues.

Butler: Zelienople L. T. L. is having a series of open meetings every Monday evening, where our L. T. L. principles are being presented. As a result of a talk upon tobacco by Dr. Cunningham, two young men threw away their tobacco and offered to sign the triple pledge, much encouraged by the large, well-pleased audience.

With love and an intense zeal to carry into many homes and lives "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," the members have taken hold and are selling the book so finely written by the choice friend and helper of many years, Miss Anna Gordon. A number of agents are giving some part of their profit to the local unions, and we trust numbers will learn the "better way" as this living epistle is read and known throughout the world.

THE sixteenth annual convention was held at Fort Worth, May 17–19, in St. Paul's M. E. church. Sixty delegates, representing forty-four unions, were present, besides many W. C. T. U. visitors from various parts of the state. Three sessions were held each day.

We had for a guest Mrs. Minnie

Downey, of Colgate, I. T. She had just come from the territorial convention, held at Atoka, and brought greetings from them to us. Her request that we loan our state president to them for a month was granted, as we still have our efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. Kirtland, at the helm. All of our general officers were unanimously re-elected.

Consecration services were held each morning before the opening of convention. Executive meetings were held between times, to plan work, and each state superintendent at the same time met her locals to compare notes and plan work, so that not one moment was lost.

In a large room adjoining the auditorium dinner and supper were served each day to both delegates and visitors by different church denominations; the supply was so bountiful that large boxes were sent to our soldier laddies at Camp Mabry, at Austin.

During each evening service hymns and pictures were thrown upon an eighteen-foot screen by an electric lantern, Rev. J. Hervy Dobbs having charge of this feature of the occasion; he also gave interesting talks and descriptions while the audience joined in singing the hymns thrown upon the canvas.

The mayor, B. B. Paddock, in his address of welcome, said he had not been called on to detail any special police, so he felt safe in offering us the freedom of the city, and the Fort Worth Morning Register, in its splendid report of the proceedings said: "He certainly voiced the sentiment of the people whom he represented." Rev. George McAdam, pastor of St. Paul's church, welcomed us on behalf of the churches; Mr. J. G. Reeves, on behalf of the Y. M. C. A.; Professor Bates, on behalf of the educational institutions of the city; Dr. J. L. Cooper, on behalf of the medical fraternity, Mrs. Anna A. Walker, for the fraternal organizations, and Mr. C. W. Hoelzle, in behalf of the press. Mrs. Casten, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of the eighth district, presented Madam President with a beautiful silk quilt with the names of most of the members embroidered on it, for which they contributed scraps and ten cents to be added to the local treasury. Another surprise was the presentation of a lovely shoulder cape by Mrs. Phoenix, president of Fort Worth union, in behalf of the convention. Mrs. Stoddard was taken entirely by surprise, and showed her gratification in a most pleasing manner.

Mrs. Phoenix welcomed us in behalf of the local W. C. T. U. Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis, president of the Sherman union, responded to all the welcoming addresses and proved herself a most talented orator. She was elected state organizer.

The prominent workers whose resignations were accepted—with regret—by the convention are, Mrs. C. Kidd, of Austin, superintendent of colored work, and Mrs. Carter, of Corpus Christi, superintendent of work among sailors. The best reports I have received have come from these dear sisters.

The president made the following suggestions for the various unions to consider:

1. Each union subscribe for a liquor paper. In no other way can we learn the strength or weakness of the foe we fight.

2. Petition the legislature for an industrial school for criminal girls. This is to give the same chance for girls that the state gives to criminal boys in the boys' reformatory.

3. Compilation of laws which affect women in our state. This to be issued instead of minutes.

4. Each union hold one parlor or public meeting during the year with opportunity given for free-will offering, to be used to help the World's W. C. T. U. The program to be distinctively a World's program.

5. A prize given to students in the free schools by our unions for the best essay on effect of alcohol or tobacco.

Miss M. L. Carter, of Hillsboro, gave an exhaustive report on flower mission work in the state, and closed by reading an original paper entitled "The First Flowers."

Miss Lila Adami, a graduate of Sherman College, soon to graduate from the Evangelistic training school in New York city, has been elected state evangelist of the W. C. T. U., and has devoted her life to the work. Mrs. Lizzie Johnson's report of prison work was most interesting. It is to be remembered that she was chosen by the governor of our state to represent the work at the Prison Congress held in Austin.

A table containing temperance, social purity and franchise literature was kept for free distribution, and the Willard buttons of various sizes and prices, with souvenir photos of Miss Willard and Lady Somerset with the White Ribbon Hymnal were on sale. "How to reach the Rural Districts" became a subject for animated discussion, and it was decided that the best way was by literature and organization.

Our state paper has been transferred to Austin, with Mrs. Pennel, editor, and Mrs. Vredenberg, business manager.

A set of resolutions embracing every line of work of the W. C. T. U., to which the convention had pledged united effort, were adopted. The L. T. L. of the Burchill orphan asylum, organized by Miss Fannie Armstrong, gave an interesting exhibition on the evening of the 18th. The grateful sense of our obligation to Miss Velma Standifer, who had charge of decorations; to Mrs. Walton, who looked after the dining-room, and Mrs. Kate Patterson, chairman of entertainment committee, was expressed; also to Mr. George Cox, who met each train night or day, and looked after the comfort of all.

The memorial services held in honor of Neal Dow and Frances E. Willard were highly interesting. The program was interspersed with suitable music and recitations. Pictures of Miss Willard, Neal Dow and the Temple were thrown upon the canvas, at sight of which the vast audience arose, the white-ribboners in tears, and gave the silent Chautauqua salute. Everybody joined hands and sang "God be with you till we meet again" with great earnestness.

New York.

WITH hearts still sore with grief for the loss of our glorious leader, the white-ribboners of the Empire state are again smitten, with a nearer and more personal sorrow, by the sudden and unlooked-for death of the beloved state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt. While it has been evident for the past three years that our president's health was failing, she seemed so much stronger at our last state convention than at the preceding one, we were led to hope that the end was far in the future. All through the year she had been active as usual, planning for the legislative and petition work, of which committee she was chairman, speaking often at public meetings, working far beyond her strength. The extra effort, excitement and grief consequent upon the death and obsequies of her beloved leader and long-time comrade, Miss Willard, no doubt hastened her own death.

Mrs. Burt was in the fullest sense of the word, consecrated (set apart) to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. No other organization or cause divided with it her affections and her efforts. From the days of the Crusade till the day when she lay down to die, "in the harness," she was a tireless and dauntless white-ribboner. Of her work in this state, I cannot attempt to speak here. The dearest wish of her heart—next to the prohibition of the liquor traffic—was that the W. C. T. U. of the Empire state might have a building of its own in New York city, a permanent headquarters, which should be worthy of this great organization. The carrying out of her cherished desire would be a fitting memorial to our honored leader.

Reports of county conventions are unusually good, and at most of them the young people have taken a prominent part. Herkimer county convention was held at Mohawk. A silver medal contest in which seven contestants took part, was held the first evening. Miss Fannie Schermer, of Herkimer, won the medal. Belated reports of the National, state and World's Conventions, memorial services for Miss Willard and Mrs. Burt, and papers on several representative American women, and on "The Evolution of the Temperance Question," were some of the many interesting features of the two days' program. Miss Celia Hutton and Miss Mary Haviland Sutton were the evening speakers. Notice was given that at the fall convention action would be taken in regard to holding but one convention a year hereafter. I sincerely hope no county in the state will take such a backward step as the one proposed, and commended to the careful attention of the sisters in Herkimer county, Hebrews 10:23-25.

Madison county convention was entertained at Perryville, by the Young Women's Branch, there being no W. C. T. U. in the place. Rather a novel situation, but the Y's proved themselves adepts in the art of entertaining. As there are five Y Branches in the county—four of them being the result of Miss Rhena Mosher's splendid work last winter—of course there was a Y evening, with a most entertaining program. A Y delegate from each Branch told in a three-minute speech, "What We Are Doing." An excellent paper on "Clara Parrish" was followed by a liberal collection for the Clara Parrish fund. There were readings, recitations, vocal and violin solos by the young people, and an address by a young M. D., Miss Lavinia Davis, who is state superintendent of franchise. Thirteen new members were gained by the Perryville Y. The convention was one of the largest ever held in the county. Among the subjects discussed were the Temple, curfew laws, franchise and the sale of liquor in camps. A memorial service for the National and state leader was held. Miss Celia Hutton, president of Yates county, was the speaker the last evening. The work in this county has been greatly strengthened this year. The union at Onedia has been especially active, having raised nearly one hundred dollars for the Temple and ten dollars for the Anchorage at Elmira. They find parlor meetings and mothers' meetings especially helpful. A maple sugar social and a "Temple tea" were successful financially and socially. The union mourns the loss of three of its best loved members: Mrs. F. E. Sawyer, Mrs. E. P. Chapman and Miss Eleanor Ferguson.

Cayuga county convention was well attended and excellent reports from all parts of the county showed the work to be flourishing. The report from the new union of colored women at Auburn was received with applause. Five clergymen were present. Many tributes were paid to the life and character of Miss Willard, and to Mrs. Burt, who was reared in this county and began her W. C. T. U. work at Auburn, and there she was laid to rest. Auburn white-ribboners are making great preparations to entertain the state Senior L. T. L. convention in July.

Sullivan county convention held at Hurleyville, discussed "The relation, or duty, of the W. C. T. U. to our national holidays." A paper on "The Redemption of our Nation's Birthday," was read. One member gave an interesting account of the Fourth of July celebrations of her youth, when the "Sunday-school celebration" was the great event of the year, in country villages, to both children and adults. An hour of one afternoon was occupied by the county Senior L. T. L. An able address by the young president, Mr. Ray F. Finch, was enjoyed by all. The first evening was devoted to welcomes and responses, and to addresses by several clergymen of the county. The second evening was filled with choice music and recitations by the Seniors and fraternal delegates, and an address on "The relation of young people to the temperance cause," by Mrs. S. R. Morris, president of Richmond county W. C. T. U. A touching memorial service for our promoted leaders was held. Talks on department work by several superintendents, a discussion of the various methods recommended for replenishing W. C. T. U. treasuries, and a Bible reading by Mrs. Morris, were all very interesting and instructive. A large delegation of the Junior L. T. L. met every train, escorted delegates to the church and carried their luggage, while the young ladies of the Senior Legion waited at table. This ingenious arrangement served the double purpose of interesting the young folks and children personally in the convention, and of lessening the labors of the entertaining union.

Niagara county white-ribboners met at Sanborn, and carried out a fine program. There was an interesting symposium on "Narcotics," and a general discussion of the question, "Should all Church Members Belong to the W. C. T. U., and Why?" An excellent paper on "The

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK.

Power of the Press'' was read, and a group of papers on the ''Models which make up a good union.'' The county treasurer was surprised by the gift of a gold watch from the local unions.

At the Steuben county convention the first evening was given to the Senior L. T. L., who rendered a very entertaining program. A delegation of Ithaca Seniors, chaperoned by their superintendent, visited a neighboring town and held a meeting with the young people, which resulted in organizing a flourishing Senior class there.

The Senior L. T. L. of Newark Valley held a memorial service for Miss Willard. They had a large audience. The Junior Legion helped in the singing, and Mrs. Nellie H. Hutchinson gave the address. This same Senior Legion held a maple sugar social, which was both pleasant and profitable, and helped furnish funds for the entertainment of the county L. T. L. convention. The Senior movement is spreading in every part of the state, and the young folks are looking forward with joyful impatience to their annual gathering in July, which will be held this year at Auburn, when they will welcome home their state president, Fred D. L. Squires, who has been studying at the North Dakota University this year.

The agitation about the sale of liquor in department stores resulted in a law prohibiting such sales.

Kentucky.

JUNE 9 is a red letter day in Kentucky penitentiary at Frankfort. The prisoners have but two holidays during the year; at Christmas, when some of the ladies of the W. C. T. U. always visit them and hold religious services and furnish cakes, so that each inmate may have a slice for his dinner. After Christmas is over the prisoners eagerly look forward to Flower Mission Day as another link that binds them to the outside world, for at that time a number of W. C. T. U. women from the ninth district go to the penitentiary, in loving remembrance of the birthday of one who ever had a kindly, tender thought for those behind the prison bars.

Last year no holiday was given the prisoners on Flower Mission Day, but this year the old custom of making it a gala day prevailed. The chapel where the services were held was prettily decorated for the occasion, and was twice filled, as there are so many prisoners (about thirteen hundred) all could not be seated at one time.

The warden read a letter from Mrs. Munnell, of Louisville, who could not be present owing to illness, and all were filled with regret that she could not be with them, as has been her custom for fourteen years past, and prayers were offered for her speedy recovery.

Mrs. Beauchamp, state president, and Mrs. Lehman, of Louisville, conducted the services, in which the prisoners seemed very much interested, and some of them very much touched.

One thing that was noted as the men filed into their seats, was the absence of stripes on many of them, they wearing a dark gray suit, and the warden explained that those wearing the gray suits had not violated a single rule of the prison for a year, and that there were many more who deserved them, but they had not as yet been able to get them made. One incident was mentioned by the warden: He said there was one prisoner who had been there nine years, and had kept each bouquet given him on Flower Mission Day. He had them in a little box, with the Scripture texts on them, and some were tied with white ribbon.

After the services for the men was over, the ladies went to the female department and held a meeting there. It is probably known to many that two women guards have charge of the female prisoners now, and the warden expressed himself as being very much pleased with the result, and that everything had improved wonderfully since they have been in charge. The two guards are consecrated, godly women, and both white-ribboners.

The convention of the seventh district met at Georgetown early in May, and was the best they have ever had. Forty-four delegates were present, and many of the superintendents, who gave good reports of the work accomplished, and some very excellent papers were read.

A beautiful memorial service for Miss Willard was held.

Mr. Volney B. Cushing, of Maine, who lectured in various parts of the state in May, was present and gave two lectures, with which everybody was very much pleased. The following district officers were elected: President, Miss Annie Miller; corresponding secretary, Miss Katie Christian; recording secretary, Mrs. Bettie Barber; treasurer, Miss Nannie Phelps.

The first annual convention of the eighth district was held at Lancaster, May 17–19. The convention opened Tuesday evening, May 17, with the first grand gold medal contest ever held in the state. About one hundred temperance recitations in various parts of the district preceded this grand consummation of the contest work. Young ladies from Madison, Laurel, Rockcastle and Garrard counties took part in the contest, which was conducted by Mrs. Rosalind Nesbitt, of Mount Vernon. The medal was awarded to Miss Alberta Anderson, of Lancaster.

The convention proper was formally opened May 18. The reports from the unions were very encouraging and showed activity all along the line. A memorial service for Miss Willard was held, conducted by Miss Anderson.

Mrs. Frances Beauchamp was present during the whole of the convention, and gave a lecture one evening to a large audience, at the Presbyterian church, who listened with close attention to her for an hour. Mr. Cushing also gave two lectures during the convention, one a temperance lecture and the other a popular one, ''The Lost Atlantis.'' The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. May Patterson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Robert Elkin; recording secretary, Mrs. Rosalind Nesbitt; treasurer, Mrs. Sam Ward.

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR SISTERS:—Letters of inquiry are constantly coming to me, asking ''what shall we send to our soldier boys and where shall we send?'' Again I quote what was told me by Medical Director Bloodgood who is at the head of all relief work for the navy. He said: ''We want for the sick canned delicate soups, extracts of meat, clam bouillon, clam juice, farinaceous foods, such as flaked rice, wheatena, wheatlet, germea, tapioca, farina, sago, barley, gelatine, gelatina, evaporated fruits (if in glass or boxes), jellies, lime and fruit juices, lemons and oranges.'' These should be expressed, prepaid, to ''Medical Director Bloodgood, Naval Hospital, Brooklyn, New York.'' Inclose in each box a list of the articles and by whom sent. Write by mail to Dr. Bloodgood telling him that you have shipped them and by what route. Such delicacies are needed at all of the camps as well as at the naval hospital.

I visited our ship Solace on receipt of a telegram from Dr. Bloodgood and found it to be a model for comfort, convenience, and help for our wounded and sick soldiers. The surgeon in charge is very kind, and spoke in great praise of the help sent by the women of America. I also visited the sick and wounded in the naval hospital; fifty-six of them were brought up in the Solace. Six of these were wounded in cutting the cable at Cienfuegos. One boy was shot four times, twice in the side, once in the arm, and then in the head. Thrilling stories were told me. One injured boy from Maine signed my pledge and said he wanted to live a Christian life, and that in two days he would be twenty-one years old. I sent flowers to all of these boys and literature when I reached home, and to the last named a large bunch of white roses tied with white ribbon, telling him that I prayed God that his life might be as pure as the roses. They have no reading-room there, and will be glad to receive good magazines, leaflets, etc.; send addressed, Robert Volz, and others, Naval Hospital, Brooklyn, New York. I was told that delicacies did not reach these boys on the Solace, and I wrote at once to Dr. Bloodgood, and he forwarded my letter to Surgeon-General Van Reypen, who replied that they came too late for the Solace, so they were sent by the Resolute to the hospital at Key West, and I received a letter of thanks from the surgeon in control there acknowledging the boxes.

Comfort bags can be used by the thousands. One quarter yard cretonne or other stout material, cut in two will make two bags. Put a tape draw string at the top. Put in 2 sizes pant buttons, 2 sizes pearl or agate buttons, tape, needles, heavy black thread, white cotton, No. 40; a rolled bandage of old muslin, about 1½ inches wide, darning needles and cotton, court plaster, a flannel bandage about ⅜ yard wide, 1¼ yards long, and ½ dozen safety pins; pledge cards (one cent each; send to National superintendent for them), temperance leaflets, W. T. P. A., Testament (small ones can be bought of American Bible Society, five cents each), and Gospel Hymns; a letter telling of your interest and sympathy for the soldier and asking him to reply and to sign the pledge. White-ribboners are not restricted to these articles and they are not obliged to put all these things in.

Appeal after appeal comes from the unions supplying the camps saying, ''The work is so great and finances so low, we beg of you to help.'' The secretary of the Army Christian Commission of the International committee Y. M. C. A. wrote to Mrs. Kate Stewart, Jacksonville, Fla., asking for ''delicacies for our sick soldiers.'' The union there is doing all it can, but must have help.

A reading tent was opened at Jacksonville June 1, at 10 A. M., and by June 3, 4 P. M., more than one thousand soldiers had patronized it, and ninety-two letters had been written. Daily home papers and magazines would indeed be a treat for these reading tents.

Mrs. Stewart, of Tampa, Fla., says, ''delicacies can not be purchased here but should be sent from the North,'' and begs that they be sent.

Our women visit the hospitals, sing and pray and leave flowers behind them to brighten and cheer, as well as distribute supplies. At Camp Alger, Miss L. H. Chase, district superintendent at Washington, and her helpers, are doing this work. At Chattanooga, Jacksonville and Tampa white-ribboners are faithful, but the work is too heavy, and they must have help. Now let us come forward with our money, delicacies, comfort bags, literature, paper, envelopes, with any and everything to make the lives of our soldiers brighter and show them that the W. C. T. U. is the mother heart of this great nation.

Let me suggest that the towns for which our cruisers, torpedo boats, etc., are named, interest themselves to provide for them, and that the unions of each state look after the troops of that state as much as possible.

Here is a list of addresses. Their needs are so great that I beg of you to send as fast as possible:

"After I was induced to try CASCARETS, I will never be without them in the house. My liver was in a very bad shape, and my head ached and I had stomach trouble. Now, since taking Cascarets, I feel fine. My wife has also used them with beneficial results for sour stomach."

Miss L. H. Chase, 40 I St., Washington, D. C., for Camp Alger.

Mrs. Hester Griffith, Los Angeles, Cal., for Camp Merritt.

Medical Director Bloodgood, Naval Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., for navy relief.

Everything must be prepaid. Money should be sent to me, or to Mrs. Barker, National treasurer, and I will distribute to the most needy places to purchase ice, milk and other perishable necessities.

The canteen has its way in nearly all the camps. President McKinley and Secretaries Alger and Long should be deluged with petitions to abolish the canteen from the army and navy, and senators and representatives should be importuned to vote for the Ellis bill which would do away with it.

Prizes Offered.

DEAR CONTEST WORKERS:—A very efficient and successful local superintendent has reminded me that while a prize has been offered to the state superintendent sending in the best report of work accomplished, no inducement has been made to local superintendents to increase interest in their work. The department acts upon the suggestion and now offers as a prize to the local union holding the largest number of contests during the next three months, the "Life of Miss Willard," and as second prize THE UNION SIGNAL for one year. There is no better time during the year to hold contests, and especially L. T. L's, than now, as the children are out of school and have time to commit recitations. Any local superintendent competing for prize must observe rules and procure medals from, and report to, her state superintendent. In case there is no state superintendent of contest work send to

(MRS.) A. E. CARMAN,
The Temple, Chicago.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

I am glad to commend the plan for organization as adopted this year by the Michigan W. T. C. U. The state convention pledged itself to more aggressive work in the line of organization for the coming year, and the following circular was sent to each local union:

"DEAR SISTERS OF THE LOCAL UNION:—We intend to send some field workers through the state, and one of these will be available at your place on the following conditions: First, that you will carefully work up a good meeting both for afternoon and evening. Second, that you make extra effort for a good collection (some money pledged beforehand would be a good plan), which shall be turned over to the speaker. Third, that you entertain the speaker.

"We hope you will avail yourselves of this opportunity. It is imperative that you take the date which shall be sent to you, as our speaker can not well go over the same ground twice. Send word at once to your district president and to the state corresponding secretary if you will receive Mrs. ———, on ———. This is done in accordance with a special effort planned by the National to increase our membership before September 15. In order to secure this speaker, you must decide and answer at once. Consult your officers or call a special meeting and do not wait for a regular meeting.

"We ask you also to establish a mission station in some place near you, and hold meetings and distribute literature until the women will have interest sufficient to organize a union. This is W. C. T. U. mission work."

It seems inevitable that so business-like an effort must produce the desired result, and I am earnestly hoping that other states which are pledged to organizing work, and indeed what state should not be so pledged, will adopt this year a like plan. We confidently expect at the next National Convention to welcome Michigan into the list of states having made a gain of five hundred.

Miss Rhena Mosher, of Northeast, Penn., one of our newly appointed Y organizers, has done admirable work during this year. She has had most enthusiastic mention from the papers in towns wherever she has spoken, and old unions have been built up and strengthened by her work and new members added to those already organized. She does not confine her efforts to the Y's, but speaks often for the mother unions. She expects to be in Illinois and Indiana during July and August, and would be glad to arrange for dates. Both before and after the National Convention she will be open for engagements in the Central and Northwestern states. Her terms are reasonable, and it is to be hoped many unions will be able to avail themselves of her services.

I am venturing to quote from a personal letter from Mrs. M. M. Allen, our National superintendent of the department of unfermented wine. She writes: "You will remember that in Miss Willard's annual address at Cleveland, she recommended that each local union should correspond with a local union bearing the same initial letter in some other country. In executive meeting this was moved by Mrs. Burt and carried. Our union is acting upon it. We have not found a union in any other country, but we, Attica, are corresponding with a colored union in Augusta, Ga., through its president, Mrs. Jennie Whyte, an earnest, able, consecrated woman. She has organized and carries on a strong Sunday-school, has a night school and has opened up W. C. T. U. headquarters. Our union is becoming so interested in Mrs. Whyte's work that we have sent her a large barrel of books for her reading room, clothing, etc. Her letters lend great interest to our meeting. We send our papers to her for her reading room, and are anticipating a Christmas box. She has recently reorganized a colored union of forty members." I am sure the "Go thou and do likewise" is not needed after this quotation. It speaks itself. Nothing could be more helpful to our colored work in the South than to have the unions in the North take upon themselves their burden and give themselves to their help. It would also react with blessing upon the northern unions, as well.

The National union is sending literature to the various camps in the South, and we are hoping very soon to be able, through a special fund, to materially aid Mrs. Thacher in her department. This issue of THE UNION SIGNAL is given so entirely to the soldiers that a further word is hardly necessary from me, but I cannot forbear saying how earnestly I hope that the women of the different states will do as much as possible for their own troops in the way of comfort bags, Testaments, etc., and that they will also aid Mrs. Thacher in her large plans for presenting our principles and doing good work for the army as a whole. The saddest kind of tidings come to us constantly of the work that the liquor traffic is doing for our boys. We must be alert that its baleful influence may be offset. Why can not the Fourth of July celebrations be largely in the interests of our soldiers? Mrs. Thacher's official letter has already told you some of the things you can do, but wholly on my own responsibility I want to say that one of her greatest needs is in the line of cash contributions. While we do not urge the unions themselves to give, knowing how heavily they are already burdened, still it is possible that through their work, or by their word, some one of means may be interested in what the W. C. T. U. is trying to do for the soldier boy, and may, out of his or her abundance, help.

Yours for true patriotism,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—I am informed that it is my turn to write something for this Corner. Since the last National Convention I have been restless to get out in the field and help push white-ribbon work among the people by bringing into existence some new unions. Being a teacher in one of the colleges of North Carolina, I am unable to do the work for eight months of the year, but during the other four am free to work whenever there is an opening. I am now planning a trip of several weeks in North Carolina, and will probably go from thence to South Carolina.

My experience is, that an organizer should stop long enough after organizing to set to work a new union, giving methods and general instruction and information. I am impressed that it is better to firmly plant a few unions than to simply organize many, leaving them helpless and uninspired. I have also found it well to take the time to organize the three branches, viz., the W's, Y's and L. T. L's, wherever it is practicable to do so. I believe that the one helps greatly the other, and to be sure, we wish the old and the young to learn together of this temperance uplift.

I hope in my next letter to tell of many new members added to the work.

Earnestly yours for increase in membership,

MARY A. LYNCH.

Now Ready.

July Issue of the Young Crusader.

This is a number of special interest as it contains the picture of Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National superintendent of Sunday-school work, and a fine sketch of this talented woman, by Mrs. Harriet Hobart, former president of Minnesota. The children who study the Sunday-school supplement of The Young Crusader issued quarterly, will appreciate the opportunity of looking upon the face of one who gives to them such valuable information in these lessons. The sketch reveals the mother-love which led to this consecration to the children and their interests.

A fine likeness of the president of the L. T. L. of Washington, D. C., with a brief sketch of his life is one of the attractions of this issue.

Single copy, 5 cts. Price per annum, 25 cts.; fifty copies to one address, 12 cts.; 100 copies to one address, 10 cts. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple.

JULY BIBLE READING. "A Successful Life," by Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks. How to make the most out of life, is the question discussed. "He accomplished the work God gave him to do." This was the pæan of one of life's victors and contains, it is pointed out, the essence of successful and therefore of happy living. We may learn from Jesus' life how to accomplish the work God gives us to do. The subject—success in life—is one that interests every one whether Christian or not, and the Reading is excellent, not only for W. C. T. U. meetings, but for any kind of devotional service.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JULY. "Homes for Homeless Children," by Miss Harriet A. Leavitt, National superintendent of this department. She truly says that "no phase of the social problem is of greater importance than that which concerns the child, as what we do for him touches not only the present, but reaches into the future." The object of this department is "a home for every homeless child and a child for every childless home," and Miss Leavitt tells of work accomplished, and instructs in the proper way for local unions to carry on this blessed and practical philanthropy. The Reading is one of the most interesting we have had for some time, and we hope our women will take this opportunity of informing themselves concerning the work of this department.

Agents.

We do not sell the official etching or any picture of Miss Willard in our stock through agents, but will make special discounts upon orders by the dozen. Agents desiring to sell pictures of Miss Willard for the benefit of the Temple will please write for terms, etc., to Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1118, The Temple.

Please bear in mind that the latest cabinet photographs of Miss Willard, which are sold for the benefit of the Hospital, are fifty cents each. All other photographs, cabinet size, twenty-five cents each.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

THE Peoria, Ill., school board, at its last meeting for the year took up the Anti-Cigaret League work, placing the matter in the hands of a fine committee to recommend plan of work to be followed next year.

A WAVE of reform seems to have struck Peoria county, Illinois. East Peoria has closed its saloons on Sunday. Elmwood has declared war on all kinds of gambling and a dozen or more restaurateurs in the north part of the county have been fined and imprisoned for liquor selling.

THE Chatfield, Minn., local union on the 15th and 16th of June, held a local W. C. T. U. institute, with Miss Marie C. Brehm, of Illinois, as instructor. All attending felt her instruction to be of practical, everyday use. Much enthusiasm was aroused and several new members gained.

A WAY they have of opening the Frances Willard union meeting at Syracuse, N. Y., is for each member to respond to the roll call with some current item of news concerning the temperance cause. Outdoor gospel temperance meetings on the street are features of the work of this progressive union.

MRS. EVALYN GRAHAM, of Newark, O., was the principal speaker at the Morrow county convention held at Cardington. Mrs. Graham spoke for the Willard memorial, and gave an account of the funeral days at Chicago and Evanston. Her topic in the evening was "Philanthropy in its relation to criminology."

NEW YORK has no department of medal contest work, but under the management of efficient county and local superintendents, has held a number of successful contests. The interest is increasing rapidly and in order to make it more convenient for local superintendents, the National superintendent has obtained the consent of Mrs. Mary B. Wood, of 119 West Cayuga street, Ithaca, N. Y., to keep a supply of medals, books, etc., on hand.

LACON, Ill., is the first place to organize a Young People's Christian Temperance Union outside of Chicago and suburbs. Mr. J. S. Thompson, a wealthy banker, and vice-president of the Illinois State Sunday-school Association, is the president. Mr. John M. Grieves, a wide-awake young business man is director of the Lacon Home Protection Chorus. Word also is received that Denver young people have fallen in line in a Christian Temperance Union.

THE Newton, Kan., W. C. T. U. decided to accept the suggestion to Mrs. Dora Evans, state superintendent, that concerted prayers be offered for the soldiers at sunset, that flags be used in every church and schoolhouse, and that a little needlebook be sent to every Kansas soldier, to be inclosed in each book a letter, also a card tied with white ribbon which shall be inscribed, "The Kansas mothers of the W. C. T. U. are remembering you in prayers each day at sunset."

A TEACHER was explaining to a little girl how the trees developed their foliage in the springtime. "Ah, yes," said the wee lassie, "I understand; they keep their summer clothes in their trunks."

HIS POETIC WIFE—"Ah!" sighed the poet, "I shall be satisfied if I can produce but one line that will make the world better." "Say!" said the poet's wife, "just come back here and try your hand at stringing this clothesline, will you?"

RED-LETTER DAY.

FRESH AIR MISSION DAY.—AUGUST 3.

The Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11–16.

Notes and Comments.

AS will be seen from the letter of Mme. Menos on page 10, a W. C. T. Union has been organized in Paris by our World's secretary. Twenty-five of the leading women of Paris have joined, and when we appreciate the difficulties in the way we can better understand what the inauguration of our work under such auspices means. Temperance is very unpopular in that wine-growing country, especially that form of it inculcated by the W. C. T. U. Miss Slack says she had to refuse admission to a large number who would have come into the organization could they have continued to use wine, abstaining from spirit-drinking only.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS and Miss Anna Gordon arrived at Headquarters, June 29. They will remain for some weeks in conference with the National officers concerning matters pertaining to the general interests of the work. As regards the present outlook Mrs. Stevens says that the women of the organization seem to realize the necessity for redoubled effort now that their strong stay and staff has been removed, and the work all along the line shows encouraging activity. There appears to be general satisfaction throughout the ranks that St. Paul is to have the National Convention, and everything points to a helpful and harmonious gathering.

THE election of Mrs. William P. Lowe of Georgia to the presidency of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs is regarded as a victory not only for the non-sectional policy of that body, but also for woman's ballot. The meeting at Denver represented thirty-one states and half a million women—women of honor and influence in their respective localities, and creators of public opinion—hence the large vote polled by Mrs. Lowe is a cheering indication of the growing strength of the suffrage sentiment North and South. When the Massachusetts delegates complained that though they paid one-seventh of the taxes of the organization, they had not a representative on the national board, they were reminded by Colorado that they should not have put forth a woman who frowned upon the suffrage privileges. And, indeed, it does seem inconsistent for women who supported an anti-suffrage candidate to object to taxation without representation. By the way, we would like to be able to speak and write of the new president by her own name. It is hardly in accord with the fitness of things that a "William" anybody, even with the prefix, "Mrs.," should preside over an organization of women. It cannot be that Mrs. Henrotin's successor intends to lead the Federation in the name of another, even though that other be her husband, and "the best man on earth."

IN recognition of her loyalty to principle in christening the battleship Kentucky with water, the state W. C. T. U. of Kentucky has presented to Miss Christine Bradley a sterling silver water set. The ceremony took place at the executive mansion, Frankfort, on the afternoon of June 20. Mrs. Beauchamp, state W. C. T. U. president, in a characteristic little address, expressed her joy at the sounding of a new keynote for the state by Kentucky's young womanhood. "Our governor's daughter has," she said, "as far as one woman could, forever dissociated Kentucky women and Kentucky whisky, and wherever the name of our battleship shall go, with the now dauntless fame of our navy, this that she hath done shall be told as a memorial of her." Col. George Bain made the presentation speech in behalf of the W. C. T. U., several representative men of different states whose names accompanied the testimonial, and "in the name of every sacred interest of land and sea." "For a girl yet in her teens," he declared, "to face the frown of false education and defy the opposing power of prejudice in the multitude, required as blood-born bravery as coursed the veins of the ensign who met death while cutting the wires in Cardenas bay, or the lieutenant who sunk the Merrimac in the entrance to Santiago harbor." He paid eloquent tribute, also, to the governor for his brave defense of his daughter and her purpose. Miss Bradley, in a modest but self-possessed manner, gracefully acknowledged the gift. "If my action in christening the Kentucky," she said, "should in any way serve to stay the march of alcohol or should be instrumental in saving the life of one of our brave sailors or prevent one tear from coursing down the cheek of wife, sister or mother, I am more than repaid."

THE grand patriotic rally in the Auditorium on the evening of June 28, under the auspices of Chicago's young people, was a temperance demonstration the like of which has not been seen before in this or any other city. Seven hundred young men and women, the flower of the Christian churches, were banked upon the stage and were greeted by an audience which occupied almost every seat in that immense hall. Flags were everywhere, that of Cuba being conspicuously displayed with our own stars and stripes, and Miss Willard's picture hung here and there draped with the national colors. President Rogers of the Northwestern University, presided. Miss Eva Shontz, president of the Chicago Y. P. C. T. U. spoke with thrilling effect upon the subject, "Frances Willard Still Lives." The Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, on fire with patriotic fervor, gave a brief address on, "What can Chicago Young People do to Free America?" The chorus, led by Professor Bilhorn, sang temperance to familiar patriotic strains and to music written specially for the occasion, while from time to time flowers and miniature flags fell in showers upon the heads of the speakers, seven hundred little red, white and blue banners waved in rhythmic movement, and the rallying cry, "Saloons must go," shouted by seven hundred voices, told the purpose of this young army. It was a most inspiring scene, and, as Dr. Henson said, one could almost imagine Miss Willard waving a flag in response from the battlements of heaven. This uprising of the young people has in it the spirit of the crusades of '73, and the results we believe are destined to be far-reaching. The organization is adding daily to its ranks and many are the requests received by Miss Shontz from other cities to "Come over and help us." These young soldiers have enlisted in an aggressive warfare against the saloon and they mean to fight until they win.

Current Events.

War News of the Week.

American Forces are Encamped Within Two Miles of Santiago.

A WEEK has been spent in marshaling the American forces on the heights that command Santiago, getting the field guns and heavy artillery in position for attack and placing the troops so as to practically surround the city and cut off reinforcements. The fortifications of the Spaniards consist principally of barbed wire fences, which are expected to effectually shut out the "Yankees." The water mains which supply the city have been cut by command of General Shafter, and both soldiers and citizens are dependent upon a few wells. At the present writing a battle is imminent, which will decide the fate of Santiago and Admiral Cervera's squadron, which is still imprisoned in the harbor.

General Merritt has sailed for the Philippines to enforce Admiral Dewey, who only awaits troops to take possession of Manila. Spanish officials admit the hopelessness of their cause, but cable advices from Madrid say the war will not end soon, no matter what the attitude of the government, because the temper of the people will not accept peace.

NOTES.

THE first American flag to float in Cuba was one presented to Colonel Wood's Rough riders by the women of Phœnix, Ariz.

COLONEL DR. NICHOLAS SENN, of Chicago, has been made chief of the operating staff of the entire army and a member of General Miles' staff. His place hereafter will be at the front, wherever fighting is going on.

LIEUTENANT CARRANZA, the former attaché of the Spanish legation at Washington, has left Montreal. He took his departure on Monday, but so far all efforts to locate him or learn his destination have failed.

THE Senate has passed the resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Naval Constructor Hobson, but with an amendment including the names of his crew. This is the first time Congress thus has recognized men below the grade of commissioned officers.

REPRESENTATIVE MCDONALD, of Maryland, has introduced a bill authorizing the president to muster into the service of the United States a regiment of sons of Union and Confederate veterans to be known as the "William McKinley regiment, Sons of Veterans."

MRS. CLARA B. COLBY, a well known Washington club woman, and editor of the Woman's Tribune, has received an army pass issued to her by Assistant Secretary of War Meiklejohn, which entitles her to go to the front as a war correspondent. Mrs. Colby is one of the first of the women journalists to be given admission to the camps. Her husband was recently appointed brigadier-general in the volunteer army, and she will join him immediately at Chickamauga Park.

THE president's proclamation extending the Cuban blockade gives Admiral Sampson command of the largest fleet of vessels that has ever been directed by a single officer, excepting the historical Spanish armada. He now has 107 vessels, not including the squadron which will sail under Commodore Watson, nor the thirty-one vessels engaged in harbor defense duty, or undergoing repairs on the Atlantic coast. With 107 vessels surrounding the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, it will be impossible for the Spaniards to receive supplies.

THE war department has sent out the following statement, which has the approval of the president and Secretary Alger: "The sending of delicacies to the army, although most generous and fully appreciated by the war department, will not longer be encouraged, as it has been found that such delicacies for troops in the field are injurious rather than helpful. The secretary of war suggests that donations of this character in future be sent to the hospitals only, and that the surgeon-general of the army be consulted as to where they will be most needed."

A Legal Triumph for the Right.

THE supreme court of New Jersey has upheld the anti-gambling provision of the constitutional amendment voted by a small majority at a special election, September 28, 1897. The amendment received 70,443 against 69,642, showing a majority of 801. The gamblers claimed that if 961 rejected votes were added to the votes for and against, it would show a majority against the amendment. The gamblers made a special effort to upset it, they employed the ablest lawyers, and the court declares that the amendment was properly declared adopted, notwithstanding it did not receive a majority of all the votes cast. It was sufficient that the amendment received a majority of all the votes counted, as the constitution did not contemplate that rejected ballots should be included in the total number of votes cast therein.

Temperance.

THE great temperance congress opened at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, on June 30, and will be in session seven days. A report of the proceedings will be given next week.

THE Hamline, Minn., Prohibition Club has arranged to commemorate the martyrdom of Rev. George C. Haddock, by a suitable public meeting on August 3, the anniversary of his death.

THE Omaha Campmeeting Association has sent out circulars announcing a series of meetings during the summer to agitate the temperance question, as a counter influence to the liquor selling in connection with the exposition.

THE pastor of the Lutheran church at Smithsburg, Md., recently preached a strong temperance sermon, finding occasion therefor in the fact that some of his parishioners had signed the license bonds of a couple of saloon-keepers.

THE Evangelical Alliance of Cincinnati and vicinity, representing hundreds of churches and tens of thousands of Christian men and women, adds a vigorous protest to those already directed to the proper officials concerning the army canteen and its pernicious influence.

IN response to the protests of the temperance organizations of Prince Edward Island, the government of the Atlantic province has withdrawn the proposed bill to legalize the saloons of the city of Charlottetown. The neighboring provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, too, are almost completely under prohibition.

NEW JERSEY prohibitionists met in state convention at Camden. The platform adopted contains the following plank: "That no citizen should be denied the full right of suffrage on account of sex." At the New York prohibition convention a proposition recognizing woman suffrage was voted down. The Raines law was condemned, as was also the army canteen.

As the result of the differences between organized labor in Chicago and the Chicago and Milwaukee Brewers' Association, the former is about to assume the initiative in what the leaders declare will be one of the greatest temperance movements ever begun in this city. It will, if the present program is carried out, take active steps looking to the strict enforcement of the state law providing for the closing of saloons on Sunday. It will coöperate, so it is announced, with temperance organizations, and will invite the assistance of the Civic Federation. An effort will be made, so it is declared, to induce laboring men to eschew beer and other intoxicants.

THE Wisconsin Catholic Total Abstinence Union opened its twenty-seventh annual session at Madison, Wis., June 28, with about fifty delegates present, representing twenty-two societies in different parts of the state. The report of the president, Rev. F. O'Reilly, of Ridgeway, showed an increase in membership of 400 in Wisconsin during the year, and a total membership in the state of about 1,600. There are thirty societies, mostly in the smaller cities and villages. A public meeting was held in the Assembly Chamber, at which addresses were made by Rev. James Campbell, of Eau Claire, Rev. M. J. Ward, of Beloit, Rev. J. P. Cosgrove, of Fond du Lac, all Catholic clergy; Rev. E. J. Baskerville, Methodist pastor at Madison, and T. C. Richmond.

About Women.

UNDER the new constitution of Louisiana, taxpaying women may vote on all questions of taxation submitted to popular vote.

THE University of Rochester, N. Y., has resolved to open its doors to women, the policy to take effect when the women of Rochester raise $100,000 for the use of the university.

THE eldest daughter of Charles Kingsley, Miss Rose Kingsley, well known for her works on French art, has been made an officier de l'instruction publique, by the French government.

MISS LOIS MINNIE CORNELIUS, an Oneida Indian girl of royal parentage, was graduated with high honors from Grafton Hall, an Episcopalian girls' school at Fond du Lac, Wis., during the past week. Miss Cornelius is a direct descendant of a long line of chiefs.

AT the Convention of Women's Clubs, just closed at Denver, Mrs. Henrotin, the ex-president, was made emissary from the General Federation of Women's Clubs to the Paris Exposition in 1900. A resolution was also passed, that the United States government be requested to name a woman on the Paris Exposition commission, and that the woman be Mrs. Potter Palmer, of Chicago.

Educational.

MAYOR PHELAN, of San Francisco, is to build at his own expense, a library and recreation building at the city almshouse. The structure, with the books, will cost about $10,000.

THE superintendent of public instruction at Santa Fe, N. M., has decided that under the statutes the teaching of the Spanish language in the public schools of the territory is compulsory.

THE court of appeals of Maryland has decided that the Maryland Institution Art School of Baltimore is not compelled to admit colored pupils. The suit had been brought by Henry Clark, Jr., a colored boy, who had been appointed by a colored alderman named Cargill. There have been four colored boys at the school, but lately the color line has been drawn.

COMMENCEMENT exercises at Yale were unusually interesting this year. The degree of LL.D. was awarded to President McKinley and of M. A. to John Hayes Hammond, who was Cecil Rhodes' lieutenant in South Africa, and Russell W. Davenport, inventor of the armor plate which protects nearly all the United States cruisers. Both Hammond and Davenport are Yale graduates. Two new gifts to the university were announced, one of $2,000 from Mrs. John J. Cox, of Peekskill, N. Y., to found a scholarship in memory of her son, John J. Cox, Yale, 1891, who died in 1892. The other was the establishment by Judge W. K. Townsend, of New Haven, of a fund for additional prizes for excellence in English composition to be offered to the freshman class in college in honor of his son, lately deceased.

At Home.

THE Arctic expedition under Walter Wellman, the explorer, sailed from Tromsoe, Island of Tromsoe, Norway, on June 27. Mr. Wellman's expedition is undertaken with two objects, the first to find and succor Professor Andree and the second to discover the north pole. He is accompanied by a corps of scientists and a competent explorer.

THE republicans of Maine have renominated Governor Llewellyn Powers by a unanimous vote. The platform adopted reiterates the planks of the republican party, advocates all necessary legislation in the interest of labor, of temperance, education and economy in the state administration, and indorses President McKinley and the state delegation in Congress.

WISCONSIN has celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her statehood at Milwaukee, during the past week, with imposing ceremonies. One of the most interesting features of the occasion was the unveiling of a monument to the Wisconsin soldiers. The fund for its erection was secured largely through the efforts of Mrs. Lydia Ely, who was given the post of honor during the exercises.

God's Gifts.

BY ALICE A. HARRIS.

THOU givest us the world!
Great Nature's beauties wide unfurl'd,
Her rich domain man's dower;
He reads her secrets deep until,
He bends her forces to his will,
Rules her with Godlike power.

Thou givest to us Life!
Knowledge and love so rife,
And honor's crown, youth's glow;
Humiliation's bitter bread,
Cain's cup and toil's slow tread,
Gray age, with hope burnt low.

Thou givest to us Death!
'Tis dust to dust; but Spirit saith,
"Joy's dream wakes to reality!
For, lo! what seemed defeat
Rounds into bliss complete,
'Tis immortality!"

Thou gavest us Thy Son!
And Thou and we are one,
Through Him and love divine.
And life and death are glorified
Through Christ, the God-man crucified
To make us wholly Thine.

Kirkwood, Wis.

Jimsey Craiglaw's Baby.

In Two Chapters.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

CHAPTER I.

IT was an odd, foolish name—Jimsey—a remnant of his infancy, but not so odd, after all, as the man who bore it. He was a tall spook of a creature, six feet in his stockings, his arms like those of a windmill, his knees so knobby and bent that there was no telling how tall he might have been but for this. His head, knobby like his knees, was covered with a thick crop of bristling red hair, and under the bushy brows of a darker shade were shining a pair of kindly brown eyes; kindly except when inflamed by undue devotion to a certain brown jug which smelt suspiciously of liquid stronger than vinegar or molasses. His cheeks were high and bony, and his nose set in between, a rugged archipelago between two seas of bronzed color, and underneath a firm, strong mouth shaded by a mustache even more unruly than the thatch of hair. One cheek had a permanent enlargement due to the quid of tobacco which habitually nestled there, and the language which came from such an unclean source could not help being tainted and impure.

Still Jimsey Craiglaw had many really good traits, and was capable of being a very much better man than he was. It was a nine days' wonder among his companions when he married a wife and brought her to live in the rough cabin which had been his bachelor quarters. Jimsey was a fisherman by trade, and he had no need of French perfumes. The strongest musk would have been overcome by the finny odors Jimsey appropriated from his friends, the fish.

His neighbors were curious to see the wife he had chosen, and upon one pretext and another made occasion to call at the cabin. They found there a small, delicate looking woman, her once abundant hair streaked with gray, and a demeanor as quiet and self-respecting as Jimsey's was loud and don't-care-what-you-think-of-me. She treated them with kindly consideration, as Jimsey's friends, and one proud day invited his special chum, Matt Kelsey, to tea.

The wonder increased, for there had been some vague idea among them that Jimsey had "met up" with some forceful virago who had led him to the altar by violence.

"Jimsey must a-popped the question hisself," said Lige Barry, rubbing his black hair into a tousled mop as he and his partner, who had been honored, talked the matter over. "Don't see however he did it, for Jimsey is bashful, he is, with the fair sect."

"You'd better take lessons, Lige Barry," replied his friend. "Jimsey's cabin looks like a deff'rent place sense the little woman's come. Why, there's picters on the wall, cromers and hetchin's, Jimsey called them. They had biscuit and apple sass fer supper last night, weth not a streak o' yaller in the biscuit, nuther. 'She's a prime cook, she is!' Jimsey said to me when she went out to the lean-to fer the tea, and his eyes pretty nigh winked themselves shet weth tickle. Jimsey's happy, happy as a clam at high water, and don't you forget it."

"Was the—the brown jug anywhere in sight?" queried Lige Barry.

His partner shook his head. "Didn't see nuthin' like it 'ceptin' some s'picious pieces of brown crock'ry out in the bushes."

"Then Jimsey's a gone goose." Lige shook his head mournfully. "He's wound up short in his wife's apron string and we fellers outside 'll never have no more comfort weth 'im."

"Better fer him. Better fer all on us if we kept 'lasses er vinegar in our brown jugs," replied Matt Kelsey stoutly.

"Jimsey's made a clean swap if he's traded off the brown jug fer the little woman. Why, he might a-licked 'er, you know. Jimsey's ugly when the cork's out of the jug."

Only once in the year following did Jimsey prove traitor to the promise he had given the little woman prior to their appearance in the parson's study at the village. He had disposed of an unusually large catch, and flushed with victory, had fallen an unexpected prey to old influences.

The little woman, white as a sheet, received the wild, semi-maniac into the little home, with a tense, drawn face, in which there was a condensed firmness which boded no good to Jimsey's domestic future. Happily he was drunk enough to tumble over upon the bed and fall asleep without any serious display of temper.

He found his wife sitting beside the bed when he awoke in the early dawn, her bonnet and shawl on, her satchel packed beside her.

"Why—why—wha's the matter?" he stammered. "Where ye goin', Mary?" Then the truth rushed over him, and he covered his bloodshot eyes with his great trembling hands, ashamed to meet her accusing eyes. "I never 'lowed to do it, Mary," he faltered miserably.

Mary Craiglaw had a sharp, incisive tongue with all her mild ways, and if Jimsey supposed he could play fast and loose with her, he found himself mistaken. Married to him though she was, she was not bound so fast but that she would loose herself, and living with a drunken husband was a condition which she would never endure. She had supported herself by sewing for many years, she could do so still, only no penny of her hard-earned dollars should help buy the liquid whose mission it is to make brutes of men.

All this she told him in such calm, forceful words that every sentence fell on his brain like an icicle. No packing in ice could have sobered him more completely than her clear-cut sentences.

She told him something else—a secret, which made his rugged face flush and tremble like a woman's.

"I will never expose my child to the horror and shame that I endured last night," she said, solemnly. "I will work my fingers to the bone and live alone to the end of my days first."

"Mary, Mary," he cried, in an agony of remorse, "if you'll forgive, and try me jest onct more, you shell never hev occasion to set weth your bunnit on another night." (Hear ever doubted for a moment that her bonnet had gone on at his first drunken whoop.) "The little un shall never be ashamed or afraid of its daddy."

She relented, and from that time on Jimsey Craiglaw lived in another world; in a future which the prosaic present every day brought nearer.

He hewed out a clumsy, boat-shaped cradle from a great log, and watched with eyes filled with the joy of approaching fatherhood the simple preparations Mary was making for the expected advent, and at last, when it came, he hung over the bed where lay the mother and child, with something of the adoration in his heart which the shepherds of old felt when in the presence of that other Child, whose coming in the form of an infant has made childhood beautiful.

It was so wonderful, his child and Mary's, that he could not get over the joy and the mystery of it. Every time it took his great, horny finger in its baby clasp, his heart was filled with a fresh rush of tenderness. "See the little feller, Mary. See 'im hang on," he would cry in an ecstasy of joy. "He knows his daddy a'ready."

The child had Mary's features and small, delicate frame. He would be a gentle child, she hoped, and the doubt and care which that long night of watching had implanted in her heart gave way before the brooding tenderness of mother love.

She was not less determined, but should her hope fail her, she would not go alone, but like Hagar fleeing into the wilderness, the child's presence should be her joy and comfort. She could never be quite alone with that little form pressed close to her heart, his loving arms clinging about her neck.

As the little boy grew, Jimsey grew with him into gentler manners and softer speech. His bushy mustache annoyed the child, and he shaved it off; he felt instinctively that his lips were unclean as they came in contact with the pure, dewy lips of the innocent baby, and the quid grew smaller day by day until at last a bit of sweet, odorous spruce took its place altogether.

"He mustn't hear no words I wouldn't be willin' to hear him say," he said, one day, when the child had delighted him by an attempt to say "papa." "Ef my daddy had held his jaw when I was a kid, I should never a-been the rough old codger you found me, Mary."

"I wish we could take him to church, Jimsey," Mary said, thoughtfully, "I was brought up to go."

"I haint seen the inside of a church in twenty year, but if you say so, and it's best for the boy, we'll go," Jimsey replied. "Whatever his daddy is, the little un must hev a chance to grow up clean and hullsome. I saw a little feller when I was in town the other day. I kerried some fish to his ma, and she not bein' to home, the little chap transacted the business. Ef I'd a-been the President, hisself, he couldn't a-been perliter an' nicer. I can't imagine him a doin', or even thinkin' a mean, low-down thing; and I thought to myself, 'There, Jimsey, is the pattern to cut your little un by.' And if goin' to church will help, he shall go by—" Jimsey clapped his great hand over his mouth, in terror that one of his old expletives had so nearly escaped him. "I shell hev to go off into the woods somewhere, Mary, an' spit 'em all out," he said, apologetically. "They will come up in my throat sometimes, in spite of high water."

It is touching to see how the diamond beneath the rough nature of uncultured men will sometimes shine out unexpectedly. Matt Kelsey, and even Lige Barry, guarded their old boon companion from the temptations of the saloons with jealous care.

"It means too much to Jimsey," they said, and though they felt, with a rough sense of loss, that he was growing away from them into an atmosphere too rarefied for them to really enjoy as yet, still they had too much respect for "the little woman," as they had always called her, and his evident happiness in his home, to tempt him for a moment toward his old habits.

The human spiders who lie in wait in their corners, with poison ready spread with which to strike their victims, were not so careful of Jimsey's happiness, however. He had been a good customer, and they missed the ready cash which flowed from his pocket but too freely when his wits were muddled, and they were determined to win him back if possible.

The Burial of Mr. Gladstone.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

[We regret that the press of other matter has crowded out this most interesting article until now.—THE EDITORS.]

IN the center of the historic Westminster Hall, bound up with all the associations that have made for the greatness of England, lay the greatest of England's sons in the simple casket made of the oak grown on his own estate by the hands of his own laborers. There was no adornment, nothing to indicate the position of the man who was to be laid to rest—just the plain, oak casket, the four burning candles, the gleaming cross—that was Gladstone's resting place, where the people came to do him homage. Away across the Thames, over Westminster bridge, across Parliament street and Parliament Square to the courtyard of the House of Commons, the dense crowds stretched, representing all classes of society, from the very poorest to the strong artisan and members of the wealthier classes. They poured in one continuous stream for two days, and in the great hall there reigned absolute silence, save for the constant tramping of feet as they passed, a hundred and twenty a minute, through those long two days.

In the early morning light, on Saturday, May 28, the sunlight shone through the windows of the Abbey, and touched here and there the historic tombs and marble statues that spoke of the great dead that had rested there for long years. But there was one open grave to which all thoughts were turned, the last resting place waiting to receive the greatest Englishman of our generation. Already in the gray gloom of choir and chancel, those who were privileged to obtain admittance were beginning to assemble. In little knots the distinguished visitors arrive, foreign ambassadors, the immovable Chinese, the white-haired Russian, the tall Dane. Then a vivid flash of color, and the Lord Mayor, in his robe and chain, walks up the Abbey with his attendants, and as each little group enters, keen interest is manifested by those who are waiting for the supreme event. Suddenly the whole congregation rises, and a hush steals over the crowd, which betokens that this is no ordinary greeting. Presently a tall figure in black, bowed and feeble, leaning on the strong arm of her son, walks up the Abbey. It is Mrs. Gladstone, associated through these long years as the truest wife and the most devoted woman with whom a great man's life was ever blessed. Behind her walks the little curly-headed girl, who has been the joy of her grandfather's later years, and then in groups the sons and daughters, and as they pass, we cannot but remember that amongst all the tributes that can be paid to this great man, none, perhaps, is higher than the beautiful example of family life which his home always held out to the nation. By and by comes the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of York, both dressed in deep mourning, and then the silence is broken, and the solemn notes of Beethoven's Funeral March Equale breaks on the air. The slow measure gives place to Schubert's March in B minor, and then the magnificent opening chords of Beethoven's Funeral March, which seems to celebrate the triumph of life rather than speak to us of the sadness of death. Then two heralds, both in black, arrive, to head the funeral procession, and by and by the long-trained, white-robed choristers and clergy file past. Following comes the sergeant-at-arms, carrying the mace, the speaker in his robes, surrounded by his different officers, the members of the House of Lords, headed by the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of York, then the members of the House of Commons. The organ gives place to the beautiful slow chanting of the choir, and "I am the resurrection and the life" sounds out, as it always does, the great triumph note that lifts all mourners and tells them that death is swallowed up in victory.

The supreme moment comes when the coffin is borne past, and among the pall-bearers is seen those who have striven against one another in the field of politics—the Marquis of Salisbury and Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Balfour and Lord Rosebery. All differences are laid aside now, and hands are clasped across those quiet hands folded in eternal prayer. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York are among those who bear the dead. Slowly the beautiful service goes forward, and by and by the familiar sound of "Rock of Ages" thrills out, and a thousand voices gather up the well known strains of the great statesman's favorite hymn. Then all is over. The great man has been laid to rest by the nation that loved him. Mrs. Gladstone is seated at the head of the grave, and then the most touching scene came upon that great audience with almost unbearable intensity. The Prince of Wales went toward her, and taking her hand in his, bent low over it and reverently kissed it. All the pall-bearers in turn followed his example, and long she held the hand of her husband's great rival, Lord Salisbury, as with tenderness the old man paid her his respect.

Gladstone has done many great things; he has stood for the freedom of our country, he has championed the oppressed, he has believed in the good of the many against the privileges of the few, but he has never done anything greater for the home, never anything that spoke more truly of his deep sense of the oneness of the most sacred tie that God ordained, than when he made the stipulation that if the nation buried him Mrs. Gladstone must rest by his side in Westminster Abbey. The impression that this great pageant left upon one's mind seemed to me to be one that brought home perhaps more than any other the elementary truths which are the foundation stone of all those great lives, and through the chanting psalm and the sweet refrain of the hymns and the clear voice of the dean as he read those last solemn words, in the benediction of the archbishop—there seemed to me to run one quiet refrain, "The best thing in the world is to be good." Others have been great, others have wielded magnificent power over this great nation, other voices have been eloquent, other patriots have stood for the freedom of humanity, but in Gladstone there is an attribute which stands out pre-eminently—he was good because he loved and reverenced his God.

Some Street Car Musings and Conclusions.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

IF St. Paul could be set down in this street-car, was the first suggestion that came to my mind on a recent Sunday morning, what would he say concerning the millinery of 1898! Would his first reflection be that he made a mistake in enjoining women to cover their heads? If braided hair was considered a superfluous decoration, not in accord with womanly modesty of appearance, what language could he find to properly measure the conspicuous and lavish adornment of the modern headgear of women? If his animadversions upon the adornment of women were intended to put a check upon woman's vanity, or to protect his own sex from the effect of an attractive appearance by women, it is to be feared he would doubt to-day whether his injunction had been of any effect.

The simple head covering which in the early days of the Methodist church distinguished the women members of that sect, seemed a very marked triumph of Pauline ethics in dress. Flowers were as rigidly discarded as if the beautiful blossoms, even artificial, possessed some sinful suggestion or potency. Bows of ribbon, too, were under ban. The plainest possible form and fashion of head covering prevailed. The bonnet was solely an object of utility, a covering for the head. Though among no set of women was there any such profusive millinery display as we have now, a Methodist woman was well known by her bonnet. This conspicuous plainness stood for an idea, a conception of religious life.

The second suggestion of the street car display of heavily laden, flower and feather-bedecked shapes that crowned the heads of many of the occupants, was what this conspicuous profusion of ornament stands for, expresses, represents. That it indicates progress in esthetics is not admissible. The millinery art to-day seems the art of elaboration, and a sum in addition.

It is the art of the grotesque, the striking, the odd, without regard to symmetry, grace, or becomingness to the wearer. The piling of flowers, feathers, gauze and ribbon reminds one of the top-heavy van loaded to its utmost capacity with household goods. There might be consolation if this style of decorative architecture could be claimed as standing for and representing the beautiful. But beauty is symmetrical, harmonious. In beauty are no sharp, harsh lines such as the stiff quill and high upreaching bow, no incongruous mixtures of colors, no profusion that banishes simplicity, no oddness that becomes uncouth.

But worse than this devastation of beauty in modern millinery is the fact that it has invaded the ethics of womanhood, has tremendously lowered the sensibilities, humane instincts and nobler sympathies of womankind.

It is not supposable that women milliners initiated the practice of slaughtering the beautiful birds as an addition to the resources of their ingenuity. The practice of gunning for "sport" had accustomed us all to the wanton destruction of an innocent life. These loveliest of animal forms, these lives endowed with voices and notes that contribute to the delight of man, had been regarded as the natural prey of his destructive instincts. But woman had not participated in this remnant of savagery. There remained in her the feminine and motherly instinct of tenderness and protection of the weak. But these sentiments have been demoralized by the unthinking concessions to the domination of "fashion." Bird forms and bird wings as a partof the decoration of women's heads are an indictment of disloyalty to the refined sensibilities that are one of the most estimable and lovely qualities of womanhood.

And following these reflections came the query, why not only in head array but in many fashions and customs is it so common a habit to conform? Conformity is of course sometimes a necessity. It often makes one agreeable. It is a smooth, gliding way many times along what might be a rough path. But is it not many times simply an escape from the effort of thinking?

Every fashion, every custom is in some degree a help or hindrance to character. Even wearing what is set by the milliner as the decree of the season's fashion, without seeking in the shapes, colors, and combinations some evidence of artistic taste, of the beautiful, is leaving uncultivated the esthetic faculty. This becomes not only a degeneracy in taste, but an intellectual indolence. Beauty of character, the harmony of true perceptions and impulses, is expressible and finds satisfaction in the expression of beauty in forms. Beauty in nature is a softening, refining, harmonizing and exalting element. Colors may have an effect upon fine sensibilities equal to the vibrations of musical tones. A combination of sharp contrasts in colors is painful to a genuine lover of the beautiful. It belongs to the crude, uncultivated perceptions.

Conformity to fashion, when it violates the harmony of beauty, of fitness that constitutes good taste, is vitiating and tends to flabbiness of character. And this is the result of conformity when it interferes with convictions of right, genuineness of expression and spontaneity of action. Formality, which is the culmination of conformity, tends to emptiness of all that gives life and genuineness to sociability. It becomes a mask of concealment. The perfunctory performance of certain functions according to a set of rules, and regardless of genuine impulse, makes a mockery and a corpse of social life.

Showy millinery of excessive proportions is not only a nuisance in public audiences, but a subject of pulpit utterances and rebuke and even of legislative consideration. If a reaction could restore a simple head covering, even only for the church and religious service, it would make an esthetic reform a means of grace. If at the theater or any place of assembly where a display of dry goods constituted a part of the needful "good form," the lofty architecture of bunches of plumes, the shafts of ribbons that smite the air, or the mountains of flowers were still adhered to, why not have a show stand placed conspicuously on the stage on which these designs could be placed and leave the range of vision clear for all the audience? This would leave millinery to represent all it stands for, while the men modestly tuck their hats under the seats.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

HALLOWED memories of Miss Willard and the temperance reform call many visitors every week to Willard Hall. Virginia, Washington, D. C., Michigan, Connecticut, Kansas, Colorado, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, are some of the states recently represented in the meetings.

Pundita Ramabai, founder of the school for child widows of India, looked upon the room, hallowed to her because there spoke our Chieftain, and before that beautiful altar lay the silent form loved and mourned by so many thousands.

Over and over again we tell the story of her life and of the heart tears that were shed in Willard Hall when we realized that no more would we hear the silvery notes of that magnetic voice in earthly tones.

One young girl said, "Miss Willard had ten talents and she used them." "Dear child," was the reply, "she did not wait to discover all her talents; she just used every opportunity and did each moment what God and her friends told her was the next best thing."

Many fail to use the talents they possess because of lack of faith. Faithfulness is ours, results belong to God.

A man recently converted and going back home asked prayers that he might be kept from sin and exert a right influence among his old associates.

Evangelistic Work for the Soldiers.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Twenty-five thousand men wearing blue uniforms are now at Camp Alger. The Salvation Army has established a tent there, and the Y. M. C. A. two of them. During the days they are filled with soldiers, writing letters and reading the literature that has been supplied for them. Every night meetings are held and the gospel preached. A glorious work is being accomplished.

For five weeks two girls, alone, from the Salvation Army have conducted religious services in their tent. One sings, accompanied by her guitar, the other preaches. The latter is not over twenty-five, the younger hardly twenty. They have secured board in a neighboring farmhouse, and each evening, at the close of their meetings, four soldiers are detailed by the commanding officer of the camp to escort them home. They are treated universally with the greatest reverence. They do personal work among the men in the hospitals, in the tents, and wherever occasion offers, as well as ministering to them from the platform. Two days since I was standing in the midst of a group of soldiers at Camp Alger with Major Edith Marshall, the young woman evangelist of the Salvation Army. A man in citizen's clothes was engraving some cards. Glancing up coolly to us, he said: "I am an infidel. Do you think you can do anything to help me?" With a rising flush, the girl looked straight into the man's eyes, and made one of the most magnificent defenses of Christianity that I ever heard. When she finished, a soldier exclaimed, with intense enthusiasm, "I am glad to find you so loyal!" "How could I be otherwise," she replied, "with such a Master?"

The National W. C. T. U. is missing one of the grandest opportunities that can ever come to it by not establishing tents at Camp Alger, at Chickamauga and all the other places where our soldiers are stationed preparatory to entering into battle. Dr. and Mrs. La Fetra, of Washington city, went with me on my visit to Camp Alger. Through the courtesy of the Salvation Army girls I was permitted to speak at their evening service. Before I began there were songs and testimonies. Numbers of those young men spoke of being regenerated since coming to the camp, nearly all joyously testifying that they had been saved from the appetite for strong drink. Numbers of others declared silently their desire to be Christians and when the services ended the boys came up to us and with hearty handshakes said earnestly, "Please come again to-morrow night and speak to us." Another said, "Oh, you have brought back the memory of my home so vividly to me this evening. I do miss it so sadly and my beloved church." Something must be done by the W. C. T. U. Never again, perhaps, shall we be able to reach such masses of men. Never again can they be found in such a spirit of seriousness and readiness for acceptance of the truths of our organization.

Our soldiers must be saved! They must be won for the temperance cause! The evangelists and lecturers among our women would be willing to give their services freely for a short time each. Dear Jennie Smith is at Baltimore and could easily run down to Camp Alger. There is no time to lose. Nothing is so effective as grasping situations as they come. If we can not have a tent of our own perhaps the Y. M. C. A. or the Salvation Army would allow us to coöperate with them. Surely a floodtide for righteousness has come to us. Dare we ignore it? May God show us the way in this crucial hour!

The Overton Physiologies.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—After peace has been declared between combatants, a belated shot has sometimes been fired by a soldier who had not waked up to the fact that the casus belli no longer exists. A school text-book entitled, "Applied Physiology, Advanced," by Frank Overton, M. D., seems to be a missile of that sort, and reminds one of some of the first attempts at making books to comply with the first laws that made temperance physiology a mandatory study in the schools. The authors of some of those early books seemed to have written in a vain attempt to please both sides, rather than from a desire to state the truth as to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics.

The American people want no temporizing in the instruction which is given their children on this vital subject. Therefore, that kind of books was properly relegated to the rear, and the appearance at this late day of these Overton physiologies with their uncertain and evasive teaching, seems like the flaring up of an exploded bomb. The author's loose and careless way of treating some of the simplest facts in the Overton "Advanced" book should condemn the whole series. Here is a specimen. In discussing animal food on page 114, the author says: "Every part of the animal is used as food by some persons." That statement is absurd, for every part would include the feathers, hair or scales, bones, hoofs, etc., of the animal in question.

Again, on page 33, he says: "When air is fed to the wood in the firebox of a boiler, burning takes place." Not unless in addition to the air, fire is also there to ignite the wood, otherwise spontaneous combustion would take place whenever the materials for a wood fire are laid over night, or even if a strong draft of wind should blow on the wood-pile.

On pages 10 and 11 the author says: "All the cells of all the parts are obedient servants of the mind." If this were true, it would never do to sleep, for in the unconsciousness of sleep no orders would be given to the heart, lungs and other organs to do the work upon which life depends. The writer probably means to say, but does not, that the nervous system controls the action of all the cells; a part of these are under the control of the mind or will, while others are carried on by the nervous system without our thinking about it. These are only a few specimens of many faults of this kind.

In the author's treatment of the subject of the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics, there seems to be more than carelessness. Page 43 really invites to the use of fermented drinks. He says:

"Man uses the same process (fermentation) to produce drinks, which, besides quenching thirst, are supposed by many to act as a beneficial food, giving strength to the body and power and joy to the mind."

Is the supposition true that these drinks will do all these good and pleasant things? The author does not tell us. This supposition has filled our poorhouses, prisons and insane asylums with the victims of alcohol. To teach this old hallucination to children to-day is a crime against them and against society.

In treating of the effects of alcoholic drinks upon the human system, page 45, the author makes this statement:

"In the blood it (alcohol) behaves like sugar, and is rapidly oxidized to carbonic acid gas and water."

If sugar behaves like alcohol in the blood, it should produce like results. The destructiveness to human welfare which results from the use of alcoholic liquors is admitted to outrank that following war, famine and pestilence combined, but we have no record in chemistry, physiology, history or experience, of sugar eating causing such results.

The author tries to explain everything relating to the effects of alcoholic drinks upon the human system by a theory of the rapid oxidation of alcohol in the body, which is disputed by many eminent authorities. The author's deductions therefore rest upon too weak a foundation to be taught in the schools as unquestioned truth.

The book gives directions for both schoolroom vivisection (see pages 96 and 97), and dissection (see page 204), and other places; while its advocacy of a meat in preference to a vegetable diet (see page 123), is too strong even for those who are not strict vegetarians.

The laws of this country require that "in connection with physiology and hygiene, the nature and effects upon the human system, of alcoholic drinks shall be taught;" that is, whether beer, wine, cider, rum, etc., are physiologically good or bad drinks. Most of the laws specify the space that must be given in text books on this subject, to the consideration of the nature of alcohol as a drink, and its effects. To fill any part of that required space, as is done by the Overton physiologies, with descriptions of the value of alcohol for making thermometers or for preserving dead specimens in museums, to describe the above liquors, wine, beer, cider, etc., and to fail to tell what their nature is as drinks, is not compliance with either the letter or spirit of the law.

Overton's Advanced Physiology is emphatically condemned by the text-book committee of the advisory board of the scientific temperance department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, by advocates of anti-vivisection and of mercy, and by vegetarians.

We have spared neither expense nor labor to get these books re-written and the first unworthy editions suppressed, but propositions for their revision were rejected by their author unless the revising committee would also consent to the publication at the same time of unrevised editions. This condition was unanimously rejected by us, because it would not protect the schools from these bad books. Any friend of temperance education who is at all familiar with what a work of this sort should teach, will find these books to be both legally and morally defective. Watch and warn your school boards against their adoption.

The Overton physiologies are issued by a firm which publishes, also, three series of indorsed books, so their patrons are not obliged to choose their defective works on this subject.

The Woman's Congress at Versailles.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The eighth annual meeting of the Woman's Congress of France was held June 9, on the grounds of "Les Ombrage," the beautiful suburban residence of Madame Alfred Anoré at Versailles. There were perhaps some three hundred women gathered in the tent which had been erected on the lawn. A large shield on the front of the gable end of the tent about the entrance bore the words, "Conference de Versailles Œuvres Feminines Chretiennes and Philanthropiques." The tent was well floored, with comfortable chairs and at the further end a raised platform with arm chairs for the officers and speakers, the usual table and appointments in the center just in front of the president. Mademoiselle Sarah Monod, interested in all good works, holds that office and presides with dignity and grace. Near her sat Madame Siegfried, the president of the Girls' Friendly Society of Paris, and also Madame Theodore Monod, wife of the well-known French pastor, M. Theodore Monod. In the audience were many representative women of French philanthropy, and it was with no small pleasure that in response to the card of invitation that had been sent to me by the committee, I found myself among them as the representative of the American auxiliary of the evangelical work in France (the McAll Mission). I cannot occupy the space nor give the time to tell of the entire program. Papers were read upon every subject that touches the well-being of women and the duties as well, in short, the rôle feminine in the world. Madame Monod's paper, "The Responsibility of the Mother to the Sons," was very strong and searching, and as it is to be published entirely, I shall be glad to send some extracts later. I am writing this quite hastily, the day after the congress, because I want to send you by the first steamer the good word that the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was presented in a most able paper, with an address in French by Miss Slack, who came from England to fulfill the cherished wish of Miss Willard that the French women should be urged to join with their sisters of England and America and elsewhere in the crusade against alcoholism. Miss Slack is a woman of wonderful tact, and in her presentment grasped the difficulties that lay in the way of the progress of total abstinence in France. She was very clear, very decided upon the point, that the basis of membership should be and must be total abstinence without compromise. She told the story of the effort in England to substitute beer for rum, and created much amusement by giving the words of a noted Englishman who said that before that act "there were many drunkards, but afterwards everybody drank." Before Miss Slack made her address, a French lady, whose name I did not grasp, read a paper as memorial to Miss Willard, and paid a beautiful tribute to the life and work of that noble woman, one among many. Miss Slack followed these burning words of eulogy most touchingly with a short and tender account of Miss Willard's closing days, and emphasized the fact that her presence at the congress was in obedience to Miss Willard's earnest desire and request. "And," continued Miss Slack, as she closed, "I feel that Miss Willard herself is with us to-day, for do we not believe that those who have passed are more alive than we who remain?"

It was a moment of deep feeling and there was much applause. Madame, the president, responded with the hope that the work of temperance would gain ground, but she feared the progress in France might be slow since the cultivation of the vine was one of the chief industries and sources of revenue. However, it was an accomplished fact, the coming of the message to France, and there was a register of names taken afterwards by Miss Slack.

It is with pleasure I transmit this portion of the morning session of the Versailles Congress as of vital interest to the work in America.

Forty-six Thousand Men at Our Door.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—After more than two months of lingering illness I am again able to do a little work, and have consented to act for the time as local superintendent of soldiers and sailors. I wish I could even feebly express the great need for the work here. You know we have at our very doors forty-six thousand men; think of what this represents. We are just now furnishing a large room for a soldiers' parlor, where we will have the home comforts, a piano, daily papers, ice water, all free. If any soldiers should be ill while in the city we have a delightful room fitted up with cots where they can rest until provision is made for them. The boys in blue are taking much interest in it; one bright fellow said this morning, "Well, this is better than anything yet." If there are women having sons at Chickamauga to whom they would like to send something from home, we will see that it is safely conveyed. Any of the boys in the hospital will be especially remembered with flowers and any delicacies needed if we are kept informed.

We want literature, but please see that express is paid, for all this means large expense. We hope there are many unions and individuals who will be glad to help us with small sums to make it possible for us to carry out what seems to us of so much importance. Letters of inquiry should be sent to Mrs. S. P. Lowe, 120 E. Seventh street, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Will the dear women kindly report to us as soon as possible, and if we can serve them in any way we will be most happy. The harvest is very ripe. (MRS.) M. L. WELLES.

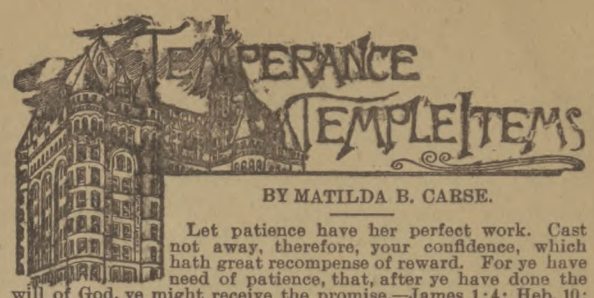
Local Union.

QUESTION.—When documents which are calculated to breed dissension and distrust are sent to the president or secretary of a local union is it always her duty to present them at the business meeting, or may she exercise her own judgment in the matter?



ANSWER.—If the document be one which calls for formal action on the part of the union, either because its subject matter is of such a nature as to fall within the province of legitimate W. C. T. U. work, or because it comes from some one holding an official rank which warrants the sending out of the document, thereby making action imperative, then the officer into whose hands the article may have come would not be warranted in withholding it, whatever might be her individual judgment. If, on the other hand, the subject matter of the document should lie wholly outside the province of the local union; if the name appended should not carry the weight of official authority, then the officer would be extremely foolish if she did not use her own judgment as to the advisability of presentation.

Q.—What literature can you recommend which will arouse the conscience of the church as to its responsibility for and duty towards the legalized liquor traffic?

A.—There lies before me on my desk as I attempt to answer this question a full line of John G. Woolley's incomparable addresses, which, under the title of "Seed," are published by the Neal Dow Memorial Bureau of Boston. I have no hesitancy in saying that if these addresses can not arouse the conscience of the church then that conscience is a something past arousal. It seems almost incredible that the same subject should be presented by one speaker in so many different addresses, each one of which seems to strike with more convincing force than did the last. For studies in logic, in eloquence, in direct application of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the realm of practical politics these leaflets are unsurpassed, and their study by a union or their distribution in a community ought not to fail of results in increased intelligence, earnestness and consecration. They are red-hot shot into the very heart of the camp. To use them effectually may require expert gunmanship, but to become expert gunners in such a warfare should be one of our chief endeavors. First know the leaflets yourself and then you will surely learn how to use them.

Q.—Do you attach any importance to the effort on the part of the National financial agent to secure coins and curios as a means of eventually increasing the National treasury and thus aiding the work as a whole?

A.—Very great importance. I have but recently given some little time to the consideration of the question, and am convinced that, like the Klondike gold mines, "there's millions in it," if only our women can be aroused to see its value. When one sees single coins appraised at fabulous prices, one begins to understand what would be the value of a collection such as Mrs. Baxter has planned. Coins give the history of a people as truly as do its printed records, and a collection which should give specimens of every coinage in this country since 1794 could almost command its own price. Postage stamps, too, are of value, especially certain stamps which were issued by the Southern Confederacy. If Mrs. Baxter but receives the support to which her place entitles her, she may be able, in a comparatively short time, to aid the National Union to solve the problem with which it has for years been struggling, viz., how it may continually send organizers and speakers into the thinly-populated and needy parts of our country, thus making it possible for the work to advance in such places as well as in the more favored areas. In the work among our colored people, in the work among foreigners, we have constantly a field in which large amounts of money could well be expended, while some of our states and territories need constant aid if the work already begun is to be carried forward. In this plan there is an opportunity for all to cooperate at almost no personal outlay, and the aggregate result will, if each does her best, far surpass our thought.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let patience have her perfect work. Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise.—James 1:4; Heb. 10: 35, 36.

MR. MARSHALL FIELD has again kindly extended the limit of time for raising the $300,000 to the first of January next, pledging to give $50,000, if we raise the balance, to retire the Temple Trust bonds. I have written, thanking him for his great consideration, stating that I hoped we would be able to complete the amount by the first of November, and we can do it if our white-ribboners will only keep up the pace they set in June. We cannot possibly ask Mr. Field to again extend the time. There must be no dallying now; let every woman in our ranks do her utmost. There is no one but can at least get a Temple wheel filled, or can send out four of our fifty-cent subscription cards to friends in some part of the United States, who would be willing to give a half dollar towards a memorial to our great and departed leader, which would extend the reforms in behalf of which she lived, labored and died.

Helping hands are being stretched toward us, especially by those who desire to see the Temple made Miss Willard's monument. Miss Agnes Slack, secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., has announced through the public press that Lady Henry Somerset is soon to make a call on the members of the World's W. C. T. U. to give one dollar, more or less, toward the purchase of the Temple, in order that it may become Miss Willard's memorial. This is in compliance with the request of the Temple Trustees. A letter has also been received by us from the Canadian W. C, T. U., through its secretary, Mrs. E. R. Atkinson, containing a resolution passed at the last executive committee of that body, stating that they will recommend the collection of subscriptions of one dollar, more or less, from their membership, to secure the Temple as Miss Willard's memorial, in answer to the appeal made to them by the Temple Trustees.

At the late annual convention of the Illinois Union of Catholic Total Abstinence Societies, appropriate resolutions were adopted on the death of Miss Willard, and it was ordered that a Father Mathew tablet be placed in the Temple at Chicago. The following pledge has been received from an interested brother, dated Eagle, Wis.:

I, Willis Wilton, state organizer of the Demorest medal contest bureau, do hereby promise to contribute ten per cent of the net receipts of all contests I hold during the year 1898, to the Temple fund.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Douglas Johnston, Kinnaber House, Montrose, Scotland, visited Chicago in 1895. A friend in showing them the sights of the city had them visit the Temple, where I had the pleasure of meeting them. Mr. Johnston subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL, and through it got deeply interested in our work. Both he and his noble wife are noted for their generous aid to every worthy Christian cause. After their return to Scotland, they sent £7 to the Temple fund. I have just received a long and beautiful letter from Mr. Johnston, inclosing £30 (about $150), telling of his deep interest in the struggle we are making to save the Temple. He says: "I can only wish you had full possession of the Temple. 'It would be a well of water springing up to everlasting life.' It would at any rate be as living water to many a sorrow crushed woman's heart from the good that would flow from such an endowment." Then this noble man, who has almost reached his three score years and ten, full of business cares, as well as work for his Master, so anxious is he that the "House Beautiful" may be saved, asks me to send him a subscription book and adds: "I am a busy man, but I am prepared to give it a trial, and by Christmas might get something to send you if I am spared."

Our Children.

The Three Little Dogs.

THREE little dogs were talking
As they trotted along the road;
And the subject of speech,
With all and with each,
Was what bad folks were abroad.

Said the first: "You would hardly believe it,
But I can assure you it's true,
A man with a pail
Threw suds on my tail!
Now I think that's cruel, don't you?"

Said the second: "That's very atrocious;
But a worse thing happened to me:
A boy with a stone
Almost broke my backbone!
Now what think you of that?" said he.

Said the third: "My fate was the hardest,
And I can prove it just now:
A man knocked me flat
When I looked at a cat!
Wasn't that too bad? Bow-wow."

But the three little dogs did not mention,
The first that he'd stolen some sprats;
The next, that he ran
At a poor blind man;
And the third, that he'd hunted the cat.

Thus, these three little dogs were talking,
And many small folk do the same;
They tell of a story
That redounds to their glory,
But forget where they well deserve blame.

A Small Loyalist.

BY S. ROSALIE SILL.

THEY were out underneath the trees that lovely autumn day, where the soft sunshine filtered through the thinning leaves, already gold and crimson, just two girl neighbors, Cassie Lever and Marjorie Bently, playing housekeeping.

Cassie had invited Marjorie the previous day saying: "Come over, and be sure and bring your pitcher, for I've something nice to put in it."

So Marjorie had tripped across the orchard, carrying the blue and gold pitcher her Aunt Marjorie had given her on her last birthday.

The table was already set with Cassie's best dishes, when Marjorie came up the pathway, and Cassie met her with a kiss and "hug," saying:

"I've been waiting for you as much as half an hour. I could not leave the table with the jelly cake and little biscuits and butter on it, for a cat or dog might skirmish along at any moment. Now you can watch, while I go and fill the pitcher," and away sped Cassie.

"Let me fill your cup," said Cassie, after she had taken a seat.

Marjorie passed the tiny cup, took it when it was filled, smelled of its contents, and jumping to her feet cried, "What is that stuff, Cassie Lever?"

"You need not act like that, Marjorie Bently, crooking your nose—like—like a crooked-necked squash and calling it 'stuff!' when it is delicious cider!"

"I thought it was, and my pitcher, my beautiful little pitcher is desegrated—that is what mamma calls it, I think, when you put good things to a bad use;" then Marjorie emptied her pitcher upon the ground, while Cassie stamped her feet, with tears of vexation running down her face.

"What's the matter between you two?" inquired Mrs. Lever, coming to the door, and seeing Cassie's tears and Marjorie flying through the orchard.

"Why, Marj is meaner than dirt with her mighty temperance notions. She's thrown all of that cider on the ground and gone home as mad as a wet hen! I'll never invite her to tea again."

"Well, I never," said Mrs. Lever thoughtfully as she slowly went in through the kitchen door.

"But, mother, you do not scold about her as you used to do about Mrs. Bently when she had been off on one of her white-ribbon crusades," and Cassie edged up a trifle nearer.

"No, child, I shall have to have time to think things over."

"Now I wonder what has come over mother. She acts as though she was struck with Mrs. Bently's new-fangled ways," and then Cassie went out to the orchard where the table was set, and found the cat devouring the last biscuit, so she sat down and cried.

In the house Mrs. Lever was thinking things over. She knew her husband had come home two or three times of late in a strange condition, with his breath smelling strong of cider. She knew, too, that only the previous evening her son, Bertrand, the pride and hope of her life, came home drunk—yes, actually drunk—all because of this same cider.

After a time Mrs. Lever put on her sunbonnet and was going through the orchard, when Cassie, who had ended her storm of tears, called:

"Where are you going, mother?"

"To talk things over with Mrs. Bently."

"I do wonder what has got into mother. She never acted so queer before."

It was nearly dark when Mrs. Lever came home, with a look on her face Cassie never had seen there before.

"What is it, mother?" queried Bert at the supper table.

"We are to have no more cider drinking within our home."

Mr. Lever and his son both looked at the woman a moment in silence, knowing that her word was as a law within the home.

However, Cassie looked up and said, "So you've given in to that temperance crank?"

"I've given in to good, sound sense, that temperance is the safeguard of the home."

In these days Cassie and Marjorie often play "tea," but only crystal water or "cambric tea" fills their tiny cups. Mrs. Lever marches with the white-ribboners, and seems to think she can not do half enough for the cause. Mrs. Bently says: "Had it not been for my loyal little Marjorie, who was dedicated to the grand work at three months old, I do not know where the Levers would have been to-day."

Facts About Flags.

1. TO "strike the flag" is to lower the national colors in submission.

2. Flags are used as the symbol of rank and command, the officers using them being called "flag officers." Such flags are square, to distinguish them from other banners.

3. A "flag of truce" is a white flag, displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for parley or consultation.

4. The white flag is the sign of peace. After a battle parties from both sides often go out to the field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead under the protection of the white flag.

5. The red flag is the sign of defiance, and is often used by revolutionists. In our service it is a mark of danger, and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.

6. The black flag is a sign of piracy.

7. The yellow flag shows a vessel to be in quarantine or is the sign of a contagious disease.

8. A flag at half mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with the flag at half mast to announce the loss or death of some of their crew.

9. Dipping the flag is lowering it slightly and then hoisting it again to salute a vessel or fort.

10. If the President of the United States goes afloat the American flag is carried in the bow of his barge or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.

I'll Try to be Like Granma.

BY HELEN PAINE—8 YEARS OLD.

A LITTLE girl one day sat down in a large rocking chair. She said: "I'll try to be like granma;" so she put on her granma's glasses and took the large newspaper to read.

After a little while she put down her newspaper and said to dollie: "Granma's got the headeck. Oh! Oh! It's gone all ready, ain't I glad?" Just what granma does. "Now, dollie, go to sleep; I'll sing you the song that granma sings to me when she puts me to sleep." This is the song!

"By baby By, granma's little dear. Go to sleep, By baby By."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—We have a letter this week from a new cousin who lives so far away that it almost seems like a different world to us, New South Wales. You know THE UNION SIGNAL goes to nearly every country on the globe, so when you are reading the Cozy Corner letters you can remember that they are being read with the same interest by other boys and girls in far-off lands. It is one phase of "the tie that binds" our white-ribbon army, and it pleases me to know that my young people are helping to cement the bands of love and good comradeship that mean so much to our work, through their letters to each other and to me.

I would like to have some of you write to the cousin in Australia and give her a personal welcome to our Cozy Corner. It will be a mutual pleasure, for she can tell you something of a country that is new and strange to us.

Lovingly yours, AUNT MARY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl nine years old. I am staying with my grandma now at Wildomar, but I live in Los Angeles. I have two brothers and two sisters. My grandma fell and broke her leg the 17th of December, and I came here to help her, and I can save a good many steps for her; she is seventy-four years old. She has taken THE UNION SIGNAL ever since the first one after the Crusade at Hillsboro. This is my first letter to the Cozy Corner.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

What a Girl Ought to Know.

BOYS, as well as girls, ought to know human nature for one thing. It is of equal importance to both, but we prefer to speak mainly of girls just now. No one will ever know human nature perfectly. The prophet has said, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" At the same time there is a degree of knowledge open to all which is sufficient to bring a girl out of a dangerous, unsophisticated state into a good understanding of people, which would prove a safeguard of untold value.

There is strange ignorance of the opposite sex on the part of many girls, which seems almost inexplicable when we consider that God has set mankind in families and that the family is the first and most important institution in the world. It would seem that it should be instituted with the greatest care, the greatest forethought, the greatest knowledge, and yet the opposite is eminently true. In the absence of knowledge, creations of the imagination, conclusions not based on truth, often become fixed in a girl's mind which no amount of belated information can change one iota. This is especially true after the affections are placed upon a self-created idol. Such an idol cannot easily be shattered. Even the mother jeopardizes the love of her child when she waits till all of the chances are against her, and a battle is on upon which is staked the happiness of her child and her own before she begins to teach that "all is not gold that glitters." There is a long procession of mothers wending their way to the grave, with hearts already dead within them, because each witnesses the misery of a daughter she would gladly have died to save, but she is now powerless to help or to hinder. It is too late. The die is cast, and the girl has lost. Her innocence, her natural charms, her trustful heart, her unsophisticated, beautiful, believing self, charmed the vampire, and once sucked within the circle of his influence, she was lost. She had no more knowledge of the relentless evil which would consume her than the moth has of the flame that strikes out its little life, unlike the human heart that lives on, though scorched with pain. It is the chief delight of many a mother to rear such an innocent creature, apparently unconscious that her innocence is a degree of ignorance which amounts to a crime, to be laid at the mother's door.

Mothers are satisfied with "hoping" about things that should be rendered certainties so far as is within the range of possibility. If a daughter were promised the opportunity of choosing the most costly and artistic vase from a collection of good and bad ones, her mother would put her in training at once, that she might make her fortune by her choice. She would speedily become a connoisseur in ceramics; but the same mother will fold her hands and "hope" the ignorant little thing will choose the right companion for life when she knows scarcely a single sign of what is base or deceitful. If young people studied humanity more there would not be so many unhappy marriages, nor so much crime in the world. They should be taught human nature in its entirety, the bad there is in it as well as the good. One cannot be a judge of beauty without knowing something of the ugly as well; he cannot teach ethics unless he recognizes the bad as well as the good, he can not rightly appreciate or deal with truth unless he also knows the false. If a girl knows nothing of the ugly, the bad, the false in human nature, nothing of the signs of evil, she is left as helpless as a babe in the highest concerns of life.

It does good people no harm to expose the bad. It rather helps to secure for them the appreciation which is their due. It is too often the case that the girl prefers the fast young man, not because she really prefers the evil, if she only knew it, but for other reasons, and because she does not know the stamp of wrong doing. As well might one believe that beads and trinkets will not beguile the savage out of his land, that candy and gaudy playthings will not tempt a child to go with a stranger, that the mirage will not deceive the uninformed, as to believe that the sweet tale of love will not beguile the unsophisticated maiden, even though it come from the lips of a black-hearted villain. Knowledge is the only cure. It is fortunate beyond measure to be born into a home where love abounds—love and truthfulness—but it is unfortunate not to know that there is something else in the world. How are girls to know it? by instruction from the lips of father and mother, and by the written word, tested by their own observation—and it must be known in time.

Tragedies are enacted daily because mothers deliberately prefer to let their daughters take the risk. Within a few months a young man of fine physique and once handsome face, but of grossly immoral character, married an elegant, good girl in one of the southern states. "During the engagement she was told of his horrible life," our informant writes, "but she would not believe one word against him." It was too late then to begin her education, and not to be expected that she would receive another's dictum upon so important a subject and one hitherto unknown to her. She married him, and when she awoke to the enormity of his sins she became insane and again and again attempted her own life. Her sister, a minister's wife, cared for her, and reason returned. But disease had fastened upon her, and her husband treated her wish to see him once more before she died, with contempt. Melancholy enwrapped her in its folds, and the anniversary of her wedding day saw her despairing death. Might not this girl have been so taught from childhood that a young man so fallen could not have deceived her, though he did not live in her home town and she did not see him often? We believe she could

The Test of a Bad Book.

DOES it make you love evil? If so, it is a bad book. Evil must be portrayed. The best books ever written, including the Bible, do that; but it must be in such a way as not to entrance the senses, stir the passions, or partially or wholly obliterate the lines of right and wrong. If one finds himself rolling the descriptions of evil like a sweet morsel under the tongue, he may be sure there is poison there, no matter how disguised. Is sin made more hideous, do you rise up from the reading better prepared to recognize it, to meet it, and to triumph over it? then the book has probably done you good and not harm. It is the description of evil doing that one gloats over, delights to realize and to dwell upon that blights and withers, but who loves sin the more by the awful portrayals of it in Holy Writ? Who is carried away with it by reading "Pilgrim's Progress"? Who is charmed by it in "Paradise Lost"?

The writer, the sculptor, the painter reveals his own mind in his creations. If he is base it is bound to show in his works to a greater or lesser degree in spite of his good intentions. Some powerfully written books, displaying splendid imagination, brilliant descriptive powers, and an ability to analyze and to construct that is first grade, nevertheless, need to be expurgated or annihilated. The more charming and brilliant the style of the writer, the more is the danger that he will revel in his own powers, will push his realism to the last notch and bring his readers through sloughs of filth for the sake of painting the jack-o'-lantern hovering over the bog. Such books are dangerous.

On the other hand, someone has said that the next best thing to living, for a boy or a girl, is to live in a story, and that aside from contact with human beings we learn human nature most in stories. But, alas, it is too true that some mothers wish their boys to learn to swim without going near the water, and their daughters to be able to take care of themselves and escape the pitfalls of the world without ever having learned what they look like, how disguised they are, or that they really exist. According to the moral and æsthetic standards of some, it is better to let the children take the risks than that they should be offended by a portrayal of the ugly or the evil. The slaughter of the innocents by the thousands and the tens of thousands can go on, but their taste must not be offended or their standards violated.

More Expressions Concerning Lady Henry Somerset.

WE give place to the following resolutions of the Boston union, inasmuch as Mrs. Leavitt is one of the honorable vice-presidents of that union. Mrs. Chant and Mrs. Rowerth each have a word to say:

RESOLUTIONS BY THE BOSTON UNION.

We, the Boston Woman's Christian Temperance Union, do hereby Resolve, That while recognizing the inestimable worth of the service given to our grand organization by our pioneer round-the-world missionary, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, and desiring to express our highest regard for the same, we do yet deeply deplore her recent action in sending out circulars, calculated, as we believe, to arouse a spirit of dissension in our ranks, and convey a wrong impression to those outside our membership.

We believe that unity, not discord, should be the aim of every true white-ribboner in this crucial time of our history. And further,

Resolved, That we express our deep gratification in the sincere and noble retraction made by Lady Henry Somerset, and extend to her our love and loyalty. We would also express our appreciation of the value of her labors for the uplift of humanity, and pledge our allegiance to her, so suddenly and sadly called to the leadership of our white-ribbon host.

AN INDIGNANT PROTEST BY MRS. CHANT.

EDITORS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—It is simply impossible to keep silence when a cruel wrong is being done, not only to the living president of the W. W. C. T. U. and to the honored dead, but also to our great union and every member in it.

I wish to enter a most heartfelt protest against the way in which Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt is bringing shame on us all by her attacks on Lady Henry Somerset. One would have thought that common decency and ordinary good feeling would have restrained any hostile action in our ranks for many a long month to come. We are standing, as it were, sorrow-stricken by the newly-made grave of one with whose loss the world is echoing, and whose like we shall never see again, the great ones being forever unduplicated. We have had a brief vision of the homestead gates, as our beloved Miss Willard passed through them to the welcoming glory beyond; and one of the lessons such a vision should have taught us is the unspeakable preciousness of those who can lead others while alive and among them.

A thousand tender regrets that we had not sooner recognized the presence of a shining one, when that brief glimpse revealed the shimmer of the white garments—a thousand misgivings that a little more love and a little less criticism might have prolonged the sojourn in the earthly tenement, must have welled up in many hearts as we thought of the deep silence that death flings around the dead and of how little it avails to pile high the loveliest flowers on the coffin of one to whom we gave the ugliest things of our character while they were with us.

How well I remember the fierce and cruel attacks that were made on beloved Frances E. Willard, some ten years ago, when strenuous efforts were being made to poison the loyalty of the dear women she had gathered round her. Is it to be borne in silence that the same miserable spirit of self-seeking and discourtesy is gathering its forces against the noble and gracious woman who has succeeded Miss Willard in the presidency?

Are those who have known Lady Henry Somerset through the years of her lovely work and life to be dumb when the breath of slander is busy in defaming her, and a spirit of inexplicable unfairness twists and distorts her utterances out of all the noble shape she gave them? We can hope for no victories, and make no progress in our difficult crusade until loyalty to our leader is a prominent item both in our creed and conduct. The disloyalty, not to call it by a stronger name, of an honorary president circulating printed statements against the truth and uprightness of the president with a request that the statements should be secured a place in all newspapers possible, etc., is a proceeding so base it is astounding that a professing Christian can fight with such weapons and condescend to such methods.

As one of the W. W. C. T. U. superintendents, I desire to protest against any such methods being tolerated in our union. As a friend, and a loyal one of many years' standing of the "elect lady," as beloved Miss Willard called Lady Henry in those now sacred penciled "screeds" of hers, I dare not withhold the friend's loving and indignant protests against these treacherous attacks on her position and character. My response will be from the hearts of tens of thousands of women who are anxious to save all their strength for fighting the foes—drink and impurity—instead of wasting it in attacking each other.

Your loving comrade,

LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.

THE POSITION OF OUR LEADER.

EDITORS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—I have been deeply interested in the recent letters of Mrs. Leavitt in regard to Lady Henry Somerset's position and in THE UNION SIGNAL'S consideration of the same. I see there are weak points in the latter, which couldn't be carried out in all cases, and while I do not wish to open any controversy yet I hope one of its constant readers may be allowed a space in your columns, since this weakness must be apparent to many.

If Lady Henry were eligible to office in only her own British Temperance society, the plea that the customs of her and our own country are so different, therefore, she must be judged from a different standpoint from our own officers, then, that excuse offered for her opinions might be allowed. This only, however, if their pledge could sustain such laxness.

The recent statement of Col. T. W. Higginson in a widely-published article implying that it was the custom of Miss Willard to use wine in countries where the water was unfit to drink, omitting to say that the time she did so, if ever, was before she was a W. C. T. U. woman, and that she never would have been guilty of such an act later, and the immediate public criticism of such imputations upon our women, shows the jealousy with which the habits and principles of our leaders are watched and guarded.

The World's pledge being the same as that of our National and local unions admits of no individual interpretations. The office of World's president being vacant, and Lady Henry Somerset being acting incumbent, is it not a matter of great seriousness that one who entertains different opinions from those set forth in our platform should be its representative and our leader? THE UNION SIGNAL admits these differences [Not a difference of principles, but simply of methods as applied to England, as the following incomplete quotation shows.—THE EDITORS.] but says: "It is a question of Christian charity. Are we to spend our force in an attack upon one of our members who may have views differing from our own as to the best methods of accomplishing the end we all have in view?" Many spiritual minded, godly persons, including ministers, believe in licensing liquor, still claiming to be temperance believers and workers, and only believing in a "difference of method" to gain the same end for which we work. While we may consider them consistent members of churches, the latter having no temperance pledge among their tenets, would we admit them as members of our W. C. T. U.? No, they must subscribe to the articles of our pledge in order to be counted as members of our unions.

The opposition of Mrs. Leavitt to Lady Henry's occupying the office of World's president, is not because of any lack of Christianity, lovable qualities or of spiritual nature on her part, but because of her not being in harmony with the strict interpretation of our pledge, which stands for our creed, therefore not a suitable World's representative. As I have said, she still might represent the British society, if their pledge can be interpreted to allow it. That is their matter.

The recent position of Lady Henry with regard to the C. D. Acts and her subsequent withdrawal from the same, and public acknowledgment of her mistaken ideas, shows she is not infallible, yet willing to learn, and she may grow in time to the level of the true interpretation of the pledge. Meantime it is our conviction that no one not upon that high platform should be elected as the World's representative of W. C. T. U. beliefs.

Barred Out.

SHE went reeling across the ladies' waiting room and fell in a senseless heap just inside the door. The great room was filled with the usual varied throng—smartly dressed young women, intelligent looking college girls, earnest, anxious mothers, quiet sisters of charity, and others with the hard lessons of life written on their tired faces—but not one among them all stepped forward to lend a helping hand to this fallen bit of humanity that lay, like a blot, upon the dusty floor. Even the big hearted colored woman in charge drew herself up straight, with added dignity, and held herself aloof as with curling lip she touched the electric button at her elbow. A moment later an official appeared and smiled significantly as he raised the prostrate form and led it tottering from the room. No one followed, but all felt as if they had suffered an indignity, and so, shut out from the kind and the good, this frail sister went as if to her doom.

"Say, has Jenkins got a job yet?" we overheard one man ask another yesterday while waiting on the street corner for a car.

"No, course he hasn't," was the answer in gruff tones. "Doesn't deserve any. S'pose anybody's goin' to hire a man smellin' o' whisky half the time?"

The speaker was red-faced and blear-eyed, but that fact did not seem to make any difference in the expression of his opinion.

In the popular mind there are few weaknesses or crimes that excite so little sympathy as the habit of intoxication. Man condemns his fellowmen without a hearing. Business methods demand sobriety and an unclouded brain. The corporations that vote against prohibition are the very ones that exact, within the limits of their commercial operations, the strictest kind of prohibition, thus admitting the necessity of our vital principle. To the inebriate, the hard world offers no place of trust or responsibility. "Out you go," is the decree of the employer to the employé who has made himself unreliable and incompetent by the dread curse. Could the tempted ones realize this truth, they would hesitate long before forging their chains.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

S. T. Nicholson, general secretary of the National Good Citizens' League, announces that the second annual convention of the League is to be held at Nashville, Tenn., July 11–13.

Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, W. C. T. U. president of Colorado, was a fraternal delegate to the meeting of women's clubs in Denver, and her presentation greeting was well received.

Pundita Ramabai spent a few days in Chicago lately, and made a call at Headquarters. She has been seeking aid in this country and in Canada for her school for child widows in India, and returns soon to her native land and her work.

Rev. W. J. Trimble, 403 Poplar St., Chattanooga, is the president of the Chattanooga branch of the National Relief Committee, and will distribute special supplies to the soldiers upon request, if designed for regiments not having a canteen.

Dr. Abbott, replying in The Outlook of June 25 to a question concerning the Passover and the use of unfermented wine at Sacrament, says: "That Christ used unfermented wine at the Last Supper appears more than probable." Thus another scholarly name is added in favor of non-alcoholic wine at the Communion table.

Emilie D. Martin, speaking of the Tribune Sunshine Society, says: "When we think of the circulation of the New York Tribune it is a fine opportunity to sow seed, and I wish our women would send a temperance sentiment in prose or poetry to me, care of New York Tribune for the Sunshine column, and a stamp for the pin."

It is a coincidence that both the Senate and House at Washington have blind chaplains. Milburn, of the Senate, is the more distinguished, but Couden, of the House, is even more eloquent. He is a man powerful in argument, and a friend of the W. C. T. U. He believes there are many men in Congress who at heart favor temperance, but are deterred from speaking out on account of partyism.

Hon. Joel F. Short, of Mountain Grove, Mo., is an honorary member of the local union, and made the address of welcome to a W. C. T. U. convention lately. He exhorted them to "beat the drum of the Gospel, blow the fife of temperance, call for volunteers to fight and exterminate the enemies of our homes." That is good doctrine, Brother Joel, "the prophet," and even the peace department will say "Amen."

Col. C. J. Bliss, of the Second Nebraska regiment, wrote to Mrs. Mamie Claflin, of Ord, Neb., in reply to congratulations upon the stand he took against the canteen: "No power can be brought strong enough to influence me or deter me from the course which I believe to be the only right one to take in order to preserve and maintain the purity of the flower of Nebraska's young men in my command."

Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong has retired from the secretaryship of the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance. The office was mostly ornamental before he came into it, but lately sociological and reformatory features have become very prominent. It is announced that these are to be thrown overboard and that the Alliance will confine its attention to distinctively religious subjects. When we read Dr. Strong's revelation of bad social conditions, and knew of his great activity in many lines of reform we believed him come into the kingdom for such a time. We shall hope that this retirement has come to pass only that he may have a wider field.

A Y Catechism.

1. WHAT is the object of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union?

To enlist young women and young men in the temperance army and to make of them trained workers in the W. C. T. U.

2. What is the necessity of a separate organization?

Because more young people can be enlisted, as many of the young people are employed in the afternoon when W. C. T. U. meetings are held, and being unable to attend they will not join. Furthermore it is a good thing to throw the responsibility for the work of the organization upon the young people.

3. What privileges are accorded honoraries?

They can vote on local affairs, can serve on committees and be superintendents of departments, but can not be officers, or be delegates to state or National conventions. They can, however, be delegates to Y conferences.

4. Why can they not have these other privileges?

The benefits of auxiliaryship are many, but there is no men's and women's organization to which the Y can be auxiliary, so they must be auxiliary to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Because this is an organization of women, managed by women, of course young men can not be officers or delegates. For this reason no auxiliary dues are asked of the young men, but while they pay the same dues as the young women they are all retained for local work, while a certain proportion of the dues of the young women is sent for state and National dues.

5. What is the relation of the Y to the National and state W. C. T. U.?

Exactly the same as that of the local W. C. T. U. The members pay the same per capita local and auxiliary dues, and are entitled to the same privileges in conventions.

6. What is their relation to the departments of work?

Exactly the same as that of the W's. Department work should be reported by local superintendents to county, district, state or National superintendents, just as the W's is.

7. What then is the province of the Y secretary?

It is to oversee specially the Y work, to push the work of organization, and to create an interest among young people in temperance work.

8. What are her duties?

(1.) Organization. (a) Y's wherever possible. (b) Y Branches where a separate organization can not be maintained. (c) Invite young women to join the W. C. T. U.

(2.) Temperance work in Young People's societies.

(3.) Temperance work in schools and colleges.

9. What are Y Branches?

Where it seems impracticable to form a Y, invite the young people to join the W. C. T. U. Make them responsible for fifteen minutes at the regular meetings of the W. C. T. U., under the direction of the local Y secretary. Occasionally they can have a meeting by themselves to which the young gentlemen can be invited.

10. Is some phase of Young Woman's work practicable in every local union?

Certainly; and unless an especial effort is made to secure the coöperation and help of the young women the W. C. T. U. will die.

11. What departments of work are adapted to the Y's?

The work of our organization is twofold: educating our own members, and doing active temperance work among outsiders. For the purpose of education the Y's ought to study all the departments of work, and find out their relation to the temperance cause. For active temperance work, Loyal Temperance Legions, flower mission, Sunday-school work, temperance literature. Study the Y Annual Leaflet, and you will find that nearly all of them are adapted to Y work.

12. What is the age limit in the Y's?

While no age limit has been definitely fixed yet the object is to reach young people from sixteen to twenty-five or thirty years.

13. Where can we get helps for the organization of Y's?

By sending to the general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch of the National W. C. T. U., or to the Y secretary of your own state.

14. What are the conditions of membership?

Signing the pledge and payment of dues every year. Every Y ought to wear her white ribbon or Y badge, or both, all the time.

15. What are Somerset Y's?

Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions organized in schools and colleges.

16. How do they differ from other Y's?

Only in the fact that as students have little time for outside work, the methods are adapted to college life.

17. Ought young women to attend National, state, district and county W. C. T. U. conventions?

Certainly. Because they have paid dues they are entitled to be there, and to a voice in the conventions, and they can help make the meetings interesting.

18. What then is the summing up of the whole matter?

The Y. W. C. T. U. and the Young Woman's Branch are a necessity as recruiting stations from which workers may be trained in temperance methods and in the great conflict for temperance, purity and equality. The young, the middle-aged and the old are all needed to help "wage our peaceful warfare for God, and home, and native land."

In Memoriam.

THE members of the Organizer Publishing Company, friends and co-workers of Lodie E. Reed, late press superintendent of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have issued, as a tribute to her worth, a memorial booklet, containing a biographical sketch and incidents connected with her illness and death, from which we quote as follows, a sketch of her lifework not having been available at the time her death was noted:

Miss Lodie Elizabeth Reed, A. M., was born May 22, 1847, at Urbana, O., from which place her parents moved to Monticello, Ind., when she was five years old. Her father was Judge Alfred Finch Reed. She acquired a classical education in the high school of her town and at the Methodist College at South Bend, and the male and female college at Valparaiso, where she graduated with the highest honors in 1867. For ten years she taught at Monticello and Attica, being principal of the high school in the latter place. Being in Urbana at the time of the Crusade, she received through it her call to temperance work. In 1882 she became corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Indiana, and remained in that position nearly thirteen years. She was also for ten years superintendent of the scientific temperance instruction department, and led the campaign which secured that law for this state. For many years she was press superintendent of the National W. C. T. U., and editor of the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

It was probably as superintendent of the department of scientific temperance instruction that Miss Reed accomplished her most arduous task. Beginning the work in 1881 as superintendent of the department, when department work was in its infancy, she did not have the well-beaten path of a successful forerunner in which to travel, but "blazed the way" in true pioneer fashion. Persistently pushing the work, introducing with vigor new plans from year to year, calling to her assistance help from all parts of the state, through seasons of encouragement and discouragement, but with steady persistency from the years 1881 to 1890, then again in the years 1894 and 1895, when, in the latter year, the work of herself and co-laborers was finally crowned by the enactment by the legislature of the bill which is now upon the statutes by which instructions on the physiological effects of alcohol is made a part of the curriculum of our public schools. Governor Mathews, then the executive of the state, recognizing Miss Reed's faithful efforts, made known his appreciation by presenting to her the pen with which he attached his signature to the law which was so dear to her.

Miss Lodie Reed accepted the position of corresponding secretary of the Indiana W. C. T. U. at the convention held in Indianapolis in 1882, at the recommendation of Mrs. M. M. Finch, the former corresponding secretary. In her report, given at the convention again held in Indianapolis in 1894, she said: "Beloved, thirteen years ago this autumn there came to me a letter from your corresponding secretary, asking me to come here and take charge of the work at her office for the remainder of the year. My soul recognized in the call the voice which had for a year past in undefined whispers drawn me toward some new field of work, and I gladly obeyed. The work has been to me a peculiarly sacred one, and I have given to it the best that God has given to me. Your love and companionship have made it, too, a pleasant service. But the voice which called me into it thirteen years since, as clearly in the past few months has called me to deliver up this trust, that I may devote myself to other service, and in submitting to you this, my last report as your corresponding secretary, I desire to thank you for the love, the confidence and sympathy which have made it such a joyful service."

As superintendent of the press department of the National W. C. T. U. from 1892 to 1895 and of the World's W. C. T. U. in 1896-97, Miss Reed gave much thought and care to this department, and formulated plans for occupying this field, which were passed on to others in the shape of a press bulletin issued by herself and sent to such newspapers as would receive it, and to all superintendents of the press department. She also published a pamphlet of forty pages entitled "Points for Press Workers." Simple, definite and practical, this contribution to our W. C. T. U. literature is most valuable and will live while any part of the work for which the W. C. T. U. was organized remains to be done. The press is mightier than the sword. Successful use of the latter depends upon the training of the hand of the user, so the former will succeed as the workers fit themselves by study. This manual, prepared and left us by Miss Reed, is the best help offered. At the time of her death she left in press the last issue of the World's Bulletin and the Organizer Bulletin. So, as we are sure was her desire, she fell with the "harness on" at the height of her mental vigor.

Visit of Miss Agnes Slack, Secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., to Paris.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For the first time the leading women's organization in France, which is known as Women's Conference, had an address at Versailles, on total abstinence. Mlle. Sarah Monod, daughter of Pastor Adolphe Monod, presided at the conference, and gave Miss Slack a most beautiful welcome.

Miss Slack spoke on the work of the World's W. C. T. U., and explained how she wished to form a branch in Paris. She spoke in French, and made herself easily understood. After the address twenty-five ladies joined the W. C. T. U.

When we consider the opinion in France, we can regard it as a very great success, especially as some of the leaders of the woman's organization in Paris have given their names; Mme. Jeanne Schmahl, president of the Avant Courriere; Mme. Vincent, president of the Egalite; Mme. Creissei, wife of the president of the Croix Bleue Temperance Society, and one of the leading women in France, will probably accept the presidency of the French W. C. T. U. Mme. Menos accepted the vice-presidency, and Mme. Thyss, the secretaryship.

At this most important conference representatives were present from the various scientific and philanthropic organizations in France.

Through the courtesy of Dr. Legrain, president of the National League against Alcoholism in France, Miss Slack attended the annual Committee of the League, and was presented to the members. This committee was to make preliminary arrangements for the International Temperance Congress in 1900.

Dr. Laborde, principal of the Laboratoire de Physiologie à l'Ecole de Medicine, Mr. Creissel, president of the Croix Bleue, Mr. de Morsier, president of the French Branch of Purity Association, Pastor Anderson, of the McAll mission, all extended the greatest kindness and their help to Miss Slack.

The president of the Croix Bleue invited her to give an address to the Croix Bleue society on a future occasion. And Dr. Legrain expressed the hope she would be able to take part in the International Congress for temperance, to be held in Paris in 1900.

We French women hope we shall often see Miss Slack in Paris, and hear her bright and inspiring talk.

Massachusetts.

"TO cure, is the voice of the past, to prevent, the divine whisper of to-day." Judging from the nature of the work of our unions we conclude that the divine whisper is being heeded, but in the application of this ounce of prevention we are often misunderstood by those who have not kept pace with the evolution of our methods. This was the case with an elderly member who, in commenting upon a certain county convention, said: "I have a neighbor who is a drunkard; I came here to learn how to save him, but have received no help. I think the W. C. T. U. has departed from its original object." The keynote of the convention in question was, "How to live;" practical suggestions as to healthful diet for body and mind were given, while the training of children and the making of home life simple and sensible were considered. We differ from our sister by believing that this simple seed-sowing of prevention is worth more than a whole crop of cure; that ten minutes thus spent will bring a larger fruitage than an hour's singing of "Rescue the perishing."

The Massachusetts women are "pursuing the even tenor of their way." Their long-cherished hope that the Massachusetts men would pursue the even basso of their way, and thus join in a beautiful duet seemed possible, when Rev. Geo. C. Lorimer sent out a circular letter asking the three thousand clergymen to meet in convention to consider what course the church should take toward the liquor trade; but "of all sad words of tongue and pen," the prohibition pitch was too high for these masculine voices, and the longed for duet continues to be indefinitely postponed.

Boston, the center of our universe, is fortunate as to situation. Not only have state and National speakers visited its union, but friends from Japan, Syria, Iceland and Canada have helped by their presence and words. Madame Barakat has given Bible lectures, and the evangelistic superintendent reports souls born into the kingdom. To our amazement we learn that even rum-ridden Boston might have been carried for no-license if the stay-at-homes had done their duty.

The department of soldiers and sailors comes urgently before us in these days of war. In response to the call of the superintendent the soldiers are being supplied with comfort bags, and through the efforts of D. L. Moody the gospel is being carried to our boys.

Mrs. Rice is one of our busy women. In spite of lack of leaders she has succeeded in organizing Legions, and presented them to the care of some of the childless unions. She has planned and attended L. T. L. conventions and held conferences with workers at which valuable experiences in methods were brought forward, as well as helpful discussions in practical suggestions.

The state president has written a letter urging that we make the Temple a Willard memorial; as a result of that and the numerous other calls the entire state is working with renewed zeal to help lift the debt and secure this memorial to our promoted leader. Many methods are used, but none so satisfying as the freewill offering.

Temperance day was observed in the schools of Gardner, the teachers, in response to the request of the W. C. T. U., preparing the programs. Notable among these was that in the French school, whose children do not hear a word of English in their homes. The clergy and white-ribboners participated in the exercises. Another important and far-reaching work in the schools was that accomplished by the Leicester union, who supplied the children and parents with carefully selected literature.

The Willard Y Settlement is fulfilling a most important mission in providing a home for the girl who works, the girl who travels and the girl who wanders about with no one to care. Among its interesting incidents is the entertaining of our Iceland friend, Miss Johannsdottir, and the reunion of a brother and sister after a separation of twenty-five years.

Our ranks have met with a loss through the going home of Mrs. Esther T. Housh, formerly state corresponding secretary and National superintendent of literature. The Boston union held memorial services and words of love and appreciation were spoken of this woman, who has contributed many valuable leaflets, and in other ways been a power for good.

The curfew ordinance has gone into effect in North Adams with great enthusiasm; some of our women were active in bringing it about.

All this, and the much more that might be reported, is heeding the divine whisper to work in the line of hopeful prevention; but as the water lily will fade and weaken if there be no refreshing showers from the skies, so we recognize the fact that in all our work earthly efforts are of no avail unless heaven is invoked for its showers of blessing.

FLOWER Mission Day has passed, and all over the state the inmates of our almshouses have been made glad by the presence of the W. C. T. U. workers and the many friends whose interest in this department has been awakened. The four unions of Woodsville, North Haverhill, Haverhill and East Haverhill united in purchasing a crate of strawberries for the inmates of their almshouse, 104 in number. "A treat greatly enjoyed by them."

At the Sullivan county almshouse about fifty persons gathered; a pleasant service was held, beautiful flowers were distributed, and the tables in the dining-room were loaded with fruit and confectionery. There are many aged and sick among the inmates here, and they are so glad to be remembered. Five towns in the county were represented among the visitors, and all the county commissioners were present.

Claremont union gave the buttonhole bouquets tied with white ribbon, which it has been their custom for several years to prepare for the members of the Grand Army on Decoration Day. For the first time in its history Claremont has a woman on the school board, Mrs. P. P. Coburn, for twenty years an officer in the W. C. T. U. It was largely through the efforts of the temperance element that she received the position; she is doing admirable work and giving general satisfaction.

Ashland reports good growth. "A number of the prominent men have recently joined as honorary members; our pastors are with us heart and soul; gospel meetings held every month." Epsom, a small union, has recently added twenty-two members, good work being done in the schools. The School Physiology Journal introduced. The L. T. L. is waiting for a superintendent. Why is it so hard to find anyone willing to carry on this valuable branch of our work?

Webster union has a new member, a woman ninety-two years old.

One enthusiastic worker for the Temple in Franklin has secured twenty-five names for a baby band.

At the midyear convention of Coos county a double memorial service was held in memory of Miss Willard and Mrs. W. A. Folsom, of Lancaster, an earnest temperance worker in the county. Nearly all the unions were represented, the school children were present at the afternoon session, entertaining the convention with songs, and were addressed by Mrs. Cummings, state superintendent of railroad work.

Grafton county convention was most successful, visitors from neighboring towns present in good numbers. The young men belonging to the Sons of Temperance present in their regalia and listening to Mrs. Conklin's talk upon purity with rapt attention.

The June conventions of our counties are nearly all reported and we note the needs of the Temple were strongly urged at many of them. Miss Wendell, our state president, has sent out an earnest appeal to the white-ribboners for united action in this matter of the Temple.

THIS is the season of county conventions. Reports, more or less full, have come in from several.

King county reports the largest and most enthusiastic convention it has ever enjoyed. Seattle Lake union, itself an inspiration, was the hostess. The devotional services were seasons of special blessing and uplift, as was also the memorial service. A fine thankoffering service was held, each being requested to tell what in life they were most thankful for. Most expressed greatest gratitude for early Christian influence. During the year the five local unions in the county have been increased to eight, with a membership of 128. The three new unions have all been organized within one month. The last, one day old, sent two delegates. This union starts out with the auspicious name of "Dewey." May its peaceful victories be great! Harper union has lost one of its valued workers, Mrs. Grose, who has been called higher. Lake union has completed its $100 Temple pledge. Central has pledged $100, and expects soon to complete it. Superintendents' reports were cheering. The Sunday-school department has been well worked, and increasing interest is manifest among churches. Mrs. L. B. Brown, of the department of homes for homeless children, has found homes for fifty-six little ones. Much effective work has been done in the almshouse, the superintendent of that work holding meetings there every Sunday. Flowers, fruit and other dainties have cheered the lonely inmates.

The state song, "Washington, my Washington," the composition of our own gifted Mary Bynon Reese, was sung. Mrs. Freeman gave an address, "Some of Satan's Devices," which moved the hearts of the hearers. Mrs. Wade, the county president, is most able, having both tact and spirituality. The interest culminated in the last number on the program, the silver-gray contest, when elderly matrons delighted the large audience with their elocutionary ability, and were themselves delighted, as one sister expressed it, "to fling the red-hot truths at the blessed men voters who pray 'Thy Kingdom come,' and then go out and vote for rum." The medal was awarded to Mrs. Freeman, but Mrs. Wade was close second.

Chehalis county convention was held at Hoquiam. Miss Page, the state president, conducted a most helpful school of methods. A literature booth was an excellent feature of the convention.

Pierce county convention met in Tacoma and was very helpful and encouraging. Mrs. Leckerby was elected president, Mrs. E. V. Claypool, of Puyallup, secretary, and Mrs. Rosa Marshal, treasurer. Tacoma reports two silver medal contests, important and carefully selected literature sent to clergymen, and Temple collections amounting to nearly thirty dollars. Has been much helped and blessed by the recent visit of Isabel Wing Lake and Dr. Geisel. These consecrated workers have moved audiences to sympathy and coöperation wherever they have gone in this state.

Snohomish county convention met at Everett. It has been much strengthened by the coming in of Coupeville union from Island county, which is unorganized. Coupeville union is one of the oldest in this state, having existed for over fifteen years. It owns a nice hall, and has a circulating library of over three hundred volumes. Arlington has made a specialty of contest work, with excellent results. Everett reported work done in a variety of lines. The business of the convention was hastened as much as possible that the remaining time might be at the disposal of Mrs. Lake and Dr. Geisel, who were present. Mrs. Lake strongly stirred her hearers as she told them of the shame and the sorrow in their midst, for there, as elsewhere, she had visited the haunts of vice. Her public address set forces in motion which, we trust, will result in the moral cleansing of the city, this work being undertaken by the mayor and the pastors.

Miss Murcutt is now in this state, and is winning golden opinions. She spoke briefly before the M. E. conference which recently met in Seattle, and at the close of the meeting ten ministers invited her to occupy their pulpits. They say "her equal has not been heard on this coast, preachers not excepted."

THE fifteenth annual convention of the state was held in Yazoo City, May 14–18. The convention was opened Saturday evening at eight o'clock in the Methodist church, with addresses of welcome and responses. Mrs. W. B. Curlee, the president, presided. The cordiality of the city was manifested in the number as well as eloquence of the addresses of welcome, five persons voicing these. Mrs. E. W. Featherstun, of Meridian, and Mrs. J. C. Stanley, of Boonville, responded to these most felicitously.

Sunday morning the sermon was preached by that loyal friend of the cause, Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, and was forceful and convincing in proving that woman had a mission, rather than a sphere, in the world.

The business sessions of the convention were interesting and well attended. All of the general officers were present except Mrs. A. E. Harper, the recording secretary, whose bright face and capable help was felt to be a loss from beginning to end.

The credentials committee reported forty-five delegates and ten visitors present; twenty unions out of seventy were represented. The president's address and reports of officers were given on Monday, and showed good work accomplished.

The annual address of the president, Mrs. M. B. Curlee, of Corinth, was strong and forceful, replete with beautiful thoughts, and so outlined the plan of work for the year, that the hearts of the delegates thrilled with desire to be up and doing. Mrs. Curlee has the hearts of her constituency, and her re-election was almost unanimous.

Miss Anna Brown, organizer for Alabama, spoke to the children, and others of a larger growth listened with interest.

A Willard memorial service was held, over which Mrs. L. S. Mount gracefully presided. The hymns used were those specially dear to our beloved Chieftain and the testimonies, characterizations and tributes were very touching and beautiful.

A large audience assembled in the evening to hear an address on purity, by Mrs. Unruh, National organizer.

Monday evening Miss Belle Kearney, so much appreciated by the Yazoo City people and by the delegates, delivered to a crowded house a logical and forcible address on "Christian Citizenship," or "Sirs, I would see Jesus." Tuesday evening Mrs. Garner, of Columbus, presided. A symposium, "What the W. C. T. U. has done for Woman," was held, Mesdames Garner and Pugh and Miss Grace Cox holding the attention of the audience while they recited the good that had been wrought by individuals through this organization. Mrs. Unruh followed, delighting the audience by interspersing her logic with irresistible sallies of wit. Mrs. Duncan, president of the U. D. C. of the state, sang with fine effect a solo, and added much to the enjoyment of the audience, as she did on other occasions during the convention.

The gold medal contest, a usual feature of the convention, was held Wednesday evening. The prize was awarded Master John West.

Much interest was felt in the proposed rescue home, and the report by the president of the board of control was read in her absence by Mrs. Lawson, and accepted heartily. A number of unions pledged a specified amount for the support of the home, which, we trust, will soon be established in Meridian.

The following officers for the year were elected: President, Mrs. M. B. Curlee; vice-president, Miss M. L. Montgomery; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. W. Featherstun; recording secretary, Mrs. Helen Garner; treasurer, Mrs. L. S. Mount.

Peace and Arbitration.

THE CUBAN QUESTION.

The Cuban question which has culminated in a war between the United States of America and Spain, is of absorbing interest to all members of the W. C. T. U., and especially so to the wives and mothers whose husbands and sons have gone, or may go, to the front. Therefore, it seems essential that the true position of the World's and National department of peace and arbitration be given in THE UNION SIGNAL. Our interests and sympathies as an organization are world wide. We grieved over the sad conditions in Cuba caused by the war between Spain and the insurgents. We would not minify the atrocities in the least, but all must acknowledge that such evils are always attendant, more or less, upon carnal warfare. We heartily approved the efforts made to secure peaceable settlement between the contending parties and to send relief to the suffering. Had these efforts not been interfered with much less life and property would have been sacrificed than has been and our reputation as a peace loving, Christian nation would have been preserved. Doubtless many good people believed intervention needful in the interests of humanity. Such persons had been led to this belief by reports of existing evils in Cuba without due knowledge of the greater suffering as well as loss of life and treasure that armed intervention would cause.

This department desires to define its position in a spirit of Christian charity toward those who differ from it, but also with an earnest desire that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union may stand unitedly for the principles of purity, mercy and peace symbolized by our badge of white ribbon. To present this momentous question briefly as possible we will refer first to the conditions of Cuba. Its population is 1,500,000. The number of insurgents is estimated to be 30,000, hence, a large majority are opposed to the insurrection, and those opposed represent most of the business interests and own three-fourths of the property on the island.

Our republic has taught us to believe that a people should be allowed to decide by a majority vote as to the form of government they adopt. The mediation of friendly powers or some other pacific measure might have secured this common privilege to Cuba, but armed intervention multiplies existing evils. Blockades usually mean starvation and death to helpless and inoffensive people as well as to the opposing army. It is reported that more reconcentradoes are starving and dying since the blockade of Cuban ports than before. There is sorrow and mourning in many homes in our land, and also in Spain, because bright lives have gone out from them to the field of the slayer. We have W. C. T. U. members in the land of the enemy. Our sympathies are not confined to those of our beloved land, but reach out to suffering humanity everywhere.

"Where is the true man's fatherland?
Is it where he by chance is born?
Doth not the yearning spirit scorn
In such scant borders to be spanned?
Oh, yes, his fatherland must be
As the blue heaven, wide and free."

We claim to be truly patriotic and that ours is genuine patriotism which would save the lives, health and treasures of our precious countrymen and comrades in life's journey. Reason, not the lives of our sons, should be the arbiter of nations. The department of peace and arbitration seeks to promote peace among all nations and the observance of the Golden Rule among Christian nations, as among individuals, and is directly opposed to the spirit of revenge which is too manifest in the present conflict.

Frances E. Willard said the "women must organize for peace ere the nations will learn war no more." In her last annual address she gave definite expression to her allegiance to the cause of peace. If Christians are truly willing to lay down their lives for suffering humanity, they will see the necessity ere long, we hope, of helping to put an end to the untold horrors of war. The institution of courts of justice in lieu of private war (duels, etc.), has conferred upon society the social peace and prosperity it enjoys to-day. An international court of arbitration would doubtless establish the same conditions among nations. This is the goal towards which our department is working.

Dear sisters in every nation represented by the W. C. T. U., let us pray that the "tie that binds our hearts in Christian love" may not be broken, and that we may be kept in perfect peace, even though nation lifts up sword against nation and we are powerless to prevent them. Let us promulgate principles in accordance with the gospel of peace and truth, advocating them uncompromisingly and trusting the Prince of Peace to hasten the time when men shall "learn war no more."

Yours in the bonds of harmony and love,

Parlor Meetings.

MY DEAR CO-WORKERS:—I am so very anxious for good reports next September that I cannot refrain from urging one and all to work unceasingly to gain members through our parlor meetings. I have had good news from Louisiana that a superintendent has been appointed; and from other states, that at their next state convention they would consider the matter, and in all probability appoint a parlor meeting superintendent. Dear state presidents who have not acceded to my repeated requests, please try this department for two years and see if you do not have an increased membership. Small efforts count. If each union gained one member a year through this medium would it not pay? We frequently gain five and six members at one meeting, who would never have joined our ranks if they had not been invited to a home and there heard of our work. I have issued a little leaflet called, "Questions and Answers," which explains the department.

Who will win the banner? It is now in South Dakota, and the state that gains the largest pro rata increase in membership will carry it home from the National Convention next fall. When you can do nothing else, hold parlor meetings; when you are doing everything else, hold parlor meetings. Yours for success,

MARY D. TOMLINSON,
Nat. Supt.

Plainfield, N. J.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Headquarters will be more than ever the center of our work for the next week or ten days, as Mrs. Stevens is to arrive to-day from Portland for conferences with reference to plans for the next National Convention, as well as for other important lines of work. Without doubt we shall very soon be able to make a definite announcement of programs, plans, etc.

It has been especially difficult this year to arrive at a decision concerning the chairman and secretary of the committee on resolutions. The balloting has been done through the mail, and, although two ballots had been taken, a third was made necessary by the fact that no majority vote had been arrived at. I am glad at last to be able to announce that Mrs. Emma J. Bourne, of New Jersey, is chairman, and Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, of Kansas, is secretary. Without doubt an official announcement from them will appear very soon.

I am sure the sympathies of the entire organization will go out to our National superintendent, Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, of the department of physical culture, in the great loss she has sustained in the death of her mother. Mrs. Leiter touchingly writes: "There is a great loneliness in my life." I am sure that all those who have passed through this greatest of losses will understand what that loneliness is. May the Everlasting Arms be about our dear sister, and may she be sustained in this hour of trial.

An exceedingly interesting program comes to us from the department of scientific temperance instruction. It is entitled "A Victory is Coming," with the sub-head "A Unique Temperance Meeting Suitable for Sabbath or Week Day Meetings." The program may be obtained for the price of five cents from Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 23 Trull Street, Boston, Mass. Doubtless many of the unions will be glad to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded.

The honor roll seems to be looking up. We trust the names here appended are only a foretaste of what will appear during the next few months:

Mrs. L. E. Bailey (3)
Miss Carrie Lee Carter (7)
Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard (2)
Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin (3)
Mr. C. J. Hall (4)

Hereafter those who send certificates need not give the list of names. It will be enough simply to send the certified statement that so many new members have been secured and dues paid.

Yours for a large increase,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner.

DEAR LOCAL TREASURER:—Has every member of your union paid their dues? If not, why not? Have you gently reminded them that it is time? Many of our good, earnest women have so many other cares, and the time slips away so quickly, that they forget to pay their dues. Just a slight hint is usually all that is needed and the treasurer may have the satisfaction of knowing that all dues are in and that every woman will be counted. Did it ever occur to you that an average of two members to each union would make a difference in the grand summing up of nearly 20,000 members? Two added to each would mean an increase of 20,000, and a loss of two each a loss of 20,000, or a difference of 40,000. Let every treasurer see to it that every member is counted and that several new names are added.

I have heard from several unions that have doubled their membership since our leader went away. If all could do that what a record we could make at St. Paul! Miss Willard at Buffalo expressed a desire that we greatly lengthen our list of life members to the National this year, and I was assured by several ladies that they hoped ere long to pay the twenty-five dollars and be enrolled as life members. Do you not know some good temperance woman to whom the Lord has given means and a generous heart, who would gladly become a life member? We ought to have twenty new life members before fall. HELEN M. BARKER.

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

A PROMINENT local white-ribboner has opened a "Home Restaurant" in the boys' and girls' building of the Omaha exposition, which will be a strong counteracting influence against the restaurants selling wine and beer.

THE women of the W. C. T. U. of Sodus, N. Y., are sending comfort bags to the Mariners' Temple, New York city, for distribution among the soldiers and sailors. York City, Pa., is raising a soldiers' relief fund. Morrellville Y, Pennsylvania, has been sending delicacies and supplies to their soldier boys.

THERE is no saloon in Manville, Wyo., but a druggist has been engaged in selling bitters to men who became intoxicated through the use. The matter has been taken up by the W. C. T. U. and has created much excitement, the manufacturers of the "bitters" threatening to arrest the women because of their interference in legitimate trade.

THE Kentucky W. C. T. U., through its president, Mrs. Beauchamp, invited the National officers and UNION SIGNAL editors to be present at the presentation of a silver water-set to Miss Christine Bradley, at the executive mansion, June 20, at three o'clock, in recognition of her loyalty to conviction in christening the battleship Kentucky with water.

PATRIOTISM gleams from the cover of the program of the sixth annual convention of the Senior L. T. L. of New York state, to be held in Auburn. The decoration consists of a United States flag. The contents of the program fulfill the promise of the cover and the best convention ever held by this enterprising Legion will be the result. Mrs. Harriet A. Metcalf is state general secretary.

MRS. CHARLTON EDHOLM has been putting in a month of very hard work in New York and Pennsylvania. A minister who had been in attendance at her meetings wrote a very appreciative article of her work for the Elmira Advertiser, in which he compares her to Anna Dickinson, Joan of Arc and Hester Ann Rogers, and speaks with high appreciation of the way she handles her delicate subject.

WASHINGTON state convention was favored by having three prominent workers present at all the sessions. Mrs. Maude L. Greene gave chalk-talks, Miss Hattie Henderson held model meetings, Miss Murcutt, of Australia, made numerous speeches and presented the medal the night of the gold medal contest. Miss Page was re-elected president. The convention visitors remain in the state for some weeks' work.

THE Willard union of Westfield, N. J., recently held a parlor meeting in the interests of the press department. Communications and papers from noted newspaper men and women of the country were read, the most of them having been solicited and given especially for this occasion, some of which were from the pens of Dr. Lyman Abbott, Edward W. Bok and Rev. A. B. Simpson. The meeting was planned to foster and increase a general interest in the press department, and was highly successful.

BAD BLOOD

"CASCARETS do all claimed for them and are a truly wonderful medicine. I have often wished for a medicine pleasant to take and at last have found it in Cascarets. Since taking them, my blood has been purified and my complexion has improved wonderfully and I feel much better in every way." MRS. SALLIE E. SELLARS, Luttrell, Tenn.

A CENTENARIAN white-ribboner, probably the only one in the United States, is an honored member of the union at Granville, O. Mrs. S. L. Rose celebrated her one hundredth birthday March 23. She retains the most intelligent interest in life and life's work. She receives her friends, reads the papers, and is a constant reader of the Bible. She was a teacher in the Sunday-school until she was eighty years old, and has always lived a devout life. The Granville union is very proud of this aged member.

FLORIDA W. C. T. U. is doing all in its power for the thousands of regulars and volunteers encamped at Tampa and Jacksonville. The unions at these points are still urging the sending of "comfort bags" and "housewives"; thousands of them can be used. Reading and writing tents on the camp grounds are being maintained by the W. C. T. U. and they can make good use of writing materials and reading matter. Magazines, illustrated papers and books, also temperance and gospel leaflets can be used to good advantage. These articles can be sent to Mrs. Kate P. Stewart, Tampa, and Mrs. William James, Jacksonville.

THE Sailors' Rest at 1008 South Front St., Philadelphia, although not two months old, is doing effective work among the sailors. Mrs. E. P. Bosch, Philadelphia, county superintendent, is a very efficient worker, and is helping to make the Rest a success. The women of the unions in the county are giving liberally and being trained to do valiant work. Mr. B. F. Michenor, a reformed seaman, is spending all of his hours when not at his business among the seamen and at the Rest. Two women workers will give all their time to the work, receiving a small salary through the generosity of Mr. H. B. Wyeth, husband of one of the white-ribboners of the West Philadelphia union, who has given $500 for the work there. Hundreds of comfort bags could be used there.

The white-ribboners of Mississippi mourn the loss of a good friend in the death of COL. JOHN M. SIMONTON, father of Miss Anna Simonton, state superintendent of medal contest and L. T. L. work.

The Home

Our Hired Girls.

They are essential factors to our home life; they occupy an important position in the family. How should they be treated?

Many families have but one girl, and the burdens fall heavily upon her shoulders. She must prepare carefully twenty-one meals in the week; she must wash and iron; she must sweep and dust; she must attend to the door, admit the visitors, deliver the messages and sometimes pay the bills; she must keep herself clean and tidy, and the house must be in perfect order; she must be cheerful when company comes (thus making the burdens heavier)—do all this for three dollars per week.

Do we not owe her kind treatment for all this and a prompt payment of her wages? Should we not give her kind advice about the saving of these wages? Should we speak of her faults to our visitors? As long as she is a member of our household, should not her faults be as sacredly guarded as those of our own children?

I know of one woman, she is not a saint either, but she does remember the Golden Rule in the treatment of her hired help. She was at one time at the head of a large boarding school. Eight servant girls and two hired men were her helpers. She loved those girls, she taught some of them to read and write, she cared for them kindly when ill, she gave them nice sleeping rooms, each room provided with a rocking chair and other comforts.

The mistress went West, the girls married and have now little families of their own; but when that woman returns for a visit, her own relatives receive her with no more gladness than do her former servants. That woman is now in a city home. One girl lived with her nine years, her present helper has been in her employ two and a half years. The latter has saved over two hundred dollars of her wages, under the mistress' advice and direction.

With but one girl, life in the kitchen is lonely at the best, and a chat with the girl about outside affairs, the reading to her of a letter from an absent member of the family, the reading of a humorous poem, these are little things, but they brighten lonely hours and make life a pleasure instead of a burden.

A daughter of the family was traveling in Italy. Her letters were full of interest, and were read to the girl, and she fully appreciated them.

"I tell you what we will have for dinner when she gets home. We'll have fried chicken and ice cream," exclaimed the girl.

She came home in due time, and the girl was allowed to plan the meals for several days. The best the market afforded was upon the table, for she remembered the little messages of love that came to her from over the sea.

"Don't your girls ever get angry at you and you at them?" was asked of this mistress one day.

"Oh, yes; we are human, but when they are angry I wait till the next day," was the reply.

Hence the real secret of good service is love service instead of eye-service—the Golden Rule in common life.—A True Republic.

Caleb West, Master Diver. By F. Hopkinson Smith, author of "Tom Grogan," "Gondola Days," etc. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 1 vol. 12mo, $1.50. Mr. Smith again proves his title to a very high place among American novelists. As in "Tom Grogan," which won an uncommon success, he tells a story of to-day, involving elements and conditions with which his professional experience as an architect makes him perfectly familiar. The story, like all of Mr. Smith's stories, is profoundly alive; all is movement, progress, achievement,—all strong, effective, but not violent or feverish. In short, Caleb West, Master Diver, is a remarkably good story, remarkably told, and admirably illustrated.

Godey's Magazine for June opens with a contribution, by Joseph Dana Miller, on "The Spaniard in Cuba." In this paper Mr. Miller gives a clear, concise and unanswerable statement of the whole Cuban question, reviewing the history of Spain's rule in the island from its beginning to the outbreak of the war with the United States. The article covers the subject so thoroughly that it should be kept for reference by every reader of to-day's history-making events.

Meet for the Master's Use, by F. B. Meyer. A collection of addresses, delivered in different parts of the United States, that were so evidently accompanied by the power and blessing of the Divine Spirit, it has seemed wise to put them in permanent form. Price 15 cents. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 250 La Salle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The events of the past few weeks have brought to light the fact that the words of our national songs are known, entire, by comparatively few people. Believing that these stirring hymns are the very best means of inspiring patriotism in our children, the Patriotic Publishing Company have issued a little book, Gems of American Patriotism, containing the words of all our national songs, the declaration of independence, origin of the American flag, extracts from patriotic addresses, etc., which they hope to place in the hands of every child in the country. The book sells for five cents a single copy, or three cents in lots of one hundred. We heartily commend this collection of "inspiration" to both old and young. Send orders, communications, etc., to Edward Gary, special agent, 347 W. 44th street, New York, N. Y.

Some of New York's "400," written by Adella Octavia Clauston, is meeting with great success. The manuscript of the book won the highest prize offered by the American Humane Society. It had a romantic experience, in that it went to the bottom of the Hudson river in a terrible railroad accident in which many lives were lost, October 24, 1897, but was recovered and made available after considerable time. The story is laid among the "upper ten" of New York city, and is very bright and interesting. Like "Black Beauty" and "Beautiful Joe" it will make its converts by the thousands to the humane treatment of dumb animals. The author was already known to the world through several other books, but by this she will come into the hearts and lives of many more who will think of her as the one who opened to them a new world of kindly sentiment toward the creatures that do not talk, and unto whom we stand as kings and princesses, or as demons and devils. Mr. Geo. T. Angell, president of the American Humane Society, 19 Milk street, Boston, offers the book for ten cents, which is much below cost, that it may have the widest possible circulation.

Now Ready.

July Issue of the Young Crusader.

This is a number of special interest as it contains the picture of Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National superintendent of Sunday-school work, and a fine sketch of this talented woman, by Mrs. Harriet Hobart, former president of Minnesota. The children who study the Sunday-school supplement of The Young Crusader issued quarterly, will appreciate the opportunity of looking upon the face of one who gives to them such valuable information in these lessons. The sketch reveals the mother-love which led to this consecration to the children and their interests.

A fine likeness of the president of the L. T. L. of Washington, D. C., with a brief sketch of his life is one of the attractions of this issue.

Single copy, 5 cts. Price per annum, 25 cts.; fifty copies to one address, 12 cts.; 100 copies to one address, 10 cts. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JULY. "Homes for Homeless Children," by Miss Harriet A. Leavitt, National superintendent of this department. She truly says that "no phase of the social problem is of greater importance than that which concerns the child, as what we do for him touches not only the present, but reaches into the future." The object of this department is "a home for every homeless child and a child for every childless home," and Miss Leavitt tells of work accomplished, and instructs in the proper way for local unions to carry on this blessed and practical philanthropy. The Reading is one of the most interesting we have had for some time, and we hope our women will take this opportunity of informing themselves concerning the work of this department.

JULY BIBLE READING. "A Successful Life," by Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks. How to make the most out of life, is the question discussed. "He accomplished the work God gave him to do." This was the pæan of one of life's victors and contains, it is pointed out, the essence of successful and therefore of happy living. We may learn from Jesus' life how to accomplish the work God gives us to do. The subject—success in life—is one that interests every one whether Christian or not, and the Reading is excellent, not only for W. C. T. U. meetings, but for any kind of devotional service.

The Official Etching.

Those who have seen the beautiful etching of Miss Willard pronounce it a work of art of high grade and especially well adapted for school rooms, college walls, libraries and the drawing-rooms where choice pictures hang.

The photograph selected by the officers of the National W. C. T. U. for this purpose was the celebrated Evangeline portrait. This exquisite picture combined with the soft tones and lifelike effects of the etcher's art has produced a truly ideal portrait of our beloved leader. The etching is printed on Holland paper 20x24 inches. Price $2 postpaid. Send two cents for circular and proof. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple, Chicago.

THERE seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance and carry out the work of your Society than by placing Signal Notes.

BLIND men outnumber blind women two to one.

UPWARD of 10,000,000 American flags have been sold since the blowing up of the Maine.

J. J. BUTLER, the proprietor of one of the large tobacco factories in St. Louis, and a member of the American Tobacco Trust, has given twenty thousand dollars to the Second Presbyterian church of St. Louis.

DR. HENRY MUNROE once said "that alcohol was a poison, but that every year it was getting more difficult to diagnose the effects of it on the brain, because those who had brains were giving up the use of it."

THE Third Presbyterian church, Shanghai, has a book containing pledges against liquor, tobacco and footbinding. The pastor who has already signed his name, has read to the congregation a tract on the evils of alcohol—also an article on the subject from one of the Chinese papers — the aim is to cultivate a sentiment against these evils with the hope of having a church pure and free from them all. Already several members have signed their names.—Woman's Work in the Far East.

MR. JAMES MORTON, a gentleman (says the League Journal) well known in Dundee, has secured from the Duke of Bedford a commanding corner in Russell Square, London, on which he is erecting a large temperance hotel at the cost of twenty-five thousand pounds. The Morton Hotel, which will have one of the most charming positions in the metropolis, will have all the modern equipments of a first-class hotel—passenger lift, electric light throughout, etc. The hotel will be open early in 1899.

AN amusing story is told of one of the guests at the Duchess of Devonshire's great jubilee fancy-dress ball. It relates to the wife of a member of that branch of the aristocracy which Sir Wilfrid Lawson calls "the Beerage." Her ladyship resolved to go to the ball as the Queen of Sheba, but was embarrassed with the variety of costumes the authorities provided. Confiding her difficulty to a friend, her ladyship protested that she really did not know which Sheba she should select. "Of course," said the kindly counsellor, "you will go as Beersheba!" —The Temperance Standard.

"THEY have a very effective way of putting the brakes on inebriates up in Manitoba," said O. A. Bemis, of Minnesota, at the Ebbitt. "When a man has been convicted twice or thrice of drunkenness in the local police courts, he is sentenced to wear a brass collar, which is a plain tip to saloonkeepers that he is a person to whom it is forbidden to sell any intoxicating beverages. No man with this badge of disgrace can get a drink anywhere, for the law is strictly respected. The result is that in many cases an entire cure is effected in the individual. Whenever the authorities think that the collar penalty has been endured long enough the collar comes off and the citizen is at liberty to get a drink."

Brain-Workers Should Use Hosford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. C. H. GOODMAN, St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used it for several years with especially good results in nervous prostration, the result of mental efforts; also in sleepless condition of brain-workers."

RED-LETTER DAY.

FRESH AIR MISSION DAY.—AUGUST 3.

The Birthday of Lady Henry Somerset.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notice.

THE next issue of THE UNION SIGNAL will be August 4.

Notes and Comments.

NO weightier testimony to the value of Sabbath observance as a preservative of physical life and strength has been given to the world than these words spoken by Gladstone into a phonograph as his message to future generations: "I owe my health and vigor through a long and busy life to the Sabbath day with its blessed surcease of toil."

"HAD the single word 'sex' been inserted in the fifteenth amendment, I believe that our nation would be a generation in advance of its present position on the problems of moral and municipal reform." After five years test of the practical workings of woman suffrage, and with every opportunity for fair and impartial judgment, Governor Adams, of Colorado, thus expressed himself in his welcoming speech before the Federation of Woman's Clubs.

TWO more states are added to the honor roll. New Jersey and Iowa in state prohibition convention assembled, declared in no uncertain sound for woman suffrage, and put it in their platforms. New York convention, on the other hand, rejected it by a vote of two to one. Professor Hopkins presented both reports of the New York platform committee, but moved the adoption of the majority report. The minority report, proposing no distinction of sex at the ballot box, was championed by Mr. George Stevenson, of Cornwall.

WE had intended in this issue to close the discussion of Lady Henry Somerset's attitude, all points having been so thoroughly covered in our pages. But just as we go to press a letter is received from two of the leaders of the opposition. As they have heretofore asked no space in THE UNION SIGNAL to express themselves in this matter, we feel it to be nothing more than fair that they should be heard. The communication from Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell will, therefore, appear, together with a short editorial on the subject, in our next issue, August 4, after which we do not expect to go over the ground again.

THE General Federation of Woman's Clubs, assembled in Denver, telegraphed to Speaker Reed a recommendation that Senator Hoar's bill, protecting birds and forbidding the wearing of them, be passed. If the club women—who are in the main society women—say that bird millinery must go, it will go, and the builders of bonnets may as well make up their minds now to dispense with the incongruous and inartistic decorations which have caused such havoc among the song birds. To emancipate herself from the thralldom of Dame Fashion, to refuse submission to her capricious and arbitrary decrees, is one of the prerogatives of the on-coming woman—the "colossal woman," Mrs. Henrotin aptly calls her—who is "to live an applied Christianity in the marts of trade, in the home, the school, the world."

THE annihilation of Cervera's fleet with the loss of but one American is indeed wonderful enough to be designated a "miracle." This victory, coupled with Dewey's brilliant achievement at Manila, will seem to many to attest the righteousness of this war undertaken in the name of freedom. Indeed, the reports of American successes read more like the romances of mythical lore than modern history. A good point was scored by Lyman Abbott for the historical credibility of the Bible, in his address before the alumni of Bangor Theological Seminary on "The Relation of Nature and the Supernatural to the Christian Thought of To-day." "If," he said, "the Old Testament told the story of a naval engagement between the Jewish people and a pagan people, in which all the ships of the latter were absolutely destroyed, and not a single man killed among the Jews, all the skeptics would have scorned the narrative. Every one now believes it—except those who live in Spain." And if the skeptics would have rejected the Dewey story, how much more would they have scouted the story of the remarkable victory of Sampson's fleet under the leadership of Schley.

THROUGHOUT all the years of its existence, the W. C. T. U. has had a record of having "entered every open door," and the luster of that record will surely not be dimmed during the present crisis which is upon us as a nation. "Tell the women that this religion is a religion of patriotism," said our great leader, during those sad days when she tarried on the borderland of the unseen world, and right nobly are her followers proving that they realize all that was meant in that prophetic utterance. The W. C. T. U. is doing all in its power to mitigate the hardships of our boys in camp and to throw about them the safeguards of mother-love. Our first practical expression of sympathy was in March, when from a special fund which had been placed in the hands of the National treasurer for similar purposes, two hundred dollars were sent to relieve the suffering Cubans. Since then, from the same fund, a special appropriation has been sent to Mrs. Thacher, National superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, and soon the balance is to be forwarded to her. Large quantities of literature have also been sent to the various camps. Mrs. Thacher is indefatigable in her efforts, as her several communications to THE UNION SIGNAL manifest. The state unions are in general responding nobly to her plan. The local unions in the various cities near which the troops are mobilized, have opened rooms for their reception, which they may enter for rest at any time, and where plenty of ice water, kind words and temperance leaflets are given them. In addition to this, Washington, D. C., furnishes a free lunch every day to all who care to receive it, and the number increases daily. On Sunday evangelistic services are held, which the soldier boys attend with profound interest. All that prevents this work from widening into one of the greatest and most far-reaching ever yet undertaken by the W. C. T. U., is the lack of funds with which to prosecute it, and with that thought in view we earnestly hope that the official call of the General Officers which appears on page 14, may be carefully read, prayerfully pondered and generously acted upon.

Current Events.

War News of the Week.

Glorious Naval Victory at Santiago—Cervera's Fleet Entirely Destroyed.

OWING to the holiday last week, July 4, the forms of THE UNION SIGNAL were closed before the news of the battle at Santiago had been received.

July 1 the American troops assaulted the Spanish outposts at Santiago, driving the enemy into the city and occupying the Spanish entrenchments. American casualties were about 300 killed and 1,400 men wounded or incapacitated by sickness.

Sunday, July 3, General Shafter demanded a surrender of the city under penalty of bombardment, to begin at ten A. M., July 4. The demand was refused. Monday, at the urgent request of the foreign consuls, General Shafter agreed to a truce until July 5, noon, in order to give time for the removal of women and children from Santiago. The time was afterward extended, as there is a probability of surrender. The American position has been greatly strengthened in the meantime.

Sunday, July 3, Admiral Cervera's fleet made an effort to escape from Santiago Harbor, and was completely destroyed by the American squadron, Admiral Cervera and 1,700 of his men being taken prisoners. The Spanish loss in killed was 360. The American ships were uninjured in the battle and but one man was killed. July 4 the Spanish ship Alphonso XII. was destroyed while trying to run the blockade at Havana.

General Miles sailed for Santiago on July 8, to take personal command of operations there, General Shafter being ill.

Lieutenant Hobson, hero of the Merrimac, and his companions have been exchanged for Spanish prisoners.

President KcKinley issued a call for a general thanksgiving service on Sunday, July 10, citing the victories which, under Providence, have been given to the American arms and urging prayer for peace.

The Temperance Congress.

THURSDAY, June 30, was W. C. T. U. day, the exercises being participated in by a number of our prominent workers. Friday was "Pennsylvania day," with Dr. Swallow, prohibition candidate for governor, as the chief attraction. The congress opened Saturday morning, with Rev. Dr. Silas C. Swallow in the chair. The first topic for discussion was: "That we should seek to prevail upon physicians to cease prescribing alcohol for internal use, except as they would prescribe other poisons." This was followed by intelligent discussion of the subject, the same program being carried out with the other topics of the day, which were: "That we agitate for total abstinence in the officers and men of the army and navy who are placed, not to defend simply a railroad train, but a government;" "That universities and colleges be urged to protect their students by providing clean and anti-liquor surroundings, and that we give our influence to such universities and colleges only as do so provide;" "That we seek to strengthen by systematic efforts all temperance societies in the way of prevailing on all total abstainers to join one or more such societies;" "That systematic efforts be made to teach the industrial and commercial classes to recognize the vital bearing of total abstinence on their respective interests;" "That clergymen be urged to preach systematically, at least once a quarter, on temperance." This subject was concluded by the passage of the following resolution:

That clergymen be requested to preach positively and systematically as often as in their judgment they can thus promote the interests committed to them.

Mary H. Hunt, of the National W. C. T. U., urged total abstinence as a qualification for teachers.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions in accordance with the following recommendations:

1. A protest against the canteen system.
2. A resolution calling upon Congress, that has jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, to see that the act of the special session of 1861 is enforced by the commissioners of the District, or, should it be decided that that law has been rescinded, that Congress immediately re-enact it.
3. A resolution requesting the President, as commander-in-chief, to require of each general commanding a department, that he prohibit by a general order the introduction and sale of intoxicating liquors of any kind within his department and its surroundings, also calling for such an order as that issued by the government in 1862, to examine all packages sent to officers or soldiers within military lines.

On Sunday very impressive memorial services were held for Neal Dow, Frances E. Willard and Mary Towne Burt. Among the prominent speakers were Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Hon. Samuel Dickie and Rev. W. C. Hubbard, of the American Peace Society.

Monday afternoon a monster reception was accorded Mr. and Mrs. John G. Woolley, the occasion being their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, and the tenth anniversary of Mr. Woolley's entrance into the temperance work.

Endeavorers in Session.

THE seventeenth annual convention of the International Society of Christian Endeavor was opened at Nashville, Tenn., July 7, in the presence of an immense throng of people in the Endeavor auditorium on the exposition grounds.

The opening address was made by the president, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, whose subject was fruit bearing.

The annual report of Secretary John Willis Baer included the following statistics:

There are now, within the borders of the United States, 41,222 societies. These figures do not include the Junior, Intermediate and other societies. The total enrollment of world-wide Christian Endeavor is 54,191 societies with an individual membership of more than three and one quarter millions. South Africa is entitled to the banner for the greatest proportionate increase in number of societies. The Junior societies continue to increase rapidly. There are now nearly 14,000 societies in the world. One thousand of these are to be found in foreign lands.

Russia is the only country in the world without a Christian Endeavor Society.

There are 77 mothers' societies, 45 Senior, or graduate societies, 17 societies in the United States army and in volunteers' camps, 119 societies in the United States navy, and on board merchant ships. During the past year 27,686 Juniors have become members of the church. From the Intermediate societies 1,518 have joined their home churches, and 196,550 from the Young People's societies, making a total reinforcement of church membership during the year amounting to 225,754.

An Ocean Disaster.

FIVE hundred and fifty lives were lost on July 4 by the sinking of the French steamship, La Bourgogne, in collision with the English vessel, Cromartyshire, off Sable Island, N. F. In the list of 164 persons saved, there was only one woman. Not one of the first-cabin passengers was rescued, every means of safety being appropriated by the crew and steerage passengers, chiefly Italians, who fought like maniacs for the boats, using knives upon helpless women and children. The officers stood by their posts bravely, and went down with the ship.

The accident occurred in a thick fog, which made the work of rescue difficult, and did not lift until after the La Bourgogne went down. The Cromartyshire, though badly damaged, remained in the vicinity all day, picking up all who had managed to keep afloat. She was towed into the port of Halifax, N. S., by the Allen line steamship, Grecian.

Temperance.

THE police judge of Jacksonville, Fla., gives notice that he will inflict the full penalty on violaters of the Sunday liquor selling law.

HON. SAMUEL DICKIE, of Michigan, will occupy the pulpit of Western Avenue M. E. church, corner Monroe street, Chicago, Sunday morning, July 17. His subject is, "The Christian's Attitude toward the Liquor Traffic."

THE prohibitionists of Alabama are pushing an aggressive campaign. A campaign fund of $2,000 is being raised by the state committee.

THE grand jury of a recent term of court in Duluth, Minn., denounced the mayor and common council of that city for allowing saloons to violate the law.

THE prohibitionists of Virginia are expecting to begin on August 1, the publication of a state prohibition paper. J. L. Gravely, of Danville, is in charge of the enterprise.

THE statement is made that alcoholic candy is largely sold in Manchester and other English towns. It is said to be imported from Germany, and an analyst declares that it contains proportionately as much alcohol as does beer.

GENERAL MILES, commanding the army, has issued a general order, in which, among other things, he says:

The history of other armies has demonstrated that in a hot climate abstinence from the use of intoxicating drink is essential to continued health and efficiency. Commanding officers of all grades and officers of the medical staff are enjoined to restrict or to entirely prohibit the sale of such beverages if the welfare of the troops or the interests of the service require such action.

The Champion (liquor organ) makes the following statement: "Legal authorities at Washington have decided that the old statutes prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to soldiers can not be enforced, and half a dozen saloonkeepers who were in the toils of the police for said violation are now rejoicing. A general order has been issued to the saloonkeepers by the police to the effect that they may sell drinks to the soldiers."

ANOTHER case of malicious mischief has come to light on the East Side, New York city, where so-called brandy biscuits have been sold to the school children. One boy of eight was sent to Bellevue, suffering from acute alcoholism from eating a large quantity of these biscuits. They contain a few drops of grain alcohol, the effect of which is at once apparent on a child, from the flushed cheeks, high pulses and bright eyes. The alcohol is sweet and soon creates a great craving. The health commissioners have sent to the board of education a communication, detailing the facts, and the board, together with the commissioners and the Gerry Society, will at once take steps to suppress the traffic.—The School Journal.

At Home.

CONGRESS adjourned sine die on July 8, with the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

A TORNADO at Hampton Beach, N. H., on July 5, resulted in the loss of nine lives, while many were wounded. Some were drowned in the bay, while others were killed by falling buildings.

THE National Educational Association has been in annual session at Washington, D. C., the past week, with a large attendance. Interest has centered chiefly in the determined effort of the grade teachers to secure official recognition, a movement not decided at this writing.

CHICAGO suffered from a dearth of news from July 1 to 6, there being no issue of the daily papers during that time, owing to a strike on the part of the stereotypers. New men were secured, and the papers appeared with four pages; they will be increased in size as fast as possible.

THE annexation of the Hawaiian Islands is finally an accomplished fact, the House resolution having been adopted by the Senate without amendment, on July 6, by a vote of 42 to 21. President McKinley signed the bill and a ship has been ordered to Honolulu to hoist the stars and stripes over the new territory.

THE ruling of Revenue Commissioner Scott is that express and transportation companies must affix the revenue stamps to bills of lading issued by them, not the shippers, as they have contended. The express companies' interpretation of the law was that it was the manifest intention of the act to impose this tax upon the shipping public, by whom it would hardly be felt, rather than to center it upon a few corporations, whose profits would thereby, it is claimed, be largely, if not entirely, swept away.

Victors.

BY LUCY HALL WASHINGTON.

LIFE'S purposes, plans, and endeavors,
Subservient are to God's will;
Sometimes He commands to "go forward!"
Sometimes we are bidden "be still."

To march, dare and do, and to conquer,
May fame, wealth and glory command;
Yet loyal are they who obey Him,
And patiently lie in His hand.

War victors are honored by nations,
Yet all that true homage can yield
The conqueror owes to the fallen,
Laid low in the dust on the field.

Though banners wave proudly before him,
And peans of praise rend the air,
Pale victims are sleeping in silence
Who justly the tribute should share.

The world will weave crowns for its heroes,
And the triumph of conquest is sweet;
Yet victors are they who are valiant,
And brave in the face of defeat.

In dying, our Lord became victor
O'er death and the gloom of the grave;
And won through the cross in the conflict,
A life-giving power to save.

The victor o'er life and its trials,
Whate'er he may win of renown,
Must follow command of the Master,
And pass from the cross to the crown.

Jimsey Craiglaw's Baby.

In Two Chapters.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

CHAPTER II.

THE child was nearly three years old, and not once had Jimsey fallen, and in his very confidence in himself lay the opportunity of his enemies. He did not dream that appetite, so long held in with bit and bridle, could run away with his strength of purpose, and he became more careless than he had been in shunning the saloon.

Mary, too, had come to have such confidence in his strength, that when he proposed to take the child with him on a trip to town, she consented, little dreaming of danger.

The river was his highway, and his trusty boat his traveling carriage on this occasion, and Mary watched them from the cabin, her handkerchief fluttering a farewell until the boat shot around the bend which hid them from her sight.

The day passed, even more quickly than she had thought possible in her first loneliness, and at the hour when she might expect them home her eyes began to turn wistfully toward the point where the boat would appear. An hour passed before she became seriously uneasy, then another, and she was almost wild with her anxiety.

The table was set for an early tea, for Jimsey and the boy would be hungry after their long row up stream, and she had Jimsey's favorite cake ready for cutting, and peach preserves to go with the warm biscuits he was so fond of. She had thought so tenderly and proudly all day of his kindness to her and the child, and she had thanked God over and over again for the nobility of character which was peeping out from day to day from beneath his rough exterior. Perhaps these thoughts were God-given as a preparation for the crisis which was approaching.

It was almost sundown before Mary bethought herself of seeking help. A sense of impending disaster hung over her like a pall, and throwing a shawl over her head she sped like a deer up to the next cabin, half a mile away, where Matt Kelsey lived.

"Sho now, sho, you needn't be alarmed, little woman," Matt said, with rough sympathy. "Jimsey knows the river like a book," (in his own heart a fear of something more deadly than water was forming) "but we'll take my boat and row down a piece if it'll ease your mind. More'n like, though, we'll find 'im waitin' fer us with the kid."

But the cabin was empty and there was no boat, drawn up at the little landing as Matt's boat shot down, propelled by four oars, for Mary could not sit idle. Her white face had on it that drawn, tense look that had been on it once before in her married life, and her every thought was a prayer of agony.

They had gone around the bend where her quick eye could sweep a mile's length of the swift flowing river, before she saw the boat, out of the current, and in the shelter of a little cove.

"Matt," she gasped, "he is there, but O God, where is the child?"

"Hold easy, ma'am, hold easy," cried Matt, when it seemed as if she would jump from the boat into the water in her strong excitement. "We'll get there in a jiffy. Jimsey has got a jag on, I'm afeard."

It was but too evident as they drew near. He sat with one oar in his limp hand, helplessly rowing on one side without making a stroke of headway. He was in the stupid stage of his drunkenness, and he stared heavily at Mary as the boat shot alongside. The little boy lay in the bottom of the boat, his hat gone, his pretty, soft hair dabbled with blood, his clothes wet and soiled.

"What have you done to my boy?" screamed Mary, her mother-love transforming her, for the moment, to the likeness of a tigress defending her young.

"He threw his hat away," muttered Jimsey, stupidly.

"While you have thrown away home, honor and love," shrieked Mary, beside herself with fear and horror.

Matt reached over and lifted the child, laying him in his mother's arms. An ugly gash on his forehead told of some cruel violence done him in his father's first maniacal fury, and Mary clasped the little form to her breast with a look of agony.

"Home, home, quick!" she said to Matt.

"Shall I tow him along?" Matt asked, instinctively reaching for the rope at the end of Jimsey's boat.

"No, no, I never want to see his face again. He has killed my child."

Matt turned the boat without a word, but before they reached the bend he looked back. Jimsey had sunk down in the boat, and was already asleep, one arm thrown over the side, his hand dragging in the water.

"He'll keep till I can get back to 'im," muttered Matt to himself, "but it's all up weth him and the little woman, I'm afeard."

Mary heard nothing, saw nothing but that little white face, the traces of tears still upon it, which was drawn close to her beating heart.

"Hurry, Matt, oh, for heaven's sake, hurry!" It was the only word she spoke on the way home, and the boat shot through the water like a bird, and Matt helped her out at the little landing.

"Shall I go for a doctor?"

"No, not yet. His heart beats, and he still breathes." Her tones were sharp and strained with anxiety, and she ran up the slope to the cabin like a wild thing, leaving Matt to secure the boat.

No woman could have been more tender than rough Matt Kelsey in the hours that followed, hours in which it seemed as if the little life was too feeble to survive the shock it had received, and when at last he looked up and said, "mamma," with a faint semblance of his old smile, Mary sank down by his side almost fainting with joy.

Matt stole out, leaving her upon her knees. It was a bright moonlight night, and the stillness and the beauty of it was almost oppressive as he bared his head to the dewy glory.

A gaunt form loomed up before him as he was going down to the river bank.

"Is it you, Jimsey?"

"Matt! For God's sake, tell me, where is the child?"

"Safe, Jimsey, in his little bed, but it has been a hard struggle for life with him. What did you do to him, man?"

"I don't know, Matt, before God I don't." The man was trembling as if in an ague fit. "I have some sort o' remembrance of his little hat floating away on the water and of thinking that he had thrown it in."

"You must a-struck him with the oar, Jimsey. He's but just come to."

"Oh, my God!" The miserable man hid his face in his trembling hands. "Matt, Mary knows I'd die ruther than hurt a hair of his precious head, in my right mind."

"Yes, she knows it."

"Is she going, Matt?"

"I'm afeard she is, Jimsey."

The gaunt form dropped down to the dewy sward, and shook with sobs of anguish, while Matt looked on pityingly.

Mary in the cabin had risen from her knees as the child dropped off into natural slumber, and going to the little window she drew the curtain and looked out into the moonlight, a great wave of solemn joy surging over her heart. She saw the two men talking in the moonlight, and for the first time in that awful night a thought of pity for the father of her child stole into her heart.

The thoughts of the day, when his kindness to her and his great love for the child had been uppermost in her mind, came back to her, and she spoke his name to herself with an accent of pity.

"He will be so lonely without us," she said, for her heart had hardened around her set purpose during these long hours of agony.

Never again should her child's life be jeopardized by the insane fury of a drunken father. She saw him drop on the sward, and her love for him as a wife surged in upon her like a flood.

Whatever he had done he was her husband, kind and tender in his strength, erring only in his weakness, and Mary was a woman, and throwing her shawl over her head, she stole out into the moonlight.

She heard his sobs, great heart-broken convulsions of a strong, loving nature, and she went to him, putting her hand on his shoulder.

"Poor Jimsey," she said, her voice full of sadness.

"How can you speak to me, Mary?" he said, chokingly, as soon as he could control his voice. "You'd orter hate me forever, you and the little un."

"No, husband, not that," she said sadly, "but you must see, Jimsey, that it isn't safe for us to stay."

"Yes, Mary, you and the child must stay," he cried eagerly; "I'll go away and never see your faces again ef you'll stay. I'll work fer you, Mary, work like a slave fer you and the child. I won't go fer to make any promises 'bout t'other, Mary, fer I can sense that 'twouldn't be of no use, but ef there be a God that hears and helps weak men, I've tasted my last drop of Satan's brewing. I've larnt a lesson that will last me a lifetime, I reckon, and I shall never face temptation alone again. May I see the child afore I go, Mary?"

Mary was weeping bitterly. She had not realized how the years had knit her soul to that of this man trembling before her in bitter humiliation of soul.

"Yes, Jimsey, he is asleep." She turned and went on before, the two men following.

The little face was very pale, and the handkerchief bound over the wound made him look still more ghastly as Jimsey stood beside the bed. All the father awoke in him at the pitiful sight of his little child struck down by his own hand.

"God knows I'd a-cut my hand off sooner than let it harm him, if I'd a-known," he sobbed. "But I'll go, Mary. I ain't worthy to stay."

The child stirred uneasily. "Oh, don't, papa," he murmured, a look of pain crossing his pale face. Then his eyes opened, a look of recognition coming into them. "My hat blewed off, it did truly, papa," he said, his mind going back to the accusation which had grieved his infant heart before the blow.

"Yes, darlin', papa knows," Jimsey replied miserably. "Papa is going away where he can't hurt his precious little boy any more."

He took the little limp hand in his, and bent over for a parting kiss, but the little arms clung around his neck entreatingly.

"Don't go, papa. Boy loves his papa, he does." But Jimsey unclasped the clinging arms gently.

"Jest hear 'im, Mary," he said chokingly. "Little forgivin' angel." But Mary's arms were creeping up where those of the child had been, and her face, wet with tears, nestled close to his as she whispered, "Don't go, Jimsey. I'll forgive and trust once more."

Clinton, Iowa.

Who is Responsible?

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

"CRAZED by drink, patrol officer Thomas Speer made a murderous assault upon his wife, and believing that he had killed her, shot himself through the brains and died almost instantly."

That is the first sentence in a city newspaper report of a double tragedy. A little home, which might have been beautiful with the beauty of a family life, is horrid with the blood of a suicide, a murderer.

"He had been drinking heavily," "Whenever he got any liquor, it seemed to make him crazy," said the wife, lying in the hospital ward after that terrible hour. He had been drinking heavily, yet the saloon-keeper sold him more drink to carry home. Friends called at the house, and again and again the eight-year-old boy was sent to the saloon for beer, that the chums might drink, while the housewife washed! There was no reason why men should not have a good time, even if women must toil. But, at last, the housewife objected to the frequent errands to the saloon, and refused to give him money. "I'll make you mind or I'll kill you!" With fiendish forethought he had locked the door, and the maniac with his pistol is master of the hour!

"Driven crazy by drink!" Who sold him the drink? I have asked a useless question. There are 10,501 saloons in the state of Ohio, and back of them is the legislature of Ohio and the congress of the United States collecting special taxes for revenue for provision against evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating drink. Back of them is the Saloonkeepers' Association and the Ohio Saloon League and two great political organizations.

Were this the first saloon tragedy enacted in a home, were Thomas Speer the first suicide crazed by whisky, the whole system of police and court would be roused to detect the villain who sold the crazing fluid. But Thomas Speer, "dying suddenly," as the newspapers say, is only one of many men whose hands, nerved by drink, are turned in murder upon themselves, and Grace Speer is only one of thousands of wives tortured, terrorized, by drunken tyrants, who wreck women's lives in the name of law.

Drunkenness causes more insanity than any other physical cause whatever, and yet, in the state of Ohio, where saloons are taxed $350 per annum to provide against evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating drink, the hospitals for the insane receive no appropriation whatever for the treatment of patients whose insanity is attributable to drunkenness, while more than $1,800,000 is appropriated for state and municipal revenue, and the hospitals themselves spend thousands of dollars for wine, beer and liquors!

Wallace Speer, the eight-year-old boy, orphaned by this double tragedy, is the child of the commonwealth. He lives in a community infested with 1,997 saloons, in a state black with 10,501 saloons, in a nation which compromises with the dramshop, the brewery, the distillery, for sake of revenue! For him there is no recourse at law, no redress. His home has been wrecked by the drink and his life bereft of fatherly care just when he needs a father's guiding grace of strength and knowledge.

Wallace Speer, the protégé of the commonwealth, is only sport for the saloon. Saloonkeepers will sell him beer or whisky if he have the money. Saloon-keepers will mock his sorrow with sneer at his father's lack of power to control himself. And the state, the commonwealth, the nation, will say: "Your father should have controlled his appetite; he should have been temperate; the saloon-keeper sold him that which he desired and paid for. It is the business of a saloon-keeper to sell intoxicants, not to give instruction in temperance. If a man, crazed by drink, kills his wife, kills himself, destroys your home, there is really nothing to be done. The state has power to prohibit the retail traffic in intoxicating drinks, but it really can not exercise its power. It can destroy a still if the distiller does not pay his tax, or it can close a saloon if the saloon-keeper does not pay his license, but it cannot close a saloon because it is a center of murder, pauperism, insanity, corruption, degradation, lawlessness, misery, terror!"

Does a saloon-keeper in Cincinnati remember with remorse that he sold Thomas Speer his last drinks, and that a grave in Wesleyan cemetery marks the burial of a suicide, a murderer? Does he care? Does the man who votes to license the saloon care?

How to Unite Friends of Temperance.

BY FRANK FOXCROFT.

Editor of the Boston Journal.

[Extracts from a paper read at the Triennial National Congregational Council at Portland, Ore.]

TO unite the moral forces in any community for practical work against the saloons it is essential, first of all, that there shall be a real subordination of all side issues. If the churches take the initiative, as they ought, it must be without any manifestation of the denominational spirit. The churches should lead in all moral reforms and should have an active part in all movements looking to better government, but it must be without any suspicion of an attempt to promote denominational or personal interests. More than one promising reform movement has gone to wreck because some well known seeker after notoriety contrived to put himself at the head of it, or because some church organization distinguished for its ingenuity in advertising was too prominent at the launching. A real union of churches implies a union of all churches, non-evangelical as well as evangelical, Catholic as well as Protestant. If all the moral forces are to be brought together, there must be room on the common platform for the Catholic priest and the Jewish rabbi as well as for Protestant pastors of every name. And why not? The thing to be combated is the common foe of all churches and of all moral movements. Surely it is poor strategy to fight it with divided forces.

In most instances it will be found best to take first the law as it stands, whatever imperfections it may have, and see what can be done under it before agitating for something more stringent. The laws of the several states which deal with the regulation of the liquor traffic fall into three general groups—prohibitory laws, which wholly forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors for use as a beverage; general license laws, which impose certain restrictions, more or less rigorous, but essentially uniform throughout the state; and local option laws, which submit to the voters of a town, county or district the whole question of licensing the sale of liquor within their limits. Under the first-mentioned system, that of absolute prohibition, whether by law or by constitutional provision, the first end in view in any organization of moral forces against the saloon will be the thorough and impartial enforcement of the law. Often anti-saloon workers will find their hardest work cut out for them in communities in which, theoretically, the saloon does not exist. Under the prohibitory system, there is a strong, persistent and often an organized pressure on the side of how-not-to-do-it. The moral forces of the community must organize to bring a stronger counteracting pressure on the side of how-to-do-it. Derelict officers of the law care very little for prayer-meetings, or temperance addresses or edifying resolutions at local or county conventions. They need to know that if there is a "saloon vote" which will be cast remorselessly against an officer who antagonizes the saloons, there is also an anti-saloon vote, equally resolute and more formidable, which will make his tenure of office very precarious for an officer who does not do his duty. In extreme cases, it may be wise to form a Law and Order League, to undertake prosecutions on its own account and shake up the offenders against the law by bringing to bear upon them a force which can neither be bullied nor bribed.

. . . . . .

In the second class of communities, those which are under a general license system, anti-saloon work will have two ends in view. It will first of all try to secure a more rigorous enforcement of the restrictions of the existing law, as to selling on Sunday, selling to minors or to drunkards, selling after the prescribed hours, and the like. It will press for a gradual stiffening of the law, as experience shows what its weakest points are. It is better, for example, that saloons shall close at a fixed hour than that they shall keep open all night; it is better that they shall be shut up on Sunday even though the law permits them to be open six days in the week; it is better that saloonkeepers shall be punished if they sell to children or to persons already intoxicated than that they be allowed to sell without restraint to every one. If circumstances do not allow us to exterminate the saloons, it is something to harry them. Moreover, all such work is educational to the community. It opens the eyes of the public to the fact that the respectable, law-abiding saloonkeeper is a myth; and that, however moderate and reasonable the restrictions which society puts upon the liquor traffic, they will be disregarded; and that this exhibition of the prevailing lawlessness which characterizes the business prepares public sentiment for more rigorous legislation.

There remains to be considered the third class of communities living under some form of local option, which submits to the voters under certain conditions the question whether saloons shall be authorized. Where the system results in a vote against license, we have ideal conditions for driving out the saloons, because the same voters who declare they will not tolerate the saloons elect the officers with whom rests the responsibility of enforcing that declaration. Under the local option system the churches, if they are ready to undertake to organize the moral forces of the community, have a twofold duty; first to secure a vote against the saloons, and secondly, to promote a thorough enforcement of the local prohibition thus secured.

For twelve successive years the voters of Cambridge, Mass., have declared against the saloons. No-license has been well enforced, and the good results of the system are so apparent that hundreds of voters who formerly voted in favor of license, now vote regularly on the other side. No differences of race, religion, politics or social position have ever been regarded. No questions of local office or politics have been permitted to divide its forces. It has kept the single cause steadily in view. It won its first victory by an appeal to fair play. It argued that the city had made full trial of the license system, and had found out all which that system had to give, and that it was only reasonable to try no-license, if only as an experiment. The no-license committee has carried on its work like other campaign committees. It spends from twelve to fifteen hundred dollars in each campaign, pays its bills as it goes, and has always carried over a balance for the opening of the next campaign. It prints a campaign paper, which is sent to all the voters. It makes a thorough house-to-house canvass; it issues appeals to voters, and a special summons to those who failed to vote the preceding year. It naturalizes voters, when necessary, and looks after the registration of no-license voters. It arranges for rallies and speakers. It sends every no-license voter, the day before election, a card notifying him where he is to vote and the hours through which the polls are open. Election day it mans all the voting places with men to check the names of voters as they vote, and others to hunt up delinquents with carriages, and in the intervals between elections, it keeps up its organization for the purpose of keeping an eye on the enforcement of the law, and communicating with the authorities when occasion arises.

The good results of the working of the no-license system are material as well as social and moral. The city has grown so rapidly in the value of its taxable property that the extra amount raised by taxation by reason of this increase is about four times the amount which could be realized from license fees, if the saloons were voted back. Yet the rate of taxation per thousand dollars has actually averaged lower during the no-license years than in the years when the city treasury was supposed to be enriched by the receipts from the sale of licenses. On the hard material basis therefore of dollars and cents, it has proved to be more profitable to refuse the license money than to take it. The rate of increase in Cambridge has been almost twice as large in the no-license years as during the license period, and the number of new houses built annually had doubled. The net increase in the savings bank deposits is about four times as large as in the license years, and it is heaviest in the parts of the city where the workingmen chiefly live.

Cambridge was able two years ago to give the world a spectacle of a city of eighty-five thousand people making holiday and from sunrise to sunset, from the beginning to the end of the line, not a drunken man anywhere in sight. There were only six arrests for drunkenness in twenty-four hours, and of those, five were of men who came over the bridges drunk from Boston.

Correspondence.

The First Day at the National Temperance Congress.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The first session of the Temperance Congress at Prohibition Park, N. J., was called to order Friday morning by Dr. I. K. Funk, who spoke briefly of the purposes of the gathering and the work it had to do.

"The Drink Evil and the Negroes of the South," was the first topic taken up for discussion. Miss Douglass read a most interesting paper on the subject. She saw three very grave obstacles in the way of temperance effort and the social advancement of the ignorant blacks of the South; the licensing of the corner groceries; an illiterate and immoral ministry; and the "order system," by which the laborer receives as wages orders upon certain stores, often those of his employer, which he is compelled to accept. She called upon temperance workers and American manhood and womanhood to insist that the citizenship of all citizens should be held sacred and inviolate. The negro, she concluded, is becoming an integral part of civilization, and in saving them the people of this country would save themselves.

Miss Douglass' address was ably discussed by Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, who declared that one of the greatest obstacles to temperance work lies in the 1,252,484 negro voters of the South, who are almost unanimously for the saloon. Miss Kearney spoke very feelingly of the reunited North and South, beneath the folds of "Old Glory," as the common enemy of Spain.

"That we Secure Prohibition by Petition," was the topic next considered. Mr. Dinwiddie, secretary of the congress, first spoke upon the subject. The chief difficulty in securing prohibition by petition is in securing the signatures of business men. The business interests represented by the saloons are enormous, and all their influence can be directed against one individual who antagonizes them. The best method for insuring prohibition is to have printed at the bottom of the Australian ballot the question: Shall the sale of intoxicating beverages be prohibited? with the answers, "Yes" and "No;" and at stated intervals the people should be allowed to vote upon this question, and if a majority of any town or county vote against the saloon, that verdict should be mandatory on the authorities.

The third topic taken up for discussion was as follows:

That we agitate for total abstinence as a qualification of teachers in our public and other schools, as it is rapidly becoming a qualification of engineers and others who handle complicated machinery, there being found nowhere more complicated workmanship than that of the immortal human minds and hearts which are placed within the training of teachers. And to this end temperance hygiene should be taught in normal schools.

Miss Julia Colman, of the National Temperance Society, and secretary of the New York W. C. T. U., told how the work of winning teachers to the cause of total abstinence had been successfully carried on in the city of New York, under the direction of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. state paper, discussing the topic, said that there should be a law compelling teachers to be total abstainers for the protection of society.

"I know one teacher," said Mr. James, secretary of the National Temperance Union, "who habitually gets drunk once a week, and lady teachers who drink. This question should be agitated until none such could hold positions."

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, acting president of the New York state W. C. T. U., moved that the wording of the topic be so changed that it should recommend scientific, anti-narcotic and anti-alcoholic instruction in the teachers' institutes. She considered this very necessary, and her suggestion was adopted by the congress.

The congress reconvened at two o'clock. President Bacon called upon Rev. Dr. Mead to preside and Dr. Dunn offered prayer.

"That we Seek to Make Clear the Next Legal Steps to be Taken," was the first topic for discussion. Hon. E. D. Nichols, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., was the first speaker. The liquor traffic, he said, was an insult to God, and no human judiciary had a right to recognize a human law that legalized it, as all human law is subservient to the divine law and the law of reason.

Mr. Coleridge Hart, of Brooklyn, proposed a progressive prohibitory system by which each school district should declare itself for or against prohibition, and when a majority of these districts in a county shall so declare, the saloons should be prohibited in that county.

At this juncture Dr. Funk introduced Bishop Fitzgerald, of the Methodist Episcopal church. The bishop said that he had only found it possible at the last moment to attend the congress, owing to the press of other duties.

The next topic discussed was:

That the millions of children in the Sunday-schools should be strongly and systematically fortified against the drink habit by moral and spiritual teaching, as they are now beginning to be fortified in the public schools by physiological and hygienic teaching.

Mrs. Sarah R. Morris, of West Brighton, said she could suggest no better methods than those that had been tested and tried by the W. C. T. U. for years, including the incorporation of temperance lessons in the Sunday-school lessons, the distribution of temperance literature, the inducing of children to sign temperance pledges, and the holding of Sunday-school rallies.

Mrs. Boole read a letter from Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, of St. Paul, offering a resolution on the subject which was adopted.

Samuel Dickie, chairman of the National Prohibition executive committee, and ex-mayor of Albion, Mich., was the first delegate to speak on the subject of partisan and non-partisan prohibition work.

He said he believed in all kinds of temperance work, but he believed most sincerely in absolute prohibition with a prohibition party behind it.

A VISITOR AT THE CONGRESS.

Night Scenes in a Great City.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In a certain city on a recent night, some white-ribboners accepted an invitation to see something of the dark side of the life of the city in which they were working. Considerate officers who were their escort shielded them, they afterward learned, from sights too terrible for their eyes to behold.

A police station only a short distance from temperance headquarters was reached about eleven o'clock, when the nightly crop of drunks, disorderlies, street walkers and other criminals was being harvested and stored away in narrow cell confines. Among others was a girl known in the principal cities of the nation as a hardened criminal. This seemed difficult to believe as we stood chatting with the simply dressed, brown-eyed girl in a sailor hat. "I never know of a person like you who makes a success of wrong-doing, but I long to see that one's talent turned into right ways, for I know success would follow. Don't you sometimes in your better moments long for a right life? Don't you grow very weary?" We pressed close to the side of this girl as we spoke. Her reply was in subdued voice which had in it a note of heartbreak. "Oh, yes, I am tired, so tired of it all, but what am I to do?" "We are your friends." Only time for a hurried word of where to come, if she would, for help, before the officers hurried her and her gaily dressed companions away.

Out into the night air we went, leaving behind us the maudlin, raving, singing, swearing and snoring inmates of the station—left them to the bluecoats, the kind matron and the dispensers of justice.

The sound of music attracted us to one of the many saloons open contrary to law (it was after midnight) and we went in. After listening awhile to the music, the singer of our company sat down at the piano and sang most effectively a touching song. It was suggested that one of us speak to the men and women, most of whom were from Italy. This saloon was kept by a good-natured Italian, who seemed to cordially welcome us. One of our number said, "We are friends of you men and women and we have come to see you. You people have lived in beautiful warm Italy, but now you live in America. You want now to be Americans and to love the American flag. If you had wished to remain Italians and to do as people do in Italy, you would have staid there, you would never have come to America. We very much need your help to make this the very best country in all the world and we believe you will give us this help. Now we have visited you, we hope you will return our visit." A pressing invitation was then given to a gathering to be held shortly at the temperance headquarters. Before we got away an offer was made of the services of a fine Italian band to play at some of the meetings at "our house." We accepted the offer most cordially, and could hardly break away from the kind-hearted people who had given us so hearty a welcome. In this and other places we visited we simply endeavored to find common footing with the people who know no better way than the saloon way.

One saloon visited was owned by a city alderman. Permission to speak was denied by the busy bartender who vigorously asserted, while serving immense schooners of beer, that no religious doings were wanted about their place, and that they were doing a strictly legitimate business. It was then nearly two o'clock in the morning. An uncontrollable desire seized me to speak to the typical drunkards who were crowding the place. We quietly remarked to some of the men as we passed out that if they wanted to hear what we had to say they might come outside. They started, and in about one minute the saloon was deserted and the sidewalk held a motley crowd which was addressed briefly, being, however, somewhat disturbed by the partially sobered young man in his stocking feet, who was roundly cursing the place where they would steal a man's shoes from off his feet when he laid down to rest. The drunkards said they would come down to temperance headquarters to hear the singing. One of the party of visitors is a reader, and our astonishment was great when one of the men asked her if she would recite a certain temperance selection. She promised to give this and others for their special benefit when they came to our meeting.

It was pitiful to see the poor stranded pieces of human wreckage, many of whom had no place to go. As we left several followed after us with special tales of woe. The clock was on the stroke of three when we left the scenes of the evening's experiences.

A WHITE-RIBBON WORKER.

Not More but Better People.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—We are getting tired of the query, "Which is the more important, the life of a baby or the lives of a dozen guinea-pigs?" yet as it is asked so often, perhaps it may be well to give it some attention.

At first sight, this question does not present any apparent difficulties in the way of an answer; but when the thoughtful student begins to look deeper into the subject, he finds himself confronted instantly by such queries as these: How are the lives of this dozen of guinea-pigs disposed of? Are they put to death in a painless manner, without being aware of any suffering, or are they subjected to the tortures of a ravaging disease, which makes death a thousandfold more terrible than it would naturally be? And are we sure that the sacrifice of even countless guinea-pigs would actually save a baby's life?

These are a few of the many questions which suggest themselves to the mind of the thinker who starts out to answer that question, which seemed at first so simple.

Going still deeper, we would be led to consider the subject from the standpoint of the race, rather than the individual, and in the light of the Darwinian theory of the "survival of the fittest," one is inclined to answer the, by this time, perplexing question, decidedly in the negative. It is not that there should be more people in the world, but that there should be better people. In this case it is quality rather than quantity which is desirable; not number, but character, not individuals, but mentalities. Man was not

"Placed on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise and rudely great," simply that he should avoid disease, no matter what suffering he inflicted upon others in so doing, and no matter what became of the immortal part of him in the meanwhile. The sole object of man's existence is not to people the earth with his own kind, irrespective of morality and justice.

Life is growth and development; progress is the gradual rounding out of character, which is finally, in the individual, to be wholly symmetrical in its proportions. Whatever hinders that development, whatever keeps back that progression, is intrinsically wrong, and that the torture of living animals (whether by the experimentation involved in initial research, or by the present system of toxic inoculation for the so-called immunization from certain diseases to which human flesh is heir), retards rather than advances the evolution of man towards that state of moral excellence which is to be his ultimate condition, is a fact which no true metaphysician would gainsay.

It is indeed true that we of the present day are very far off from that perfection of civilization to which we aspire, but in the interim what is to be accomplished must be done little by little, the ladder of progress must be ascended a step at a time, otherwise we should lose our footing entirely and fall headlong to the bottom. In the real Utopia the killing of animals for food will be thought of by the Utopians only as a relic of the barbarism of their remote ancestors; but in our own age we cannot expect to work a complete revolution in dietetic science, before we have succeeded in emancipating the lower creation from the slavery in which man now binds it. While men are taught that they are absolute lords over creation, and that everything which is in the earth and air and sea is theirs to do with as they like, so long will vivisection flourish and new discoveries in bacterial science be hailed with delight; but when once man has succeeded in getting rid of his superfluous egoism, he will be enabled to see himself in his true relation to the other species. Then, and then only, shall we be fully cognizant of the divine cosmos which runs through all the universe, and then we shall realize that which now we fail so utterly to comprehend—that the dozen guinea-pigs have just as much right to be in the world as has the one baby.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am just home from New Brunswick, where I have been to redeem a promise made before I journeyed afar, viz., to attend the first Provincial convention after my return. It was held in Woodstock, which was at its best in the full glory of June foliage and flower. Doubtless you will receive reports and I need only say it was a most enjoyable occasion every way. The dear Chieftain's face looked out upon us and seemed beckoning us to heights beyond, and a deep spiritual tone was manifest, even in the press of business or divergence of opinion. "Snap Shots from Round-the-World Mission" was well received and repeated by invitation in several places. In the three weeks one new union was started, many pledges taken and new members gained, with enthusiasm evoked all along the way. Never did our work seem more like a sacred trust, demanding our very best in life and effort. Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, chanced to be in Moncton at the time of my visit, and kindly took part in two of my services. In one he paid a beautiful tribute to Miss Willard, and at the other told how he came to be a total abstainer. The genial Bishop made a fine impression all through the Province.

I often long to share with others the letters from far-off lands, telling of God's gracious care for the seed sown, and the abiding joy in the work so providentially begun. Personally, I cannot be too glad that I yielded to the urgency of our dear leader, and made the trip as her representative during that last eventful year of her life.

A Colonial sister writes: "Through our great loss, your visit assumes a peculiar sacredness, because we feel it was the expression of her loving interest in our work, and seems a parting gift to us. God help us to be true to the teachings given." My Port Said union is a continual joy. The membership has more than doubled, and inquiries come for fifty badges for men and one hundred for the children. The native women recite the Crusade Psalm, and unexpected openings come for work in various ways. I am more than thankful that God answered my prayer for two young men, by giving these two girls, who with wonderful power of adapting themselves to surroundings and consecrated toil, are doing marvelous service. They greatly need help for printing in Arabic and to secure some of the real necessaries of life. They seem to take all personal deprivations joyfully, but long for such helps as would make their work more effective. A little financial aid there and in Jerusalem would mean strong foundations for the future, and would give back an hundredfold in results. May the Lord give some one what the Friends call "a concern of mind" on the subject. I have accepted an invitation to return to England in October, and if God opens the way, shall revisit Egypt, Palestine and Syria in the spring. At the noon hour let us specially remember our distant workers in these new fields. Think what it means! Thousands of prayers offered in faith! Well might our unnumbered host "laugh at impossibilities and cry, 'It shall be done.'" Difficulties yield to the mighty solvents of faith and prayer, and obstacles vanish before the spiritual dynamics furnished those who wait upon the Lord. Scores of letters received this week from "round the world" pledge undivided allegiance to our World's officers and work. Let no one grow discouraged or lose one bit of heart or hope.

Yours, "For God and Home and Every Land,"
(MRS.) J. K. BARNEY.

Raise the Standard of Feminine Intelligence.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The suggestion made by Lucinda B. Chandler, in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 23, that women should study at home, and in social groups, the momentous and burning questions uppermost in the minds of all at the present hour, and so add to the thought force which will help to bring in the reign of peace and equality, seems timely. Women should be called upon not only to organize Red Cross Leagues and provide hospital stores, but should give some thought to the history and traditions of our country; whether we should hold to them or break from them.

It is incumbent upon every American citizen to be a diligent student of the country's affairs in the present crisis. The ideas of imperialism and republicanism are coming into conflict before the people. It is a universally admitted theory that ideas are more powerful than the sword, and here is woman's opportunity.

Every woman should be well informed upon the difference between these two basic principles of government. This necessity was vividly impressed upon me a few days since. While receiving a call from a friend who had spent the winter in Honolulu, the conversation naturally turned upon the annexation of Hawaii. She stated she had had several conversations with President Dole and other officers of the government and that they had convinced her of the need in which they stood of the protection of the United States. An intense fear pervades the American portion of the population that some European power might make a conquest of the islands and that they would thus lose self-government. To the question, "Then you would favor the annexation of Hawaii?" the answer returned was, "Most assuredly!" "And how would you have it come into the Union, as a colony or a territory?" The reply to this latter question was, "What is the difference?" Whether this policy of insular annexation be carried out or not became a matter which sank into insignificance in my own mind compared with the great need that women who occupy high social positions and converse so glibly, should learn to think more deeply and talk more wisely and intelligently. The highest duty of the women of our land to-day is to study how the influence of American life, principles and institutions may be exerted to cause neighboring nations to grow and expand in education, intelligence, political freedom and the arts of peace.

LOUISA SOUTHWORTH.
844 Prospect St., Cleveland, O.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Blessed is she that believed, for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.—Luke 1:45.

I WRITE this from beautiful Prohibition Park, Staten Island, where I have been attending the Temperance Congress for the last two or three days, and incidentally the silver wedding reception to Mr. and Mrs. John G. Woolley, which was a very delightful affair, showing in what high esteem this John the Baptist of the temperance reform and his brave, true wife are held by the temperance people of this land and other lands as well. The Fourth of July oration given by Mr. Woolley, which followed the reception, was a masterly effort, inspiring his hearers with the loftiest conception of true, Christian patriotism. The prohibitionists may well be proud of their beautiful Park and Auditorium. Great credit is due Dr. Funk for founding such a delightful summer retreat free from the abomination of the pestilential saloon, which so mars this beautiful island.

I was invited by Dr. Funk to speak on the Temple at the Temperance Congress, in order to clear up the many misconceptions in regard to the enterprise that some have so persistently tried to instill into the public mind. I trust I succeeded in doing this, and no doubt the Temple will reap the benefit of it later from our prohibition brothers. Dr. Funk made an earnest speech in behalf of the W. C. T. U. owning the Temple, and he assured me the Voice would stand by the enterprise in the future.

Letters received for the past few days from Chicago from Miss Johnson are most cheering as to the amount of cash she has received. One day it was over $500, another $800, the next $1,000, and June 30, $1,300, and she adds, "It was all in small amounts." Now, beloved white-ribboners, don't let us fold our hands and say just because Mr. Field has given us a respite until January, "It is too hot to raise money now, we will wait until fall." If you do we will fail. Now that we have gained vantage ground let us press the battle to the gates, just as our brave men at Santiago won such a glorious victory by a stern determination to win or die.

Orders for Miss Willard's picture are coming in, in a very satisfactory manner. The picture is attracting much attention and is greatly admired by people attending the Temperance Congress. The sale of it here is in charge of Mrs. L. E. Bailey, the well known temperance speaker and W. C. T. U. organizer, who owns a lovely cottage here. She has taken a large number of orders. The first one was from that noble prohibition standard bearer, Rev. Howard H. Russell, Delaware, O. He was so pleased with it he ordered one of our handsomest five dollar frames. Dr. Funk also ordered a handsome framed picture, and so did Mr. Joshua Levering, of Baltimore. He said it was by far the finest picture of Miss Willard he had ever seen. A letter comes from the W. C. T. U. headquarters, San Francisco, written by Mrs. Lord. After stating that Miss Willard's picture has been received, she says, "Every one that comes into our rooms exclaims, 'How beautiful!' As it stands in its golden frame it is a masterpiece from every standpoint, an inspiration, a companion." Mrs. B. L. Scovell, state president of Minnesota, writes, "I arrived home last evening and found Miss Willard's picture. I can not tell you how beautiful it all is to me. I thank you for bringing out this beautiful picture." Mrs. I. M. Walker, the state president of Nebraska, writes, "Miss Willard's picture has been received, and excites the admiration of all." It seems as though every white-ribboner that could spare one dollar should possess one of these exquisite pictures of our translated leader.

Mrs. L. G. Sobieski, Neosho, Mo., wife of the eloquent temperance speaker, Colonel Sobieski, has pledged to raise $100 for the Temple. She is now out speaking in its behalf, and is arousing great enthusiasm for it. She writes, "I think it would be the greatest calamity that could come upon the W. C. T. U. if the Temple should go into other hands."

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

Not For Me.

BY CHARLOTTE E. LEAVITT SLOCUM.

OTHERS may drink of the poison glass,
Cider, or wine, or gin.
At first a little, then more and more,
(For they do, if they once begin,)
But they will have headaches, and shaking hands,
And poor they will some day be;
So they may drink, if they think it best,
But never a drop for me!

Others may think that to smoke a pipe
Or a cigaret is fine,
But I know fellows that smoke are small,
Too weak for a baseball nine.
I know I should have a "tobacco heart,"
And my brain befogged would be;
So others may smoke, if they think it best,
But no tobacco for me!

Others may take God's name in vain,
And think it a manly thing,
But I have noticed the manliest men
Are reverent towards their King;
And swearing and smoking and drinking go
Together, I plainly see;
So others may swear, if they think it best,
But never an oath for me!

I'll taste of nothing that may be wrong;
From smokers I'll keep away;
I'll not say things that are like an oath
That the fellows sometimes say.
And I'll try as hard as ever I can
That others the truth may see;
Only, whatever the rest may say,
None of those things for me!

The Brown and White Soap Bubble Party.

BY LAVEINE R. SHERWOOD.

JOE BROWN and Fred White were twins, at least that was what they told me. I had only lately moved into their neighborhood, and one day when I was working in the pansy bed out by the front gate, they came along the sidewalk, laughing and talking as boys will. As I glanced up they raised their caps, and I said, smilingly, "I believe you two are chums."

"We ought to be," said Fred, "you see we're twins."

"How is that?" I asked. "You're Dr. White's son, aren't you?"

"Yes'm."

"And aren't you Joe Brown—W. H. Brown's boy?"

"Yes," nodded Joe, and they both smiled broadly. "But we're exactly the same age, born on the same day of the same year, and when we were little—we're past nine now—our mothers used to call us the twins, and measure and weigh us to see which was growing the fastest, and they made up a plan for us to spend our birthdays together, so," Joe concluded, "we call ourselves the twins now, and I guess everybody else does too."

I like to talk with boys, so I kept on asking questions. "And do you keep your birthdays together still?"

"Yes," Fred answered, "we've never missed yet, though we almost did once."

"How was that?"

"Well, once the whooping cough was going, and Joe took it about two weeks before our birthday, and mother didn't want me to get it, so she wouldn't let me go near him, and she said we'd have to celebrate separate for once, but three or four days before the birthday came I began to whoop too, so they made a whooping cough party for us, and invited every boy and girl in town that we knew had the whooping cough. Father went round with the carriage and gathered them up."

"Did you have a good time?" I inquired.

"Great! We had the most fun! When one would begin to cough, all the others would start in, too, and then we'd have to laugh. It was the jolliest birthday we ever had—unless it was the last one."

"What did you do at the last one?" I asked, in an encouraging tone.

"Oh, we had a Brown-and-White soap-bubble party."

"You see," put in Joe, "they call us Brownie and Whitie, 'cause his name's White an' mine's Brown."

But Fred went on: "Joe and I bought the pipes ourselves. We kind of hated to get pipes—it looked so much like using tobacco—but—"

"Don't you two believe in using tobacco?" I interrupted, pretending to be quite surprised.

"No, sir," said both boys at once, and Joe explained: "You see, Fred's father's a doctor, an' he knows lots of men that die of heart disease just because they smoke or chew."

"Oh, that ain't all," said Fred. "We study about it in school, and teacher says it makes a person stupider than they used to be, and I know it's so, for Jake Kelley and Cecil Harper both began last year on cigarets—that's worse than clear tobacco—and they kept getting carelesser 'n' carelesser, and this year they couldn't pass with the rest of the class—and it makes them sneaky, too."

I saw that Fred was forgetting about the party, so I asked, "And how did you manage about the pipes?"

"Oh, Joe told his mother, and she said to go ahead and she'd fix that for us. So we did. When we bought the pipes the man asked us if we were going to give a smoking party."

"You see, we got about fifty." (This from Joe.) "We said no, we didn't believe in smoking, and he said, 'That's right, boys, stick to that, and you'll be all right. I wish I'd had that much sense when I was a boy, but I'm too old now to try to give it up.'" "He smelt just like everything," remarked Joe.

"Well," continued Fred, "we had the party at Joe's house, it was his turn, and each of us invited nine boys and nine girls, and we had a great time. We made the awfulest big bubbles, and we had white cake with brown chocolate on it—great, big pieces, and white paper napkins with brownies all over them ["My sister drawed them," said Joe.] And we had brown and white candy. And when we were done blowing bubbles, we explained to the other fellows that we didn't want to have nothin' to do with old tobacco pipes, so we'd all break them, just to show,—and then our mothers would fix them up to take home. So we all took hold of our pipe-stems close up to the bowls, and hit the bowl a whack that broke it, and then our mothers tied white and brown ribbons on the stems and gave them to all hands for souvenirs." Fred said the big word very proudly, and Joe added, "That's something to remember a thing by."

"Well," I said, as the "twins" started on, "I think that was a grand idea, and if I ever have any soap-bubble parties, I'll break the pipes, too."

And so I will.

A Leaf From a Doctor's Diary.

WHILE in my office to-day meditating on the past, present and future, they brought to me a poor old soldier who had stood beside me in defense of our country. When in the army he was a noble, fearless young man. Now he had delirium tremens and his courage all gone; instead of the brave soldier, there was a shrinking, shrieking coward, fighting imaginary enemies—snakes, dogs, mice and all kinds of hideous things. The sight was pitiful indeed, and when I saw the once noble fellow brought to such a condition by the accursed stuff, I solemnly promised that for all time to come not a single drop of intoxicating liquor should go down my throat.

I wish every boy in the land could have seen this poor fellow. I venture to say that every one of them would have said as I did, "Not any of that for me again; Moody can talk, but he is not in it compared with what I have seen to-day."

TEACHER (to a scholar with a very dirty face)—Jimmy, I think you are just about as dirty as any boy in the city. Jimmy—You'd ought to see my brother. Teacher—Does your brother have a dirty face oftener than you do? Jimmy—Well, mother says she don't believe he's washed his face since he got it.

Our Cozy Corner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—With the celebration of our national birthday came the news of a glorious victory at Santiago, but at what a cost? How many of our soldiers gave their lives as the price of Cuban liberty, we do not yet know. I pray for the success of the American arms and my heart thrills with pride at the deeds of heroic valor recounted of our boys in blue, but the thought always comes, "If they would only enlist in our war against King Alcohol and fight with such zeal, such enthusiasm, the reign of drunkenness would be wiped out as surely as will Spanish tyranny."

I know that every one of my boys is wishing he were old enough to shoulder a rifle and fight for his country; it is a loyal ambition, but when the war is over, when excitement and enthusiasm have died out, there will be the greater need of moral courage to carry on our unceasing battle for "God, and Home and Native Land." Will you march in the front ranks then, my lads? If you do, I shall be a very proud and happy

DEAR AUNT MARY:—As I enjoy your Cozy Corner very much I thought I would like to join it. I want to thank you and the cousins for making such a cozy Cozy Corner. Some of the things said in it are both pleasant and encouraging. My sister Edith and I are members of the W. C. T. U., of which my mother is president. I am thirteen years old and am the eldest of a family of three boys and three girls. I think we have a very good motto in the Cozy Corner if we only live up to it.

Your loving niece,

DEAR AUNT MARY:—My mamma is the president of the W. C. T. U. here. We have eight saloons and one drug store. I love animals and I have a dog, a canary bird, a cat and a pony. I always turn to the Children's page when we get THE UNION SIGNAL; I like the stories and the little letters and try to make some of the puzzles out. Your loving niece,

Davisville, Cal. EDITH HAMMON.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—As I have never seen any letters from Humboldt, I thought I would write you one. We live near the Neosho river. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and we take THE UNION SIGNAL. I am sorry to say there are several saloons in our town. I would like to join your Cozy Corner.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

A Red Letter Day.

THE raison d'etre of "Fresh Air Mission Day" August 3, would doubtless be more clearly apprehended if the word mission were to be eliminated from the title. We question, indeed, if the elimination would not result in a broadening of the scope and deepening of the purpose of the day itself. Words, like people, gather to themselves their own coteries of ideas and associations from which it is difficult, on the part of the average mind, to separate them. The boundaries of "mission" in the thought world were long ago clearly defined; it is of necessity more or less associated with sermons and tracts, and it is to be doubted if anything more secular (?) than a Sunday-school picnic would by many be attempted on a day baptized with a name of such solemn import.

But "Fresh Air Day!" what vistas it opens before us; what possibilities for cramped lungs and wearied brains; what visions of shady woods, and limpid streams, what impulses toward a new contact with nature, and a new realization of this first revelation of God! Surely the "mission" part of the title would be more than justified, even in the old acceptation of the term, if once a day could be solemnly set apart by all white-ribboners for a renewal of their too often lost acquaintanceship with earth and sky, for a quiet season in which, through nature, God should speak to them of Himself.

What are the possible uses of Fresh Air day? First, it seems to us, to have a distinct mission to white-ribboners themselves, not alone to those whose work lies in crowded cities, but quite as often to the woman of the country union, or even the woman upon the farm. Bad air is no better when breathed in the country than when breathed in the city, and it is a popular fallacy that country homes are, of necessity, well ventilated and under sanitary conditions. We have known women with God's green world all about them who hardly for a moment during the busy summer time left the stifling atmosphere of the kitchen, in which the greater part of their work must be done, whose sleeping room, perhaps, opened directly off from that kitchen, whose best room was given over to darkness and dampness, and whose lives were spent almost as wholly cut off from God's pure air and sunshine as are the lives of the women in crowded city centers. Let Fresh Air Mission day be a day in which first of all, our women in country as well as city, shall give themselves the privilege of a deep breath of God's air. Plan to spend the entire day in the woods or on the water, or, if there be no better place, under a shady tree in your own dooryard; go back to childhood and picnic; let household cares look after themselves for one day in the year, and do you breathe in all the sweetness and life of the outside world. A W. C. T. U. picnic would be an excellent method for observing Fresh Air Mission day; not an elaborate, costly picnic, involving much trouble and time in preparation, but a sweet, homey affair, in which the women should get together in the early morning and spend the day in simple natural pleasures. No true woman ever gets so far away from Nature's heart that such a day would not rest and strengthen and inspire her. It ought, too, to widen the vistas of her thought and make her resolve that more time hereafter should be given to just such recreative enjoyment.

But what of the women of the cities, the women who have neither time nor money for watering-places and mountains, how are they to use Fresh Air Day? Parks are, of course, possible to the majority, and parks, though a poor substitute for nature, are still better than nothing. It occurs to us that the sweet reciprocities which are exchanged between the various branches of the women's clubs might be well adopted by our own local unions. It is a very frequent thing for a woman's club, located in a suburb, to invite a club from the city, particularly from a crowded part of the city, to a day's outing, and this courtesy is often returned by a winter invitation to a concert or social, or something of a festive nature on the part of the city club. Our intense earnestness sometimes stands in the way of the sweet amenities which go so far towards brightening life. Why not celebrate our next Fresh Air Mission Day in a way worthy our gracious World's leader, whose birth it commemorates, by extending the hospitalities of the country to the city, and coming to know each other better as sisters and as friends?

One other possible use of the day must by no means be forgotten, and that relates to the children of our crowded cities. For them the term, "Fresh Air Mission," is coming more and more to have an almost divine significance. The work of the various Settlements in our great cities, and of other agencies interested in this special philanthropy, has been admirably seconded by the people in the country without whose aid it could never have been carried forward. It is now a by no means uncommon thing for the children of the tenement districts to be sent out upon farms and into sweet grassy nooks for a week or two during each summer; the delight with which they hail their deliverance from hot pavements, and sickly odors, is beyond expression. We have known them to cry with delight after their first visit to the country at the very thought of going a second time. Much has been done in this direction, and still there is a vast army of children in nearly every city of our land who never saw the earth as God made it. What more blessed mission than to give some such little one, in His name, a taste of country air, and of life under real conditions?

Or if one has not a home to open to a child, why not aid by money the agencies which are engaged in this work? The Fresh Air Mission of our cities receives contributions for this special purpose, as do also the various settlements. Chicago Commons, in particular, has a camp for boys, where from twenty to twenty-five are kept two weeks each during the months of July, August and September. They are cultivating five acres of vegetable garden, thus learning agriculture as well as having a good time in the fields and woods.

Picnics for a day to the children of the crowded districts are also within the range of possibility for almost all white-ribboners. If you are at a loss to know where to find your children, correspond with almost any social settlement or city union, and you will find that they can furnish you children galore. Just one such picnic in which the local union is the hostess, will convert you forever to a belief in the sweet uses of Fresh Air Day, and you will want to extend it over as many days as possible throughout the summer. When the children of the Chicago Commons Kindergarten were first taken to the park some of them threw themselves upon the ground and kissed the grass in their perfect abandon of delight. When you think there are thousands of such children whose souls are longing after the beautiful, although they know it not, shut away in our crowded cities, where they have never seen a blooming flower, who shall say that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has not a use for Fresh Air Mission Day? May God help us to use it to His glory, which is always the good of His children!

To Unite the Friends of Temperance.

SOME time ago we set forth at considerable length the means by which Cambridge, Mass., has secured and maintained prohibition from the liquor traffic for over half a score of years, together with some of the good results. This issue contains an article by Mr. Frank Foxcroft, editor of the Boston Journal, on the subject, "How to Unite Friends of Temperance." Mr. Foxcroft is also the editor of the Frozen Truth, a picturesque paper, but without sensation or extravagance, published in Cambridge from time to time in the interests of no-license. It has played no little part in educating the people and in showing them in which direction lay their best interests. The first issue contained such information as a list of the bonds and bondsmen furnished by the liquor dealers, a list of the names of the licensees and the sureties upon their bonds, which created a mild sensation. The second issue of the paper analyzed the list of bondsmen and showed that one wholesale dealer in Boston had signed thirteen bonds, another dealer and a brewer had signed thirteen each, and the name of the partner of the brewer was on seven bonds. Other wholesale dealers and brewers had signed eight to ten apiece. This revealed the fact that Cambridge saloons were simply distributing agencies for the wholesale houses of Boston. Much other similar information was given from time to time, and there was always some special feature to attract general attention.

Mr. Foxcroft has had experience, and can speak with authority. We may differ from him in regard to the practicability of engrafting prohibition in the constitution of the United States, but what he has to say is helpful to every community, whatever may be the peculiarity of its laws relating to the liquor traffic.

The desirability, indeed, the absolute necessity of a union of the temperance forces is becoming more and more apparent. The leaders have seen this most clearly, and the logic of events is driving the thought home to the many. Those who try to solve the conditions of success know equally well that a union cannot be effected except through a spirit of toleration toward that which does not affect the principle at stake. What is true of a city is true of a state and a nation.

A Microscopic Study.

A FOREIGN publication quotes a Chicago daily paper to the effect that Lady Henry Somerset was "unanimously" elected president of the B. W. T. A., and then devotes a page to bombarding the word "unanimously." The article impales Miss Agnes Slack on the spit and roasts her because, somehow or other, the word "unanimously" was interpolated into her cablegram as printed by the said Chicago daily, whereby she was made to say, "Somerset elected unanimously, with great enthusiasm.—SLACK;" instead of, "Somerset elected with enthusiasm. —SLACK," for the cablegram was, "only this and nothing more." THE UNION SIGNAL is thankful that it was not led into saying "unanimously" once, not once, although the informal ballot for Lady Henry was so large that a leader of the minority graciously and generously came forward and moved that the informal ballot be made the formal, and that Lady Henry Somerset be declared elected, which was done; but which could not have been done had there been a single dissenting voice; so that technically, and parliamentarily, and politically, the word "unanimously" might have been used. But at Headquarters, and in THE UNION SIGNAL office it is tabooed, it is "nameless here forever more," for lately we have taken for our motto, Similia Similibus Curantur (like cures like). We have been forced into doing some hair-splitting ourselves but we hope our studies in microscopy are about ended.

We are sorry for the originality of the cablegram as printed in that one single paper among the multitude covered by the Associated Press, and we would exhort our friends to put not their trust in newspapers, for one in a thousand might fail them.

We shall ask that an attested copy of the cablegram be deposited in the National archives where it can be read of all men, and by the women who are interested in it; and should it seem advisable, will request that a special archivist be appointed to have charge of it that it may not be added to or subtracted from, "never more."

Regardless of any reported interviews, we here and now disclaim the word "unanimously" and instruct our raven to answer all the "tappings on our door," and all the croakings of other ravens, with, "It was 'merely this, and nothing more,' Somerset elected with enthusiasm—SLACK."

Such is Fame!

THE Richmond Evening Leader of June 24, under the title, "A Temperance Lesson," contains an editorial in which attention is called to young Hobson, who distinguished himself at Santiago, as not being addicted to intoxicating liquors. The writer says: "Hobson's brilliant achievement is one of the finest temperance lessons of the day. No man with his brain beclouded with whisky could have accomplished that difficult task."

The article quotes a correspondent in the Boston Transcript, who in referring to the same subject, called attention to a speech that was made in 1886 before a committee of the United States Senate, when they were considering the bill asking for the National Temperance Education law for the territories, District of Columbia, military and naval academies, Indian and colored schools, which was subsequently passed and became a law that year, in which speech occurred the following significant words:

> The judgment day alone will reveal how many precious human lives of men bearing arms have been sacrificed, how many battles have been lost, how many times the tide of conflict has changed because the commanding officer was ignorant of the real nature of alcohol, because he thought his brain would be clearer, that his aim would be steadier if he fortified himself with the alcohol that paralyzed his nerves, that muddled his brain, that really unfitted him to be the director of a conflict. In our military and naval schools are young men who are to be to us we know not what in the future before this country. We cannot to-day tell what possible hour may come when our national destiny will depend upon the clear, steady brain of some officer who is a boy to-day, in training in our military or naval schools. Therefore, we ask that a law may be enacted, etc.

But what is most surprising the editorial in the Richmond Leader goes on to say, "There has been a movement in various directions to have such a course of study in the public schools, and there is sense in the suggestion;" and urges that such instruction should be given in the schools of the land, both private and public.

We are unfeignedly glad if this much-to-be-deprecated war is to teach our esteemed contemporaries, North and South, the importance of total abstinence. We say amen to the deductions of both papers, and rejoice at these increasing signs of the dawning of a better era in journalism. At the same time we can but wonder what Rip Van Winkle sleep has been upon our press that two such important representatives should remain in ignorance of the fact that the movement they advocate was long ago successfully accomplished by that body of "temperance fanatics" known as the W. C. T. U., to the extent that sixteen millions of children in our public schools are now under that instruction, as well as the students in all of our national schools. It must be encouraging to the vanguard when occasionally the main body comes within the range of its vision and it is a matter of special joy to the leaders in our reform that the sober thought of the practical, every-day world is coming more and more to indorse what it at first denounced as impracticable and visionary. We are willing to waive personal recognition if only the work can be advanced, and yet when we remember that Boston has for many years been the home of Mary H. Hunt, we can but take up the old-time exclamation, "Oh, Tempora, oh, mores!"

Camp Canteens.

IT would be a pleasant and helpful thing if people having friends in temperance regiments would write to the colonels, thanking them for the stand they have taken. Some of these officers have met with severe criticism, which "thanks" would go a great ways toward offsetting. Consult our Regimental Roll of Honor, and give us the names of others not having a canteen, as you may know them.

The Voice gives interesting figures, obtained mostly from the dealers themselves, concerning the canteens at Chickamauga Park. They will bear repeating. Fifty is a low estimate for the number of canteens, and nineteen blind pigs, of which one alone does a business of $150 a day. The average daily receipts of the canteens of Camp Thomas are fully $100. The soldiers spend $5,000 per day for beer at the canteens. Battery A, Indiana Artillery, daily average of receipts, $125, one Sunday, $175; First Kentucky canteen, $100 per day; First Ohio Cavalry canteen, $90; First Ohio Artillery, $100; Twenty-eighth Indiana Battery, from $75 to $100; First South Carolina Volunteers, about $75; Twelfth Minnesota, from $80 to $90; Twelfth New York Volunteers, a bar seventy-five feet long and three bartenders, average receipts more than $200—on pay day 200 or 300 men in line for drinks; Third Montana Cavalry, about $200; First Missouri Volunteers, $125; Ninth Pennsylvania, $150.

Some of the men in these regiments are so tired of their associations that they have asked to be transferred to regiments having no canteens. The discipline in non-canteen regiments is notably good as compared with the canteen regiments. Forty men from one of these last were in jail at one time in Chattanooga. A private letter from an officer says, "You can not denounce the regimental canteen in too strong terms. Any epithet applied or adjective used will not and can not be too strong. It is a monster to be handled as a wild beast—with hot irons. Beer and good army discipline are strangers."

It has now developed that the profits from the canteens are not used for hospital supplies, at least if they are, no one knows it. We therefore repeat our question, "Who gets the profits?" Do the regimental officers? Does the surgeon-in-chief? Does General Brooke? It is time some one would rise and explain.

Mrs. Leavitt Speaks Again.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I beg that the few words I send in reply to your article "THE UNION SIGNAL Arraigned," will be given a place speedily.

In my "Open Letter, Number Two," I made no reference to Dr. Mary Wood-Allen's letter of acceptance of the place made vacant by Mrs. Butler's resignation. It may be that other articles beside Mrs. Butler's letter of resignation, that were intended to reach the whole membership through THE UNION SIGNAL have failed to do so, because they were addressed to the general officers instead of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL. It is certain that the leaders of the purity reform in England, on the continent and in this country were disappointed that neither Mrs. Butler's communication addressed to the conventions, nor her letter of resignation appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL.

As to invitations to myself to contribute to THE UNION SIGNAL, I would say, when my "Open Letter" was refused publication, having been sent to THE UNION SIGNAL before it was to any other paper, [But not until it was printed and sent out broadcast.—THE EDITORS.] and refused for reasons that, to my own mind, all told for its publication, I was told that an article from me on the subject of purity would be printed. I knew that other articles had been sent to Headquarters, and I supposed to THE UNION SIGNAL, covering the entire ground, except the one point I had addressed myself to, certainly as well, and probably far better than I could. Beside, the delays that had taken place would have made the article ineffectual. Therefore, I did not write an "article," as I had written the "Open Letter" solely to oppose the re-election of one unfitted for the office she held.

When I wrote "Open Letter, Number Two," it did not occur to me that any one would attribute the incorrect numbering of articles in my first letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, about amendment to the World's Constitution, to any one but myself. In re-reading the lines that THE UNION SIGNAL complains of, it appears to me that no one could draw the conclusion its editor has reached. However, I do see that the matter might have been made clearer. Utterly disclaiming any intention of throwing blame upon any one else by my apology for incorrect numbering, I will now explain that I was forced to take the numbers from minutes of a previous convention, as in spite of my strenuous efforts to obtain one from Miss Slack in England, I have not obtained one. The minutes came later, and I availed myself of them to make the corrections needed.

As to going beyond my privilege in addressing the members of the unions, I wish to say that I wrote to Lady Henry first of all, and immediately after to the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. of the United States. Finding from the replies to these letters that I could expect no aid from those sources, no other course was left me but to reach the membership through other channels. Ours is not an autocratic organization, but one modeled in its forms of government largely upon that of our country. In "the realms of government" constant appeals are made to the people without waiting or even asking for the consent of president and cabinet. [But not by a member of the president's cabinet in criticism of the president.—THE EDITORS.] Supposing my course had been without precedent, it is not at all certain that it is wrong. We are placed in entirely new and very dangerous circumstances, and one would be justified in taking heroic measures. Mine, however, has been a mild appeal, pointing out the inconsistency of our own course in allowing a president to remain in office who does not believe in our foundation principles. [For answer to this charge see pages 8 and 9 of THE UNION SIGNAL of June 2.—THE EDITORS.]

Very sincerely,

Notice.

JUST as the Y page is ready for the press, a note is received from Mrs. Clinton Smith, Washington, D. C., requesting space for an article concerning a proposed "Y Camp Meeting." Should it arrive in time it will be found on one of the back pages of this issue and the attention of all the Y's is directed to it.—EDITOR.

Massachusetts.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—During vacation is a good time to review the past months and gather strength and inspiration for those coming. We have recommended in Massachusetts that all the Y unions hold but one meeting a month during July and August, believing that it is not best to drop the work altogether lest it be hard to collect the forces again in the fall. We have suggested for the July meeting a thorough and conscientious discussion of the root beer question, and have earnestly requested that accounts of the discussion and the conclusions reached be sent us, as we are anxious to know how our constituency answer the question whether a Y violates her or his pledge in drinking root beer.

A lawn party has also been suggested for July, as a way of raising funds with which to send delegates to the state convention in October. As this is the silver anniversary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., and is to be celebrated at the "Hub," of course it will be the finest convention ever held, and we want to plan now that we may also have the largest and best Y conference ever known. For the August meeting we have offered another question equally appropriate for the season: Should a Y be among the Sunday cyclists and excursionists? We hope to learn where the Massachusetts Y stands on this matter of Sunday bicycle riding. A Y picnic, or field day, was also recommended for August. The suggestive programs which have been sent out to all the unions each month have proved very helpful, and are generally used.

We were very glad, indeed, to receive some requests for the description of the "Belated Picnic," in response to the offer in our last letter. Mrs. Bryant also had many letters regarding their "Due Tea." We so very much wish this column might be made a medium for the exchange of working plans, and be always full of hints and helps on the work. Shall we not try to make it so, treasuring up all suggestions and points we meet to pass along to others? Miss Carter's description of the Rose Social was very pretty, and we expect to suggest the idea in our state. We hope some good suggestions will be sent in reply to the New Hampshire Y secretary's question as to the best way of securing reports from all the unions. In Massachusetts we succeed fairly well, but sometimes it is only by frequent and urgent requests. In most cases where we cannot rely upon the secretary or president, we will know of some one in the union to whom we can write, who will honor our communications.

We have been very fortunate in having had Miss Clothier in our state for several months. She brought with her, as usual, fresh life and enthusiasm, and spoke in many cities and towns very acceptably. Memorial meetings for our beautiful, translated leader were held by nearly every Y, and most of them have contributed toward the Temple in a greater or less degree. The Boston Y sent $50 of its pledge for $100, and the Somerset Y's of Northfield Seminary pledged themselves to raise $115. One of the professors of Wellesley College promised the Somerset Y there to double any amount they might raise for the Temple. Flower Mission day was generally observed in the state, and every Y has adopted this blessed department, carrying flowers to the sick and in prison, and some of the unions, like the Pittsfield Y, regularly hold evangelistic services at the jails and almshouses.

We are glad for the continually awakening interest in White Shield work among our young people, and rejoice over the fine club recently organized in the Boston Y. Right here we might speak of the pledge card issued by the Boston Y, as it might be suggestive to some other union. It is a little three-page folder; on the first page are the names and addresses of the officers and place of meeting; on the second page is this little poem:

WHY.

Because He died to set me free from sin,
Because He waits till souls are gathered in,
This pledge I take
For Jesus' sake.

Because man loves to wander far away,
Because his darkness chooses night, not day,
This pledge I take
For my brother's sake.

Because the flesh is weak, temptation strong,
Because all right should be against all wrong,
This pledge I take
For my own sake.

On the third page is the pledge with a place for the signature, and attached to this page by perforations, is a coupon with places for the name, address and date, which is to be filled out and detached to give to the secretary.

Many of the Massachusetts Y's have been making comfort bags for the soldiers. The Shelburne Falls Y's made theirs in the form of little rolls, having ten pockets each and everything in them made very flat so they could be easily carried in a coat pocket. They sent them direct to one of their honoraries who is with the Second Massachusetts in the thick of the fight.

We have to report three new unions since our last letter, and three Y Branches which we hope in time will become full fledged Y's. One of the new unions, Fitchburg, has just opened in connection with the W's, a pretty suite of three rooms, which will be used as headquarters for the unions and also as a rest-room for girls. The Chelsea Y's have reopened their reading-room for the electric railway men, and are working this summer to secure funds with which to establish a gymnasium for girls in the fall. The Charlestown Y, as is their time-honored custom, served ice water and temperance literature (not mixed) to the thirsty crowds on Bunker Hill day. The men said it was the only place in the city where they could get ice water without buying something to go with it.

The following is an account of an entertainment given last winter, but as it has not been mentioned before, it may be helpful to other unions:

An old-time amusement revived furnished an interesting and profitable entertainment for the Reading Y. Realizing that one of the surest ways to reach the people of a community is through the children, it was decided to interest the pupils of the public schools in a grand spelling match. Teachers lent their aid to the plan, and on the evening appointed, representatives from nine schools appeared to participate in the contest. Each grade spelled by itself, then those who stood longest in the several classes came together for a final trial of their proficiency. As an incentive to effort, a picture, "Christ and the Fishermen," by Zimmermann, had been offered to the pupil who should win in the final contest, the stipulation being made that he, in turn, should present the prize to the school of which he was a member. The efforts of the children created much interest and amusement, while the selections given by an orchestra, composed of high school boys, were a pleasant feature and saved the program from monotony. At the close of the exercises the judges awarded the prize to a member of the freshman class of the high school, and the beautiful picture now hangs upon the walls of one of the class rooms, a silent teacher of a great lesson.

The North Attleboro Y recently gave quite a unique entertainment. It was called "White Ribbon Line, Voyage of the Ship, Home Protection." The interior of the hall was very cleverly decorated to represent a ship. The ship, "Home Protection," started from the company's landing, and made stops at Tete-a-Tete pier, Point Cheer Up and Social Town, according to a time-table, which consisted of musical and literary selections, designated as 1 Bell, 2 Bells, 3 Bells, etc. A full program can be sent if desired.

Our state work, the Willard Y Settlement, is progressing nicely, and more and more proving its worth, both as a means of increasing the interest of the Y's, uniting them, and acquainting others with and enlisting them in our white-ribbon cause, as well as furnishing a much needed and greatly appreciated home for young women. We have had twenty-eight young women in our home during these seven months, besides transients, among whom it was our privilege to entertain Miss Johansdottir, of Iceland. In May we held a very pleasant and successful Japanese and American bazaar, to raise funds for the Settlement, in which all the Y's in the vicinity of Boston assisted. Through the Y's in the state, we are arranging vacation tours for as many of the working girls as possible, who otherwise would have no outing. So much might be written of our Settlement that it is not safe to start out on the subject, but we earnestly recommend to each state a work of this kind for the sake of the Y as well as the good it will do.

Always, if anything is mentioned in the Massachusetts letter concerning which you would like to know more, I will be glad to explain as fully as possible if you will write me, enclosing a stamp.

Assistant Y Secretary.

Chicago Young People and the Temple.

THE Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union made its bow to the general public at the patriotic temperance rally held at the Auditorium, Chicago's largest and most beautiful assembly place, Tuesday evening, June 28. The undertaking seemed to wise heads a very risky one, as the expense incurred was great, and the risk of getting an audience was considered even greater. Congratulations were, however, the order of the day, as the immense audience was exceedingly appreciative of the program rendered.

The feeling of the waiting people was well expressed by the wife of a reformed man who said, "When the curtain went up I felt that I was looking straight into heaven." Tier after tier of girls in purest white, with a setting on either side of young men in blackest black was the sight which almost set the people wild before a note had been sung by the mammoth home protection chorus which Prof. Peter Bilhorn had been training for months for this and similar occasions. The songs as well as the speeches were straight out against the liquor traffic. It is safe to say the walls of the Auditorium never before echoed such sentiments, but the people seemed to like them.

The presiding officer, Dr. Henry Wade Rogers, president of the Northwestern University, according to his friends, outdid himself in grace and eloquence, and earned the everlasting gratitude of the friends of the Temple by his splendid championship of clearing the debt at once, and making it a memorial to Miss Willard. The encouragement he gave the young people in their efforts to raise at least $100,000 in Chicago was backed up by a definite subscription from himself. In true Hensonian style the funny D. D. (Dr. P. S. Henson) poured out hot shot against the liquor traffic in his address on "What Chicago Young People can do to free America."

He also believes the Temple can be freed from impending disaster by a coupling of faith and works as the young people are doing.

When Eva Marshall Shontz, whose enthusiasm, faith and courage made possible the Auditorium meeting, and who is bringing other wonderful things to pass, rose to speak on "Frances Willard Still Lives," a shower of beautiful flowers and tiny flags fell about her from above. Every word of the beautiful address was heard in the remotest corner of the vast Auditorium, which very few speakers can fill. A series of tableaux of a patriotic order finished the program. These were furnished by leading society people of the patriotic orders, whose interest was enlisted by Mrs. Harriet Hayden Hayes, who aided the union in securing artistic effects, choice music, etc.

During the intermission an army of collectors passed through the audience taking pledges for the Temple, and a good start was made toward the $100,000 popular subscription. The newspapers of the city made general and cordial mention of the affair, dwelling specially upon the chorus "helping to sing the debt off the Temple," which strikes people as a new way to get at the troublesome incumbrance.

The movement, now so happily inaugurated, will be followed in a few weeks by a series of great mass-meetings now being arranged to sweep the city. The chorus will sing, and the finest talent available will speak in the large churches which are being offered. A street service in each case is proposed, to try to reach the drinking classes and attract them to the meeting. Pledges will be taken for the Temple, and each great meeting is to be followed by a canvass of the neighborhood in which it is held, for the same fund.

This Young People's Union has furnished a fine library for the county jail, and has undertaken work in the following lines: Million vote pledge, enforcement of law, anti-cigaret, equal suffrage (with a young man as superintendent), temperance and labor, kindergarten and Temperance Hospital. The headquarters at 1119 The Temple is the rendezvous of scores of earnest, interested young men and young women, each of whom is finding some way in which to help on the temperance cause. These go as firebrands into their young people's church societies, which are gradually waking up in a most encouraging manner. "Great good is often left unaccomplished, simply because it is not undertaken." Chicago young people are "God's undertakers."

News from the Field.

Maryland.

THE regular quarterly meeting of the state executive committee was held June 14, at headquarters, Baltimore, when arrangements for the annual state convention were perfected as far as possible. The convention was to have been held the last week in September, but difficulty in procuring homes for the delegates brought out the fact that the time selected was a most busy season for housekeepers in Chestertown and its locality, the place where the convention will be held, and the time was changed to a fortnight later. I pass on this experience as it may be suggestive to other unions in deciding upon dates.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Baltimore city union which consists of over thirty local unions, was held June 10. The papers read were of an unusually fine order. They were on, "Franchise," "Teaching Temperance to Children in the Public Schools," "Peace and Arbitration" and "The Children of the Streets." The last was largely a plea for free kindergartens. The kindergarten of the union, the first of the kind established in the state, has been a most successful work, evidences of its uplifting effects both on the children and their homes having been noted frequently from its organization in 1883 until the present time. The little ones, under the care of the kindergartners and some of their devoted friends, had a delightful outing in Druid Hill Park, Baltimore, June 8.

An entertainment, "The Story of the Scottish Reformation," given under the auspices of the Young Woman's Branch of Baltimore, for the benefit of the work, was quite a success financially and otherwise. The entertainment is one of a number of illustrated or elucidated stories, arranged by Mrs. H. E. Monroe, of Philadelphia, a member of the W. C. T. U.

Miss A. R. Stewart, secretary of the Young Woman's Branch of Maryland, has been quite successful in causing "an arrest of thought" in temperance matters, on the part of some hitherto indifferent, through illustrated lectures on "Famous Faces and Affairs Afield" and "Echoes of a Great Convention." The latter is a description of the World's Convention held in Toronto, October last, with news en route from Baltimore and places of interest in the Queen City.

Reports of services held in memory of our beloved leader have been coming in since the first sad ones held February 24 until recently. All the unions holding such services have not reported, I understand, but the list to date is as follows: Havre de Grace, Westminster, Cumberland, Frederick, Keedysville, Monkton, Sharpsburg, Darnestown, Hurlock, Trappe, Chestertown, Fountain Green, Reisterstown, Winchester, Halethorpe and the following unions in Baltimore city, Hampden, Lafayette Square and Somerset, of the Woman's College, Lake, Willard and Fayette of the Young Woman's Branch, and the Loyal Temperance Legion of Fayette Y. The Baltimore city union held services at Mt. Vernon Place M. E. Church and the state union at the Memorial Building, state headquarters. Among the speakers at Mt. Vernon Place church were Rev. Joseph Smith, pastor of the church, Dr. J. B. Van Meter, dean of the Woman's College, and Hon. Joshua Levering, presidential candidate of the Prohibition party in the last national election. Mr. Levering spoke of Miss Willard's views on temperance and prohibition, and the address has been published in attractive pamphlet form by the state executive committee of the prohibition party of Maryland as a "tribute to Frances E. Willard." Different church denominations and organizations united in several instances in these beautiful services, and a picture of Miss Willard wreathed with vines and flowers, occupied a prominent place at almost every service. Pundita Ramabai, who was most touchingly associated with Miss Willard in her visit to Baltimore, ten years ago, has again visited that city in the interest of her work in India, and the Baltimore Association has decided to continue its assistance to that work.

Ohio.

THE fire of organization that was kindled early in the year is still raging all over Ohio, with increasing force. The union at Piqua is the banner union of the state in getting new members. On April 13, they inaugurated a "membership contest" which closed May 13 with the following results: Mrs. Smith's section secured twenty-five new members. Mrs. Zollinger's received fourteen, and Mrs. Hedges (president of the nineteenth district) received thirty-one, making a total of seventy new members. Each one paid her full year's dues, which added $42.70 to their treasury. Piqua now has a paid up membership of one hundred and twenty-two. A reception was given to the new members at the home of Mrs. A. S. Snyder. The membership contest was conducted as follows: Three leaders were selected. The names of the remainder of the union were written on slips of paper and drawn until the union was divided into three sections. Each one was provided with pledge card and annual leaflets. They then made a house-to-house visitation among their friends, explaining our work and soliciting new members. At the close of the time limit the section securing the fewest names furnish place and refreshments for a reception, the one getting the next in number furnish the program, while the one getting the largest number, with the new members, are the guests.

Each county in the nineteenth district held enthusiastic conventions, reporting the work in good condition. Hamilton county held their semi-annual convention at Mount Healthy. Each superintendent made good reports. The songs of the L. T. L. added much to the pleasure of the occasion. Rev. George Hammell, with others, gave instructive lectures. A letter of thanks was sent to Miss Bradley, showing the appreciation of white-ribboners for her bravery in using water in christening the battleship, Kentucky.

Our state president, Mrs. Annie W. Clark, spends the largest part of her time in the field, visiting old unions and organizing new. She recently organized a new union at Marion, with forty members. Miss Marie C. Brehm, National superintendent of franchise, spent the month of May and part of June in the state, organizing and lecturing on her department. Miss Brehm has been in the state before, and the work is always strengthened by her being among us. Morrow county held their anniversary convention at Cardington, that being the place their first county convention was held. A retrospective address was made by Rev. Tryphena Morris, who was the first county president. Mrs. Lucy Meeker, also a former president, gave some very pleasant reminiscences. Mrs. Graham, of Newark, was present, and spoke for the Temple. An impressive memorial service was held for our beloved leader.

Columbus has formed a federation of unions. The nine unions of the city are now known as the Union of Unions, Mrs. Mary Castle, president. The first work of the federation was to make four hundred comfort bags for the soldiers. They contained a fine comb, linen thread, buttons, pins, needles, safety-pins, courtplaster and some of our literature. A personal letter was put in each one asking them to lead a pure, Christian life, and the following pledge printed on linen was pasted on the inside: "God helping me, I promise to abstain from everything containing alcohol, including wine, beer and cider, as a beverage; to treat all women with respect; to observe the law of purity as equally binding on men as women, and to keep my body in all temperance, sobriety and chastity." The soldiers have written letters full of gratitude and appreciation; nearly all have signed the pledge, and speak of the great need of more such work being done. When they were received the boys gave three cheers for the W. C. T. U.

The Ohio Sunday-school association was held in Columbus the first of June. They passed the resolution sent out by Mrs. Stella Irvine, asking for the continuance of the quarterly temperance lesson in the International Lesson Series, and resolved "to coöperate with all temperance organizations in aggressive inter-denominational work."

Thus, the door is opened for our work in the Sabbath-schools of Ohio, and will be closely followed by our superintendents of Sunday-school work.

Tennessee.

MUCH good work has been reported to me since my last letter to THE UNION SIGNAL. First came a letter from Maryville, by Miss Fannie M. Marston, too late for my last report. Their meetings are held every two weeks. Every third meeting is a mothers' meeting. They have a flourishing L. T. L., which, in connection with the Band of Mercy, recently held a successful public meeting. The L. T. L. has had an average attendance the past year of forty-two members. Eleven members won prizes for having been present at every meeting. They are very much encouraged over this work. Most of the members of the W. C. T. U. are also members of the Equal Franchise Association, and do their suffrage work there.

McMinnville, through Miss Susie Hoyt, reports having arranged a list of appointments for Mrs. Gibson, which resulted in the organization of one new union. They have been making special efforts in the department of unfermented wine.

Winchester, through Mrs. Mattie Shook, reports some good work being done. At present they are making an effort to have the law enforced that requires scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

Both Maryville and Winchester report memorial services to Miss Willard. Fayetteville, while reporting no special services, reports that a good paper, a eulogy on Miss Willard, was read by one of the young ladies of the school to a crowded house at the close of Mr. Tate's school. It was well read and well received by an appreciative audience.

Tullahoma, through Miss Putman, reports two public meetings, presided over by Mrs. Gibson, state president of the Tennessee W. C. T. U. They distribute literature, have sent $9.50 to the Temple, have circulated petitions to the President, General Miles and Governor Taylor in regard to the sale of liquors near military camps, and one in the interest of the anti-cigaret law. They subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL and The Issue for the reading-rooms of the Jessie May Aydelott College, and the librarian reports that both papers are read and appreciated. She also reports a debate at the close of this school on woman suffrage, which was not the work of the W. C. T. U., in which the affirmative won.

Mrs. Gibson, our state president, has sent in a report of her work since April 5. On that day she visited the Loudon union, strengthened the work there, and added two new members; April 6 she visited the Knoxville Central union; April 8 all the unions of Knoxville met for an all-day prayer-meeting; April 14, met representatives of the two Knoxville unions and the Friendsville union, and planned some good work; went to Maryville April 14 and met with the W. C. T. U. there and strengthened them; went from Maryville to Louisville, but failed to organize there; from there to Friendsville April 16 to 17; there she held a parlor meeting and added two new members. She also had a public meeting there. April 18 she went to Madisonville and held a public meeting. A rising storm prevented any effort at organization. She went to Riceville, 21st; organized a union of ten active and three honorary members. On April 26 she went to Cleveland, and from there to Chattanooga on 28th, where she met with the Chattanooga union. Found the union very much alive, and doing good work along several lines, chief of which is the building of the working girls' home. They have between $1,000 and $2,000 toward the erection of their building, the lot having been bought and paid for and the foundation laid some years ago. They have weekly meetings and sustain a lunch room, the profits of which accrue to their local treasury. From there she went to Dayton where she held one public meeting and met with the union afterwards. This was a new union which Mrs. Gibson organized soon after convention. She found them alive and doing good work along several lines. She secured several new members at this meeting, making now sixteen members at Dayton. From Dayton she went to Pikeville where she held a public meeting on May 8, and organized a union of five members; May 9, 10 was spent at Dunlap, where she organized a union of eleven members. May 11 she went to Jasper. Held a public meeting there and organized a W. C. T. U. of eleven members; May 13 went to South Pittsburg, in beautiful Sequachee Valley, organized a union there of twelve members; May 15 and 16 she went to Tullahoma, as already reported. From there she went to Manchester where she organized a union of six members; May 18 to McMinnville. She held a public meeting there, and filled a list of appointments arranged by the McMinnville union. Among these were Rowland Station, where she organized a union of four members. She spoke at several country churches, but the population being widely scattered, she did not try to organize. She thinks this good ground for temperance work, as the country is full of distilleries. One man, a deacon in the church where she spoke, owned sixteen distilleries.

From McMinnville she came to Fayetteville to meet Mrs. Holman, the state corresponding secretary. She remained there several days, planning for the work yet to be done, and arranging convention program. On her trip she secured twelve agents for the "Beautiful Life of Miss Willard." From Fayetteville she went to Chattanooga, from there to Lookout Mountain and organized a union of five members; from there to Hill City and organized a union of eleven active and three honorary members. She worked with the Chattanooga women a few days, going with Mrs. Burris, the president, to get rooms for a soldiers' home at the terminus of the rapid transit line from Chickamauga Park. They intend to keep here ice water, correspondence tables and literature. Also a lunch and ice-cream counter.

A letter just received from Pulaski tells of Miss Kearney's visit to that place, and the organization of a union there of thirty-six members. Miss Kearney has done some splendid work in our state since the last convention. I wish she could be with us oftener, for she is a fine speaker and makes a good impression everywhere.

I append a list of the unions that have been organized since the last convention, that our state superintendents of the different departments and our treasurer may know where and to whom to write. Please preserve the list for reference and be sure to write, for we often lose new unions for lack of the manifestation of any interest in them after they are organized. The following unions, with the names of their corresponding secretaries given, were organized by Mrs. Gibson:

Dayton, Mrs. S. Johnson, Knoxville; Tabernacle union, Mrs. Greenfield (care Mrs. J. R. Lauritzen); Cleveland, Mrs. J. C. Wood; Philadelphia, Mrs. Fannie F. Waller; Loudon, Miss Bettie Bicknell; Riceville, Miss Daisy Gibbons; Pikeville, Mrs. E. L. Spencer; Dunlap, Mrs. R. Mauzy; Jasper, Miss Neeta Smith; South Pittsburg, Miss Myrtle McDaniel; Manchester, Miss Rena Sparks; Rowland Station, Miss Dora Cummings; Lookout Mountain, Mrs. A. A. Neff; Hill City, Mrs. L. A. Stafford.

Organized by Miss Kearney. (Of these unions I have the names of president instead of corresponding secretary):

Memphis (Frances Willard union), Mrs. Agnes Brinkerhoff, president, 444 Mississippi Ave.; Memphis, (Belle Kearney union) Mrs. L. S. Moore, Walker Ave., president; Memphis (Mississippi Ave. union), Mrs. Allen R. Moore, Mississippi Ave., president; Memphis (South Memphis union) Mrs. M. F. Lake, 198 Pennsylvania Ave., president; Pulaski, Miss Ethel Moore, corresponding secretary.

The last two Memphis unions mentioned were organized by Mrs. Ada Unruh. If any one knows of other new unions organized since convention, will they not write me at once?

The Tennessee state W. C. T. U. convention will be held at Jonesboro, Tenn., October 11 to 14, inclusive. The state officers earnestly hope that as many unions as possible will arrange to send delegates to this convention, for nothing so keeps alive the enthusiasm in the work as a live, well attended convention.

South Dakota.

MEMORIAL services for Miss Willard have been held in several places since my last report, among which are Watertown, Beresford, Erwin, Oneida and Canton. Collections were taken for the Temple, the amount at Beresford being eighteen dollars.

Since South Dakota has lost the prohibitory law the question of license or no-license comes up at the spring elections. The following is a partial list of the cities voting no-license: White, Brookings, Beresford, Canton, Faulkton, Lily, Woonsocket, Vermillion, DeSmet, Miller, Ipswich, Estelline, Wessington Springs. Several towns improved their record by giving the saloons a greatly reduced vote.

Our state is now receiving compliments from all over the country for being the banner state for sending volunteers to fight for their country, sending so many under the first call that none were asked for under the second call.

The ill effects of cigarets were very apparent during the military examinations in this state, however, as elsewhere, and cannot fail to have a good effect on this and coming generations. The unions are taking up the work of doing something in aid of the soldiers. At Rapid City, the home of company M, the W and Y have taken up the work of sending literature to each member of the company in rotation at stated intervals.

This is the season of county and district conventions and from reports received they are being successfully conducted. Our president, Mrs. Ramsey, is in the field nearly all the time, and is doing much to stimulate the members to greater efforts. At Webster and Aberdeen she greatly encouraged them, and Garretson appreciated her work greatly. Her first visit to the Black Hills was in May, where she met with both encouragement and discouragement. At Rapid City she held an afternoon meeting, a union Sunday evening meeting, and attended a parlor meeting and reception Monday afternoon. The day was finished by the organization of a Y. She spoke at Deadwood, Spearfish, Lead, Hill City and Keystone, greatly pleasing her audiences at all places, and benefiting the unions. Not as effective work was done as might have been if there had not been so many counter attractions. She was called home from Keystone by the illness of Mr. Ramsey and had to cancel her last three dates.

Saves Faces, Too.

A soap that won't shrink wool is best for faces, too. It's a pure soap.

Wool Soap is the one soap that is absolutely pure. That's why it is the only soap that won't shrink wool.

Most soaps eat the skin—redden it—roughen it—harm the complexion. All soaps save Wool Soap have enough impurity to shrink a woolen garment.

WOOL SOAP

is simply pure soap. Use it on woolens, because you must use it. Use it for toilet and bath because of its luxury.

There are plenty of other soaps that are half pure. Wool Soap is all pure.

THE North Carolina Woman's Christian Temperance Union met in its sixteenth annual convention at North Wilkesboro, June 11, 1898. The following constitute the officers, who were all re-elected: President, Mrs. Mary E. Cartland, High Point; vice-president, Mrs. Laura A. Winston, Morgantown; honorary president, Mrs. Mary C. Woody, Guilford College; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. E. Craven, Concord; treasurer, Mrs. N. C. Weatherly, Greensboro. The convention was called to order by the president. Devotional exercises were followed by roll-call of ex-officio members and the appointment of the usual committees.

Mrs. C. E. Craven, corresponding secretary, read her report, which gave a bird's eye view of the work done in the state. She reported sixty-six unions, five hundred honorary members of the state union, being an increase of fifteen unions and five hundred members over last year. Among the lines of work taken up by the unions are almshouse and prison work, Sabbath observance, flower mission, mothers' meetings, lectures, medal contests, petitions, Temple work.

Sunday afternoon a drill by the Loyal Temperance Legion was well given, and a recitation by the L. T. L. delegate from Henderson, preceding a thrilling address by Colonel Mowbray, bearing greetings from 30,000 reformed men of the Keeley League, with 3,000 women of the same order, each the wife, mother or sister of men who were drunkards.

At night we listened to our annual sermon, by Rev. C. W. Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, where the convention was held.

Monday morning at nine o'clock, the convention reassembled. The report of the state treasurer, Mrs. N. C. Weatherly, was read and accepted with a rising vote of thanks for her excellent report, showing a balance in the treasury of $46.12. Mrs. M. M. Davis, recording secretary, then read the report of executive committee, which was adopted by convention. Next in order was the department reports, the first being given by Mrs. White, of Guilford College, on proportionate and systematic giving. The report of Mrs. Ida J. Paylor, of High Point, superintendent unfermented wine department, was read by Miss Florina Worth, of High Point, followed by a lively discussion on the subject, participated in by a number of the W. C. T. U. women, also Rev. Sprinkle, Professor Wilbom and Colonel Mowbray. Reports were read by Mrs. Hackney on Sabbath observance; Miss Lucy Davis, of Henderson, on almshouse work, and by Mrs. Della Blair, of Raleigh, on prison work. The report on narcotics was read by Mrs. Craven, and that on parlor meetings by Miss F. Worth. A telegram was received from the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association at Winston. Mrs. Mary C. Woody, who was president of the W. C. T. U. for ten years, was welcomed by the convention, and Mrs. Cartland, the president, gave her annual address.

The report of medal contest work, read by its superintendent, Mrs. Lydia N. Blair, showed that fifty-five contests have been held during the year, and over 1,900 since the work began.

A telegram was sent to the North Carolina soldiers in camp at Jacksonville, conveying greetings from the convention to the boys.

The report of press work by Miss Stevens was read, showing that temperance sentiment is growing and editors as a rule are kindly disposed to the temperance work. Report of temperance literature by Miss Mollie Fetzer, shows that aside from the 196 White Ribbons (the state organ of the W. C. T. U.), 50 UNION SIGNALS, over 3,100 pages of literature have been distributed. The organizer's report showed that there are 21 unions more in the state than a year ago. The president has traveled over 2,100 miles, made 43 public addresses, held 24 ladies' and 10 children's meetings. On Monday evening the program was in charge of the Y. W. C. T. U. who conducted a medal contest. In the absence of its secretary, Miss Daisy Young, of Raleigh, the meeting was presided over most delightfully by Miss Florina Worth, of High Point. Following the opening exercises and the state song, "Prohibition Forever," an oration was delivered by Miss Minnie Huffman, on "Heredity and Environment." This original essay was well given and showed deep thought and study. Another original oration was delivered by Miss Ruth Worth on "The Life and Labors of Miss Frances E. Willard."

While the judges were making out their report, Mrs. Cartland asked the honorary members of the Wilkesboro union to step forward, and being led by Rev. Sprinkle, pastor of the M. E. church, they were presented to the audience by Mrs. Cartland in her usually happy manner. Mr. Sprinkle responded with a witty speech. This is the only union in the state the number of whose honorary exceeds those of its active members. The prize, consisting of four handsome books, one being "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," was awarded Miss Worth. Miss Huffman received one book, "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

Tuesday morning the department reports were continued, the first being given by Miss Frances Ufford, superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion, and which was given a rising vote of thanks. Following this report were read those of state and county fairs by Mrs. M. E. Morris, Raleigh; Temple work, Mrs. E. H. Billingsley, Statesville; flower mission, Miss Anna Woodfin, Asheville; financial agent's report, Mrs. Bettie Cunningham, Greensboro; report on presenting our cause to influential bodies, the General Officers, legislation and petition, by Mrs. Sallie Worth, Raleigh; associates, Mrs. D. H. Russell, Raleigh; Mrs. A. A. Cadwallader, Asheville. Tuesday afternoon, after the devotional exercises, the report of school savings banks was read by Mrs. Craven. She gave some interesting figures. In three cities the total deposit of the children was $33. Report of mothers' meetings and purity was given, $11.09 having been received for this work. Reports from different unions show many mothers' meetings held and some literature distributed.

A baby, whose mother was a delegate from Graham, was brought forward and a white ribbon tied on its arm.

A mothers' meeting was conducted by Mrs. Winston, who read from Exodus 2: "Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee wages." Excellent and helpful remarks on child training were made by different ones; seventy-seven children were represented by the mothers of the convention. Tuesday evening an excellent address on "Woman's Work" was delivered by Mrs. Woody. She spoke from Proverbs 31. Her remarks were pointed and telling.

Wednesday morning, the last session of the convention was called to order by the president. After the reading of minutes of previous session and report of executive committee, by Mrs. Davis, the annual election of officers took place. Mr. Vickers was presented to the convention, also the ladies who so royally entertained the delegates. Responses to Mrs. Cartland's words were given by Mesdames Robinson, England and Kinnear. The latter had put forth some effort in behalf of the cause at Hickory, where 1,500 votes had been cast for no-license. Three new, active members were then secured. Mrs. Woody suggested that a canvass be made by unions, to secure young men of the town as honorary members. Reports of committees on courtesies and finance were read and adopted. Colonel Mowbray was made a life member of the State W. C. T. U., and responded with fitting remarks. Report of resolutions and plan of work was read by Mrs. Craven and adopted by the convention.

Memorial services were then held for Miss Frances E. Willard, World's and National President, Mrs. F. M. Bumpass, of Greensboro, Mrs. Utzman, Raleigh, Miss Sarah Jennett, Goldsboro, and Rev. A. S. Billingsley, of Statesville, which were conducted by Mrs. Woody and others.

Several of the members gave earnest testimonies to the inspiration received from Miss Willard's life, and of the saintly lives of the other promoted ones.

The consecration service, led by Mrs. Winston, was a precious one. All clasped hands and sang "God be with you till we meet again." Mrs. Cartland offered prayer, and our successful state W. C. T. U. convention of 1898 was closed.

THE old truism, "man proposes, but God disposes" has proved true with us.

When convention closed, nearly six months ago, every one was enthused with a spirit of activity, and we all promised to put our shoulder to the wheel and push this coming year.

Owing to the business failure of the printer with whom our state minutes were intrusted, and consequent changes, the manuscript of the report has not materialized and our yearly report is defunct. This has handicapped our work very much. For months our state president, Mrs. Martha L. Spencer, has been very sick, but we are glad to say she is slowly recovering. Though she has keenly felt this inactivity, she has served us in her suffering better than she knew. In those anxious days when the physicians held out no hope, there was not an hour when some one of us did not speak to the Father of her, and beseech Him to hover over her with healing in His wings. We believe our prayers were heard, but it is still testing time with us, and instead of a burden of work, it is a burden of prayer. Our vice-president is in very poor health, and our recording secretary is sick; Mrs. Elder, of Decatur, who was to start out in June to visit our new unions, is down with the fever, and will not be able to take up active work until September. Notwithstanding these discouragements, we believe this unison of prayer, for our officers and workers, will bring power to overcome, and be a precious baptism for service.

The work of Mrs. Annie Brown in April was very encouraging. She organized five new unions, and resuscitated three others, adding 115 women to the W. C. T. U. ranks, with eighty-five honorary members. Ten L. T. L's were started. She traveled about 345 miles, making expenses and salary, thus costing the state nothing, which was a grand showing to her credit. At one place a sister plead with a brother to sign the pledge; he finally did so, and broke a bottle of whisky out of the church window. At Huntsville they have a rescue mission, and though it is not under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., our women are officers and workers in it. Birmingham is making preparations for a grand occasion at the laying of the corner-stone of their new Mercy Home very soon. Selma has taken up work among railroad men, holding gospel temperance services, getting up interesting programs and advertising the same in the local papers, thereby creating much interest. The beautiful memorial service they held for Miss Willard seemed a new beginning, as it has also been in other places. A couple of months ago we found a live W. C. T. U. woman at Nat, in the mountains, four miles from a railroad, a teacher in the academy, who hails from Chicago. She had been quietly holding mothers' meetings among the few women, and medal contests in the school; one can judge of the earnest work and enthusiasm by the fact that one contestant walked six miles to be present. On writing to her, she replied that there was no material to organize a union with, but she had done what she could, and invited us to visit her school when she returns from vacation, and Bridgeport union will be most happy to establish fraternal relations with a view to mutual help.

Georgia.

THE eighth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, No. 2 of Georgia, met in Bethel Baptist church, Americus, June 16–21. A complimentary audience greeted the convention at nearly every session. Welcome address in behalf of citizens was delivered by Rev. B. F. Brimson; in behalf of the churches, by Rev. Munson, pastor of Bethel Baptist church; in behalf of local union, by Mrs. B. M. Simmons, secretary of union. They were responded to by Mrs. A. W. Wimberly, superintendent of franchise of state W. C. T. U. No. 2.

Beginning with ante-executive meeting held the afternoon of the 15th, all sessions of the convention were instructive and interesting, largely due to reports of effective work done by local unions, state superintendents, corresponding secretary's report, and a rehearsal of doings of National Convention at Buffalo, by our honored president, Mrs. A. S. Bowen. Greetings were received from National president and corresponding secretary, Thurman W. C. T. U., Georgia W. C. T. U., No. 1, and from other sources, all inspiring and encouraging. The annual address by our president, Mrs. A. S. Bowen, was pointed and indeed fine. Recommendations encouched therein setting forth most excellent plans for future aggrandizement, were discussed and adopted by convention. Devotional exercises preceding each session and noontide prayer-meetings were visited by showers of blessings coming from our Heavenly Father, in whom we trust and believe that through and by Him we can do all things.

Mrs. A. S. Bowen, our beloved and faithful president, was re-elected, also Mrs. Jennie Wynne White, vice-president; Mrs. M. A. McCurdy, corresponding secretary; Miss M. T. McCouattria, recording secretary; Mrs. M. A. Ford, assistant recording secretary, and Mrs. M. W. Price, treasurer.

Memorial services in charge of Mrs. M. A. McCurdy, were very impressive; the life and demise of six members in our state ranks, and the brother of our ex-president, Mrs. G. S. King, were spoken of in tender terms through papers and eulogistic words. When the name of our lamented Chieftain, Miss Willard, was mentioned, many hearts were saddened afresh. A paper read by Mrs. M. W. Price was interesting and instructive, concerning the life of Miss Willard. Address delivered by Mrs. A. S. Bowen, state president, on "The Loss Sustained," was affecting and inspiring. Collection was taken for the Temple. Resolutions concerning the death of Miss Willard were adopted by convention, together with others pertaining to the welfare of the cause.

The Sabbath day intervening between the two last days of the convention was passed by members listening to the annual sermon to the state W. C. T. U. No. 2, delivered by Rev. Munson, and the visiting of churches throughout the city, and therein introducing the objects and principles of the W. C. T. U. to the extent that many gentlemen became honorary members of the organization, and a goodly number of ladies joined the white-ribbon ranks who heretofore had been indifferent to the welfare of the cause of temperance. The local union of Americus is not large, nevertheless, its president, Mrs. Viola Hart, her brave standard-bearers and their friends, entertained us right royally, and we believe that its membership will be enlarged as well as more opportunities presented for the populace of the city to pause and take under consideration the great need of getting rid of the nefarious liquor traffic which now disgraces it, as the result of prohibition meetings being held, W. C. T. U. No. 1 organization being perfected and our going to them in convention all during the same week.

A Y Camp-meeting.

Every object, animate or inanimate, that comes within range of a District Y girl's vision, seems to speak of it, even the very leaves on the trees appearing to whisper to each other their hopes for the success of our new enterprise. In fact, it is a subject of such paramount interest here, that everything else pales into insignificance beside it, except the work for our soldier boys, which is ever present in our thoughts in these days of alarm and uncertainty.

Ever since Camp Alger was established about ten miles from here, the boys in blue have been familiar figures on our streets, and from the time when they first began to frequent the capital, all sorts of work for them has been enthusiastically and efficiently carried on. The Y's, not to be outdone by their elders among the W's, nor by the churches or the Y. M. C. A., began immediately to hold sewing bees, at which comfort bags galore were made and filled, and then later, when the temperance headquarters were opened each day from twelve until two o'clock, in order that the soldiers might find rest and refreshment there, they assisted in the rooms and found much pleasure and profit in the work. On the Fourth, when every one was rejoicing over our victory in Cuba, the girls of headquarters Y were in charge of this commissary department of ours, and dispensed hospitality to about one hundred and fifty bronzed volunteers, who thanked them heartily for the dainty and yet substantial lunch that was such a pleasant change from the monotony of a pork and hard-tack diet.

But to return to the camp-meeting. The latter part of the present month the W. C. T. U. is to hold a camp-meeting at Washington Grove, Maryland, a beautiful spot that for twenty-five years has been used for a camp-meeting ground. It has a large tabernacle capable of seating about a thousand persons, and is laid out in broad, shady streets and avenues lined with summer cottages, while, chiefest among its advantages is the fact that it is only twenty miles from town.

Now, at this camp-meeting, the District Y's, assisted by those of Baltimore, are to have entire charge of one day, viz., July 22, and to the perfecting of plans for this day all their energies are now bent.

We will hold five services, at 9:30, 10 and 11:30 A. M., and 3 and 8 P. M., respectively, the first of these to be a devotional service conducted by Miss Callahan, of Washington, and Miss Hammond, of Baltimore. The second, a Bible reading, by Mrs. Ewing, of Washington, and the 11:30 service, an address by Mrs. Clinton Smith, president of the District Y Branch. After this we will have a basket lunch in the grove, will then return for the afternoon service, at which representatives from each of our Y's will give brief, trenchant talks upon various, sensible, up-to-date topics of sufficiently wide interest to appeal to every one.

At night, last but by no means least, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, general Y secretary of the National W. C. T. U., will take charge of the meeting and make an address.

Musical numbers will be given by a ladies' quartette from the Y's, who will also lead the congregational singing, and by various others from among our members.

One of the best things in connection with it all is that, if more than a hundred people go out to the grove with us, we can secure a reduction of fifteen cents per ticket, which sum will be used to help swell the Temple fund.

We are all working hard for success, and we feel that with God's help we can certainly attain it, through the able generalship of Miss Hattie G. Homer, our chairman.

REC. SEC. DIST. Y.
Washington, D. C., July 5, 1898.

Official.

A Call by the National Officers.

The General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union hereby request their loyal constituency throughout the entire country to put forth some special effort for the aid of our soldiers in the various camps. The local unions in Washington, Chattanooga, Key West, Tampa, Mobile, New Orleans and other points have plans on foot whereby a great work may be done if only sufficient funds are furnished them for carrying it forward. Mrs. Thacher, National superintendent of this department, is overseeing all the work and is planning for it wisely and well. Her thought is, so far as possible, to have each state union care for its own troops. We earnestly indorse her call and ask that not only comfort bags or housewives be sent to the front, but that sums of money be raised for prosecuting this work. Send contributions direct to Mrs. Thacher, at Sea Side Park, Ocean county, N. J., or to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, at National Headquarters, who will be glad to forward the same.

Yours for the welfare of our soldier boys,

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS,
Acting President.

An Appeal to Local Unions.

DEAR SISTERS:—You will remember that at the last National Convention the executive committee indorsed the sending out of an appeal to the local unions for a gift of two dollars from each to the National W. C. T. U. for carrying on organizing work in needy fields. Many of the unions have responded generously. Many others have not yet been heard from. In these stringent times it is especially necessary that this request be observed if the work is to be carried forward as it should be. Calls for organization are coming to us from all parts of the country. Will not those local unions which have not yet responded heed this request and send two dollars directly to Mrs. Helen M. Cor. Secy's Notes.

General Officers' meetings are the order of the day at Headquarters, even though the thermometer has been steadily mounting heavenward since Mrs. Stevens came to us. Many details for the next National Convention are already under consideration, and we are believing it will be in every respect a fitting Memorial Convention to our great leader, who is not lost but gone before.

The especial attention of state presidents is called to the paragraph on page 64 of the National Report: "Miss Willard proposed giving banners, as a personal gift, to the local, county, district and state union which should make the largest gain in membership during the year." It is, of course, easy for the National union to decide which state has made the greatest gain in membership, but in order that this fact may be ascertained correctly with reference to the county, district and local unions, there must be careful records kept. Note that this is not a per cent gain, but is the largest number gained by any one local, county, district or state union. It is planned to have the banners made in miniature design of the white-ribbon star spangled banner, which Miss Willard so loved, and which followed her even to her last resting-place. The final decision concerning this gain must rest with the treasurers, inasmuch as only paid membership can count. But let there be a special effort put forth on the part of all the other officers to aid the treasurer in collecting dues and in keeping account thereof. If only each local union will do her part, the grand result will be easily ascertained. Why may not each state president come to the next National Convention prepared to hand in to the National corresponding secretary a statement like this: "The local union in my state, which has made this year the largest gain in membership is ——. Gain ——. The county union making the largest gain is ——. Gain ——. The district union making the largest gain is ——. Gain, ——." If this plan can be carried out, it will be very easy for us in Convention to decide to whom the banner should go, even though there be 10,000 local unions scattered throughout the nation. It is high time we were beginning to plan for this specific work, and we are sure that the unions will be very eager to receive this gift, which comes to them not less truly from our beloved leader because she has passed beyond.

Summer meetings are in full sway. The grand prohibition rally at Prohibition Park is already reported, but many others will also be held. Mrs. Bourne writes: "Our Ocean Grove Summer school will be held July 25 to 27; the one at Ocean City, July 17 to 18; Mount Tabor, August 10. Mrs. Rounds begins her Bay View Institute on July 21, with the usually fine program. Both the treasurer and corresponding secretary of the National are to speak at Lake Bluff next Sabbath, in connection with the Sociological Congress held there. Mrs. Hoffman has charge of the Lexington, Ky., school. The summer work at Chautauqua begins this week, Mrs. Addie Northam Fields being again in charge. A daily prayer-meeting will be held, and much done in the way of interesting people in our work. On Temperance day, August 3, Colonel Bain will deliver his address on "The New Woman and the Old Man." Immediately following this, there will be the usual temperance conferences held in connection with the Woman's Club. It is greatly to be desired that a large number of white-ribboners be present this year. Excursion rates will be granted from various points near Chautauqua, and the auditorium ought to be alive with white ribbons on the afternoon of August 3. Let me especially appeal to the unions of Western New York, Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio. They being nearest Chautauqua, we must depend upon them largely for attendance. Surely you all desire to go to that place of places for a summer outing at least one day during the season. Why can you not plan to make that one day August 3, or, if you can stay for a longer time, why can you not make that stay the week between the dates August 3 and 10? You will get good and do good if only you will so plan.

Mrs. L. E. Bailey, who has done excellent organizing work during the year, particularly in New York and New Jersey, has something to say concerning the Honor Roll: "Were the unions more careful and thoughtful to report the names of those whom the lecturer secures as new members, our Honor Roll would each week contain a long list, instead of none at all, or very few. I have secured numbers that are not yet reported, and although we know the dues are paid, still one, two or three letters back over the ground fail to get the correct report. Will the dear women of the local unions over New York, and all the states who read this article, please help to lighten the burdens of the organizer in this respect and save them much time and postage by being careful and prompt in sending to them the report of new members secured, as fast as dues are paid?"

It is hoped that this exhortation will be heeded. The Honor Roll for the week consists of the name of Mrs. Helen D. Harford, but, if her name were printed each time ten members have been secured, it would appear thirty-two times. Not one of our organizers is doing more efficient work than is Mrs. Harford. She has been for nearly a year in Kansas, and has worked in nearly every county, not only organizing new unions and securing new members, but she has covered by collections her expenses for the trip, including her own small salary, and has left money in the county treasury. If only there were a sufficiently large organizing fund, such work might be done in many states which now need helpers.

The most encouraging report which has come to Headquarters for the past few months has come from the Thurman union of North Carolina. Miss Lynch, its president, writes: "Whereas last year we paid for 380 members, this year we have paid for 606. We will report 355 W's, 251 Y's and twenty dollars has been paid into the state treasury from the L. T. L's." No wonder Miss Lynch writes, "I am proud of our Thurman union." I am sure the heart of every white-ribboner will beat in honest pride with hers. This union has for the past year successfully maintained a state paper that is excellent both in matter and in style and has proved a most efficient agency in carrying forward the work of the organization. Thus two temperance papers are published in North Carolina, not one only as was inadvertently reported some time time ago in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. We warmly congratulate our sisters of the Thurman union and believe they are but entering upon a still larger field of work.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Substitutes for Horsford's Acid Phosphate are Dangerous.

Because they cost less, many substitutes are offered, some of which are dangerous, and none of which will produce the same effect as the genuine. Insist upon having "HORSFORD'S" whether buying a bottle of Acid Phosphate, or "phosphate" in a glass of soda.

Treasurer's Corner.

Treasurers and others will note that all checks and express orders must have attached revenue stamp of two cents. The postoffice will charge an extra two cents for money order, but no stamp will be attached, as this is government business. It has been decided that express companies must attach the stamp, and the telegraph company's responsibility as to the tax is not fully settled. One cent stamp must be attached either by the sender or by the company, which will be officially decided later. Do not neglect to put your initials and the date, as you are responsible for the cancellation of stamp in this way.

These months are times of great financial dearth. Will not each state treasurer send any dues lying in her treasury that belongs to the National? The last of July the third installment of appropriation for the superintendents must or ought to be sent, but the wherewithal is not at hand, nor is it in sight. We have never failed to meet these quarterly payments, and shall be very sorry not to meet these obligations promptly. Will state presidents please give this matter a little attention? We have many pledges from locals that have not been paid. Will the locals that have pledged the $2 please send, if possible, this month, and will not every union see to it that this contribution to the National is sent forthwith?

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions offered by those who are interested in the effort being put forward by the National Woman's Christian Temperance union to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it was by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and at the request of Miss Willard that she accepted the foregoing trust.

Obituaries.

Entered into rest, June 19, 1898, at her home in Princeton, Mo., MRS. IDA F. BURR, aged fifty years. Mrs. Burr was a devoted member of the W. C. T. U., having served her local union for years as president, also the third district as treasurer and president. She was state superintendent of THE UNION SIGNAL and a state organizer and lecturer for several years. Her death is greatly deplored by the band of workers with whom she labored.

MRS. CARRIE PIERCE, after a very short illness at her home, Gansevoort, Saratoga county, N. Y., died July 1, 1898. She was a sincere Christian and earnest temperance worker, and had been treasurer of the local union for ten years. She will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends.

Died, at her home in Cleveland, O., July 2, 1898, MRS. T. C. JOHNSON, aged seventy-three years. Mrs. Johnson was a faithful member of the W. C. T. U. from the days of the Crusade, and although debarred from active work by ill health during the past few years, she retained her interest and appreciation of the forward movements by constant reading of THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE Chattanooga, Tenn., union has opened a Soldiers' Rest in a vacant store building. Bunting, flags and drapery for decoration have been donated. The use of a Conover piano has been given. Comfort bags and reading matter are distributed, and everything is being done for the comfort of the soldiers. The National has donated literature to this "Rest."

MRS. LOUISE ROUNDS, president Illinois W. C. T. U., left on Thursday, July 6, via Steamer Manitou, for Bay View, Mich., to conduct her W. C. T. U. institute at that place, which opens July 21. She will remain there during the entire month. The institute is one of the most popular and successful among the many similar ones held throughout the country.

THE department of soldiers, sailors and marines, at Washington, furnishes a free lunch every day to the soldiers. On the Fourth many of the boys were at liberty, and patronized the ladies' cooking, which reminded them of that of their mothers. The headquarters Y had been called upon to assist that day, and furnished an elaborate and delicious luncheon. More than one hundred soldiers partook of the luncheon, and enjoyed the cool breezes and pleasant room. Three dozen palm-leaf fans have been donated and made a very acceptable present. The free lunches will be continued long as there are soldiers in that locality.

MRS. M. L. WELLES, superintendent of soldiers and sailors, at Chattanooga, writes: "Kindly say to the women not to send comfort bags, but housewives, such as their husbands and fathers used in the civil war. The soldier must have everything in smallest compass. We are making the housewives with a flat compartment just large enough for a small testament and with a pocket to hold two dozen buttons. We put a spool of cotton on a wire across, then fill up with flannel leaves, into which we put one dozen needles, pins and safety pins, this takes very little room. In the testament we put a pledge card and a few selected leaflets. We do not need night shirts, unless in the form of pajamas. And please do not send daily papers. No one looks at a paper over a few days old."

THE Anchorage of Elmira, N. Y., held its annual reception July 1. The Mary Towne Burt dormitory was dedicated and a suitable musical and literary program rendered. There is to be a Frances E. Willard room of honor on the third floor. This room is to be occupied only by the girl standing highest in deportment, according to a system of merits and demerits, and who has been longest perfect in deportment. The room is to be furnished with dainty white furniture, to contain a large engraving of Miss Willard, also a copy of Hoffman's picture of Christ, engraved as requested by Miss Willard, "Only the golden rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man," and under it, "Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more." On a stand will be a teacher's Bible, and the life of Miss Willard. These surroundings should inspire any girl to a pure and noble life.

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson Answers Questions.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am frequently importuned by letters through the National Temperance Hospital to give prescriptions that are substitutes for liquor in its various forms. I appeal to you to set me right before this inquiring public. In the first place no physician who understands and respects his profession will give a prescription without first making a diagnosis. When people write to me about "heart-failure," "what would you give for heart failure?" my reply is, "I must first know the cause of the heart-failure."

There are as many causes as there are diseases—the heart always fails before people die. There are a few cases in which the respiration stops first, and vice versa, but the two great vital functions, respiration and circulation, generally keep close tab upon each other. The substitutes for alcohol are powerful drugs, and capable of more immediate harm than alcohol—which is a slow poison—ammonia, strychnine, digitalis, camphor, nitro-glycerine, and others I might mention should be prescribed in doses and frequency according to the case, and the judgment of a physician. Even physicians are led astray by the excitement at the time in cases of collapse, and their patients suffer and sometimes die from over stimulation. None of these remedies add anything worth while to the system, they simply whip the nerve cells into greater activity, thus bridging over the dead point in the human machine, just as you can whip a tired horse into one supreme effort, but woe be unto you if you do not know where to stop!

Frequently the benefit supposed to be derived from alcohol in collapse comes from the hot water in which the alcohol is administered. About the only remedy I should dare to recommend is hot water. It may be given as a drink or as an enema. The injection should be given as high up in the bowel as possible through a long, soft rubber tube, and it is more easily absorbed if it contain a portion of salt—teaspoonful to the pint—the temperature may be as high as possible without scalding the flesh. Here again great caution is necessary. Even good nurses when frightened have been known to burn patients with hot water. Not every person in collapse can be treated with hot water. This is especially true of cases of "sun-stroke." Here there must be discrimination between the two classes, those with pale, cold surface and those who have hot, congested head and face. Hot water to the pale, cold patient, while ice is indicated in the hot, congested case. So, even so simple a remedy as hot water needs judgment and discrimination in its application, hence the impossibility of saying absolutely to people, do this or do that.

The National Temperance Hospital, so far as I am concerned, can not enter into the patent medicine business; there is no remedy, even water, that can not be harmful if applied without knowledge. How to make knowledge universal is a big, hard question. People have been known to pass through medical college and yet not be able to make a diagnosis. The prescriptions of such people are given without precision, and may do more harm than good. How, then, can the public at large hope to prescribe successfully from having heard that Dr. So-and-So said that this or that was good for—what? When the what is known, the what to do is comparatively easy.

The indiscriminate way in which policemen handle drunkards and apoplectics, and often epileptics, is a good illustration of my point. Policemen are not to blame. The policeman cannot make a differential diagnosis between the various unconscious human bundles lying upon the street. Diagnosis is one of the most difficult and evasive studies. To master it marks the difference between the great physician and the routine practitioner. I know of no easy method by which this masterful power can be given to the general public.

Notes and Comments.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS and Miss Gordon left on Thursday, 28th, for Portland, Me., where they will continue to give attention to the general business of the W. C. T. U. and to preparations for the Convention at St. Paul. Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson left on the following Saturday for Chautauqua, where she has charge of the conferences. From there she will go to her home for a few weeks of greatly needed rest. In the meantime, Mrs. Helen M. Barker will look after the interests at Headquarters. THE UNION SIGNAL force has returned from vacation, and will present to our readers as rapidly as possible the material which has accumulated the past two weeks.

ON July 15, at the call of the General Officers, the National executive committee met at Headquarters to consider the present status of the Temple. The response to the official call was most gratifying. Nine constitutes a quorum of the National executive, and twenty-three were present at this called meeting. There have been regular sessions of the committee where most important business was transacted with a smaller number present. The meeting was representative, also, from a geographical standpoint. There were present the five officers and seventeen state presidents and proxies. As three of the General Officers are also state presidents, twenty states were represented. These were not alone such states as are closely contiguous to Illinois but there were embraced in the number the influential Eastern states of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and the District of Columbia, as well as the Western and Southern states, Kansas, Nebraska, Arizona, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana. Two only of the states, Nebraska and Arizona, were represented by proxy. Miss Anna A. Gordon was, by a unanimous rising vote, made a member of the committee for the session. The appropriateness of the act is evident. Miss Gordon is one of the officers of the World's W. C. T. U., and the Temple is a World's as well as a National interest. She also knows, as can no other human being, Miss Willard's heart and mind concerning this and all other features of W. C. T. U. work. As one of the executive committee said: "When Miss Gordon stood with her hand upon Miss Willard's picture, it was almost as if the sealed lips again spoke and as if our leader were with us in the flesh."

THE action of the midyear executive committee is fully set forth in the official statement and resolutions published on page 9. The statement as first given by the General Officers was amended in several minor points, the changes being chiefly verbal and not in the least affecting the financial statements, which Mrs. Carse herself, in the presence of the executive committee, acknowledged to be practically correct. As amended, the statement was adopted by the executive committee with a large majority vote and ordered to be given to the public as it appears on page 9. On the first resolution the yea and nay vote was called, resulting as follows: Yea—the five General Officers of the national union, Miss Anna A. Gordon; the presidents of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, District of Columbia, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, No. 2; Kansas and the proxy from Arizona. Nay—the presidents of Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the proxy from Nebraska. Subsequently, a counter statement was issued by the four who had voted in the negative with the addition of the name of the president of Ohio. The latter is a Temple trustee together with the presidents of Iowa and Wisconsin. Since the statement was sent out fifteen of the executive not present at the meeting have been heard from, and of that number fourteen most heartily approve the action taken on July 15 and one regretfully agrees to it.

SINCE it will doubtless be queried why the usual order was departed from, and the executive committee summoned in midsummer instead of waiting till its next regular meeting, just prior to the National Convention, we give herewith the reasons which actuated us in making the call. July 1 had been, since the last Convention, the date fixed for retiring the Temple Trust Bonds. All the efforts, both of the General Officers and the Temple Trustees, had been making toward that date. It was inevitable that, just prior to it, those in whose hands had been placed so great a responsibility, since the loss of our leader, should meet to consider the present status and future prospects of the enterprise. Having met we learned many facts not hitherto known to us. The small amount available for retiring the Temple Trust Bonds was in itself a startling revelation. The interview with Mr. Field made certain, by his own statement, the fact that his promised gift of $50,000 was to be in stock, and not, as had been stated by Mrs. Carse, in cash, and that it was not to apply on the $300,000 and would not be made over until after the whole $300,000 should be raised, and the Temple Trust Bonds retired. It was also learned that this gift of $50,000 would be made from $118,400 worth of stock which Mr. Field still holds not covered by the Trust Bonds, and that if the Bonds should be retired, and his gift of $50,000 in stock be paid, the W. C. T. U. would still be obliged to pay him the balance of $68,400 before it would really control the stock, since Mr. Field holds a contract giving him power to vote all his stock until the entire amount, $118,400 be purchased. All this has no reference whatever to the still larger amounts to be raised to secure the ownership of the Temple. (See statement). On learning these facts we felt in honor bound to give them at once to our closest counselors, the National executive board. We also felt that the rank and file should know all that we ourselves knew in order that the responsibility of decision as to whether or not white-ribboners would continue to labor for this enterprise might rest upon the individual white-ribbon women. It goes without saying that it became at once a matter of conscience with us as to whether we should continue in view of these facts, to solicit funds for the Temple. On all these points we desired the counsel of our executive board. Immediate action seemed necessary in view of the speedy coming together of our great constituency in county, district, state and National Conventions, and in order that this blow to their hopes might not fall upon them in its first severity at our sacred memorial Convention. It also seemed vital that the question should be thoroughly canvassed before the National Convention, lest an undue amount of time should there be given to one interest to the jeopardizing of all others. In view of all these facts prompt action was taken. That the committee recognized the necessity for this action is shown in the following resolution, which was offered by the president of Arkansas, and adopted by the committee: "Resolved, That we express our appreciation of the motives which prompted our General Officers to call us together; that we tender them our sincere sympathy in the many difficulties and perplexities attending their work, and that we give them all honor for the spirit they have shown throughout this meeting." It is confidently believed by us, from some of the last statements made by Miss Willard to those nearest to her, that had she been with us she would have felt that right steps were being taken. That knowledge, and the fact that we believed we were doing our duty in the fear of God, nerved us for this trying endeavor.

Spain Sues for Peace.

The Spanish Government Sends a Message to President McKinley.

SINCE the last issue of THE UNION SIGNAL the war has progressed rapidly. The great naval battle off Santiago was speedily followed by the surrender of the city and a large territory in the eastern provinces of Cuba. Twenty-four thousand Spanish soldiers laid down their arms and are to be sent back to Spain, on parole, as soon as transports can be provided. The American flag floats over Santiago and an American military governor controls the city.

Following the surrender of Santiago, General Miles sailed for Porto Rico with 3,400 troops and captured the city of Ponce, 50,000 population, without losing a man.

On July 26, the Spanish government, through the French ambassador at Washington, presented a plea for peace. This has been under consideration by the president and cabinet, and at this writing an ultimatum has been prepared and will be presented to Spain, offering peace on the following terms:

Independence for Cuba, under the supervision of the United States, Porto Rico to be ceded to the United States, without reservation, a coaling station retained in the Philippines and the Spanish flag to be removed forever from the Western Hemisphere. No money indemnity is named. There will be no armistice during diplomatic negotiations. Spain must accept or reject the terms offered, and in the latter event, the campaign will be vigorously prosecuted.

NOTES.

AT a recent series of Sunday meetings held at Chickamauga Park, 450 men professed conversion.

THE inmates of the Joliet, Ill., penitentiary have the war news, in condensed form, printed in the prison every afternoon at two o'clock.

PERSISTENT petitioning and letter-writing by wives and mothers of the soldiers have had the effect of closing up three of the regimental canteens at Camp Thomas.

YELLOW fever has proved the strongest enemy with which our troops have to deal in Cuba. General Shafter reports over 4,000 cases, but it is in a mild form and the death rate is light. Should the war continue no assault will be made on Havana till autumn. Our men are being removed to the mountains as fast as possible.

POWERFUL influence is being brought to bear to induce President McKinley to suppress the canteen nuisance. Bishop Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church, is circulating a petition to the President asking that "hereafter no beverages containing alcohol, or other dangerous substances shall be sold or dispensed to any soldier or sailor while he is in the service of the United States and on duty."

Temperance.

THE governor of Washington says that no liquor can be sold to soldiers at army canteens in that state while he is governor.

IDAHO'S prohibition state committee is preparing to send out 50,000 copies of campaign documents between now and the election.

THE Scientific American for July 2 calls attention to the great value of cold tea flavored with a few drops of lemon juice, and cites Sir John Hall, K. C. B., on the Kaffir war of 1852, in which a march of a thousand miles was covered by 200 men in seventy-one days on cold tea, without either wine, spirit or beer. It contains a maximum of thirst-quenching energy in a minimum of space.

BONDS given by persons in behalf of saloonkeepers, as required under the city of St. Paul ordinances, are penal and not indemnity bonds, and the bondsmen are liable to the city for the full face of the bonds should events prove the bad character of the place and the failure of the owner to make of it a resort of good repute. Judge Simpson, of the district court, has so held in a decision handed down in the famous Stockholm Olsen case.

DR. B. F. LYLE, of the Cincinnati hospital, who is in charge of the department reserved for the tuberculosis patients, is credited with the following statement: "Secure fresh air and good food; abandon alcohol and opium." The results of his treatment fully justify his position.

MINNESOTA prohibitionists have nominated the following state ticket: For governor, George W. Higgins, Minneapolis; lieutenant-governor, B. B. Haugan, Otter Tail; secretary of state, A. S. Stone, Stevens; treasurer, A. H. Gilmore, Fillmore; auditor, B. U. Weld, Cottonwood. Mr. Haugan declined.

LIEUT. COL. BENJAMIN F. POPE, chief surgeon of the Fifth Army Corps, before the embarkation of the troops, issued a memorandum of instructions to the soldiers of this command for the preservation of their health in the tropics. He advises against the use of drugs as a routine practice, especially quinine and purgatives, and all alcoholic beverages.

TWENTY-FIVE saloons went out of business at Terre Haute, Ind., on July 21, because the city council refused to reduce the amount of the saloon license from $250 to $100. The saloonkeepers claim to have had a promise that if the Democrats should carry the council at the May election the license would be reduced. They did carry the council, but in subsequent caucuses some of the councilmen refused to abide by the promise.

About Women.

DR. KATHERINE KOLLOCK is medical inspector for the Girls' High School in Philadelphia, Pa. During the last year over three thousand pupils were sent to her for examination.

DR. CATHERINA DE FARSENBROECK, who has attained fame as a gynæcologist, has been appointed by the Dutch government as a member of the Medical Examining Commission.

OF the 123 women students who have entered Berlin University this term eighty-eight are German, twelve Americans, four Austrians, and Britain, Hungary and Sweden contribute one student each.

DR. BELLE GEMMEL, a graduate of the medical school of Michigan University, is at present performing the duties of county physician in Salt Lake City, Utah. Her father holds this office, and she is his assistant, practically conducting all the affairs of the office.

IT is said that there are but four women jewelers in the United States, and one of them is Mrs. C. P. Barnes of Louisville, Ky., recording secretary of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. It is also said of Mrs. Barnes: "She has been the sole proprietor, manager and buyer of one of the oldest jewelry stores of Louisville since the decease of her husband."

MASE TAKAHASHI, a Japanese woman, is the business manager of the leading and oldest Japanese newspaper in Hawaii, the Shinpo. This is the only Japanese daily in Hawaii, and is circulated in the Japanese colonies throughout the world. Mase Takahashi is the wife of the proprietor. She speaks English and Hawaiian and always carries her notebook when gathering news.

POSTMASTER GORDON, of Chicago, has appointed sixty-two women for service in the city postoffice. He selected them from the list of women who had passed the civil service examination for clerkships, and placed them on the list of substitutes for assignment hereafter as the exigencies of the postoffice demand. The Chicago postoffice now has in its employ 118 women clerks. Four of the new clerks are colored women.

NO law in the Philippines is more quaint than that which relates to the property of married persons. Property of a bride is never by any chance settled on a husband, and if the husband be poor and the wife well off he can only become at most an administrator of her possessions. After death the property goes to her children and blood relatives, unless a deed has been executed in her husband's favor. A married woman bears her maiden name, but adds to it that of her husband with the prefix de. Children bear the names of both parents.

MRS. FRANCES E. BEAUCHAMP, assistant recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U., has been appointed by Governor Bradley, of Kentucky, as a member of the state board of control of the houses of reform for juvenile offenders. The board consists of three women and three men. Two new reformatory institutions are to be built, one at Lexington, the location of the other not yet decided upon.

THE war department has commissioned Mrs. A. M. Curtis, wife of the superintendent of the Freedman's Hospital, at Washington, as a recruiter of colored nurses. As qualifications they must have had yellow fever or have nursed through an epidemic at some time, and possess physician's certificates from their homes stating that they are good nurses. Mrs. Curtis has started south and will secure twenty-five colored women as nurses, expenses and wages of $30 per month to be paid by the government. Some of these nurses will be in the service of the Red Cross, and others will be sent to posts assigned by the government.

MISS ELIZABETH H. DENIO, for eighteen years professor of German Philology and History of Art, at Wellesley College, has lately been promoted to the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, multa cum laude, at the University of Heidelberg. Miss Denio's scholarship and perfect command of German have done much to open the way for other women at German universities. She gained entrance at Leipsic, '83–'85, and hers was made a test case for a degree, but the time was not ripe. The year '96–'97 Miss Denio studied at Berlin, and there prepared her thesis, but this university is too closely under the eye of the Emperor for even the most liberal professors to carry a case in favor of recognition to women, as yet, and she repaired to Heidelberg, where a few women have received recognition of late.

Educational.

MR. and Mrs. E. J. Lindsay, of Milwaukee, will give Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, a new gymnasium, which will be one of the best equipped in the West.

BY the will of the late A. S. Van Nickel, of Hazelton, Pa., Brown University receives $45,000. By the same will Princeton receives $45,000, and Lafayette $30,000.

DR. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS has resigned the presidency of Brown University to accept the superintendency of the public schools of Chicago. Albert G. Lane, former superintendent, becomes assistant to Dr. Andrews.

BY the provisions of the will of Eliza J. H. Andrew, widow of the war governor of Massachusetts, $10,000 is bequeathed, under certain remote contingencies, to the University of Virginia, and sums not named to the Museum of Fine Arts and the Kindergarten for the Blind in Boston.

AT a recent meeting of the trustees of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, the board received by mail a check for $20,000 from Henry L. Higginson, treasurer of the J. W. and Belinda Randall Charities Corporation of Monson, Mass., to be used for the erection of a building or as a permanent fund.

AT the national convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association of the United States, held at Lake Bluff, Ill., recently, prizes in the oratorical contest were awarded as follows: The first prize, of $50, to I. H. Wood, of Newton, Mass., Theological Seminary, for his oration entitled, "Remember." A. R. Spicer, of Eureka, Ill., college won the second prize, $30. His topic was "Guardianship." D. L. Colvin, of Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, won the third prize of $20. He spoke on "Neal Dow."

At Home.

FERDINAND W. PECK, of Chicago, has been appointed by President McKinley as United States commissioner general for the Paris exposition of 1900.

THE city council of New York has passed an ordinance prohibiting profanity and unseemly language in public. An offender is liable to arrest and a fine of not more than $10 nor less than $2.

Enlist for Their Sake.

BY L. R. MURRAY.

[Read at the Illinois State Prohibition Convention.]

TUNE: "Little Pleader," or "Has Papa Been Here?"

THREE cheers for "Old Glory," by the flag we will stand,
Three cheers for McKinley, say we.
The horrors of war he'd avoid if he could,
But Cuba, he says, shall be free.
All honor to Dewey and Hobson, the brave,
And Sampson and Schley on the sea;
They're fighting for freedom as God's righteous cause,
Three cheers for the brave and the free!

CHORUS:

But what are you doing in Freedom's dear name
To teach Uncle Sam his mistake?
And what for the drunkard, his wife and his child?
Enlist in this cause for their sake.
Oh, boys, uphold our flag!
Enlist in this cause for their sake.

We have a country whose sorrows will grow
With "good-bys" to husbands and sons.
Just think of the heartache, the blood that shall flow,
When the smoke clears away from those guns!
But freedom for Cubans with souls like our own,
Is worthy our steel and our men.
Our women shall pray on and weep for our boys,
We honor this cause in their name.

We're neighbors, we're brothers, with calls nearer home,
And losses more grave than the Maine,
Its cost was four million, yet we sink that each day,
Shall the mourners and crew cry in vain?
Aye! two hundred sixty and more every day
Go down to a poor drunkard's grave.
And these are our boys, you love them, you say,
Oh! what are you doing to save?

Your brother's keeper? Yes, you are the one,
No dodging skips duty so plain.
You are as guilty as sellers of rum,
If you vote that the rum fiend remain.
The need is more soldiers who know how to fight,
Who dare to take aim for the home.
Then march up the line with a ballot that's right,
And vote it forever, "no rum!"

Dorothy Strong's Story.

BY MRS. E. H. CHASE.

I NEVER recall the picturesque town of Mayfield without listening to an unsung song in my heart which throbs in tune with the beautiful river, the Piscataquis, and catching the sound of the wind through the firs, and hearing again the melodious notes of the bobolink and the meadow lark. In my earliest recollection of Mayfield its beauty was all unknown to the outside world. Yet I am sure it was not lost. It was not only full of surprises to those who loved to search out its secret haunts, but ever in sight was rock-ribbed, snow-crowned Katahdin looking down from his northern throne among the hills, and at its feet the Piscataquis, like a golden ribbon unwound, found its way through fertile intervales and fern-fringed forests, now placid and still, and now foaming and surging and dashing onward to join a larger life and with it to flow on to the sea.

It was here, in the early days of the town, that Dorothy Strong lived. Whenever I think of her girlhood as it has often been pictured to me, I am reminded of Priscilla, the maiden of Plymouth. She was the beauty and belle of Mayfield. Naturally plump, a little below the average height, pure pink and white, with never a shade to show the ardent kisses of the sun, brown-eyed and golden-haired, Mistress Dorothy certainly held rightful claim to being beautiful; and yet it was a wonderfully unconscious beauty, for Dorothy cared much more for an hour in which to train her flowers, or for a little leisure to have some fun with the boys and girls of the village, than for all the beauty in the world. She was a model maiden withal, thoughtful, industrious, helpful, and possessed of a good measure of the firmness of the Puritan stock from which she sprung. In summer she sung over the butter and cheese making, and in winter she spun the yarn and wove long webs of cloth for the garments of the household.

When, at twenty, Dorothy became the wife of Robert Goodwin, the teacher of the winter school, everybody was well pleased that she would remain with them. She would still sing in the choir, and they could depend on both Dorothy and Robert to lead the other young people into safe paths.

The home to which Robert took his bride was sheltered by gnarled old orchards, and surrounded by beds of old-fashioned flowers. Nestled under the lee side of a grove-crowned hill, its fields sloped southward to the shining river, and looked out over the cultivated hills and valleys beyond. For a few years the lives of this young pair flowed on as smoothly as did the waters of their own loved stream below their orchard. The little farmhouse became a place of joy, echoing with mirthful voices and the patter of children's feet. Here the young people came for their innocent good times, and here the fathers and mothers came for an evening of rest and recreation.

Among those who came oftenest to the farmhouse was John Willard, son of a well-to-do manufacturer of a neighboring town. The gentle winningness of Robert, and the brightness of Dorothy attracted the young man, and many an evening he spent at the farm.

There had been a report that John Willard loved strong drink, and word had been brought to Robert that, at Colby Brown's raising, he had been laid away out in the sweet fern by the big rock, to be carried home in one of the farm wagons, because he had drunk too much. Robert knew that this was true, but it only made him the kinder to John, and more anxious to keep him from temptation.

"I think if he had a mother or sister it would be better for him," Dorothy said as she laid a plate for John.

"I am afraid, Dorothy, that it is now too late unless he gives up and calls on God," Robert answered.

"But," persisted Dorothy, "if some good girl were to marry him, one who was loving, strong and capable, and who would be firm and yet make home pleasant, I believe John would give it up. Just see, Robert, how much he delights to be here with us. The old aunt at home is crusty and fault-finding, and his father is absorbed in money-getting. It is little wonder John does not like to stay there. Here things are different. We are young, and the house is cheerful and bright, and he would never think of going into temptation were he to remain with us. If he had a home like this—"

"And a wife like mine?" said Robert, kissing the earnest face, "he might stay there for a time; but John is weak, Dodo, and I sincerely hope that none of our Mayfield girls will try that method of reforming him. We must ask him here often, and help him as we can, but I would not like to see him the husband of one I love unless he had first given up and sought God and His righteousness."

"Would not a good wife lead him into that?" persisted Dorothy.

"If he would not be led by the girl he loved, Dodo, how could she as a wife expect to lead him? No, Dorothy, dear, no girl can effect a reform by marrying a man who drinks. Let her wait if she will, but let her not marry a man guilty of such weakness as I know John Willard to be."

"Could she not bear even great sorrow for the sake of saving the man she loves?" asked Dorothy, still unconvinced.

"If she could bear it, if she should prove herself strong enough, has she a right to entail upon her unborn children the curse that so often follows such sin?" asked Robert gravely, and Dorothy, knowing how deeply Robert felt on this subject, forbore to argue further, and yet she still held the opinion that if John had the right kind of a wife he would yield to her even as Robert often yielded to her when she proved firm; and Robert, one of a thousand in sweetness of disposition, did yield and gladly, if it did not happen to be a matter of conscience.

The days went on and John was still a frequent visitor at the home of the Goodwins; and yet there was another who came, more noiselessly, perhaps, and yet who stayed more persistently. The keen east wind of New England had found its way about the farm at some time when Robert was least prepared for its chill, and, from what seemed at first but a slight cold, was developed that unmistakable and dread disease, consumption. Scarcely had the second little one learned to climb upon his knee and to lisp sweet words to his loving ear, than the Master called for Robert, and Dorothy was alone with her little ones. Friends were about her, the heavens were as blue and the beautiful river sparkled as brightly as ever; but alas, Robert was not there, and Dorothy saw and felt nothing but darkness and loss.

John came, and his tears flowed fast, as he talked of his friend, but Dorothy's eyes were dry, and the firm lips close shut except at night when she tried to face the darkness of her life alone. "Why had God done this? Who should say it was done in wisdom, when the whole countryside was being benefited by having this pure man among them, so true was he, and so ready always to help those who so much needed help?" And so Dorothy grew harder and called God's will in question.

In vain the old white-haired minister talked with and prayed for her. In vain her father and mother gathered her and her babies under their own roof, and strove to set her feet again in the beautiful way. Three summers came and went before Dorothy had gathered up the broken threads, and begun to be at all like her old self.

She saw John often, and he was a link that bound her to her lost treasure. She had heard, in a dazed way, of many a fall, and, as of old, had been sorry some one did not stand by to save him. His father was dead, and the old aunt had gone South to her people. "John was all alone. It was no wonder he fell into temptation." Thus Dorothy reasoned, and yet she could not forget the words of Robert: "He could not be trusted, Dorothy." The children were wild with delight whenever John came to the farm, and Dorothy herself was conscious of feeling a cheer she had not felt for a long time when she knew that John was there. She said to herself it was because she knew him to be out of harm's way when with her father and her children. At last John asked her to be his wife.

Why not? John was safe with her and hers. Without her he was lost. What was her broken life good for now, if not to spend in trying to save this one who so clung to her? She was strong, and John was weak. She could hold him and help him, and he would become a useful man. Not like Robert, to be sure; no other could ever be like Robert; but a good and useful man.

Who ever knew such reasoning to fail! Just as the October sun had kissed the groves into a brilliance that only New England groves know, the little farmhouse was opened again, and John and Dorothy, with their little girls, began a new life.

For a year or two all went well, or seemed to do so. To be sure, there were stories in the village where John once lived that sometimes when he came with his grist, he could not get home with it, and must stay over; but Dorothy did not hear these tales, and John always came in the morning as loving and as kind as ever, even if the miller had been "hurried the night before, and he had been obliged to stay at the village."

The little Robert was nearly two, and trouble was coming fast. John did not always stay over now, but often, when he came home, there was a flush on his cheek and a wildness in his eye that Dorothy could account for in but one way. The terrible thirst was upon him, and she was powerless to stay it. In vain she entreated, and in vain her friends tried to stand in the way of greater trouble for her. The going down was fast. Not that John did not love his wife and child, but he was too weak to stand, even by her aid.

When little Willie came, with his mother's face, but with large, frightened eyes, as if looking out into a world of terrors, John kept at home and worked the farm, and promised to do better:

but such a promise is of little worth if God's name is not on it as surety, and if His arm is not held fast for support.

The record of the next year was like that of those just passed—falling again and again, trying to stand, but ever falling. John never went out that Dorothy did not tremble for the incoming, and if a neighbor called, her lips seemed powerless to move, so great was the fear at her heart of a worse trouble than she had yet known. At last there came a time when John did not come home at the usual hour. All the long night Dorothy walked the floor of the little dwelling. The great cloud that hung above her seemed about to burst; and when the first glimmer of dawn showed over the hills, she left her sleeping children and set out along the lonely country road toward the town. How far she had traveled, weary and forlorn, she could not tell, but it was light, fully light, when, far ahead, she could see a human figure, wavering, uncertain, now walking in zigzag lines, and now falling and groveling on the ground. Her heart stood still a moment, and then a great weight seemed lifted from her. "Thank God, he was safe, even if in such a condition."

How she got him home she never knew, but the first she realized of what was happening around her, her mother stood by her, and John was there, paler, older looking, but himself; and her newborn babe was in a quiet slumber beside her. As the events of the last week swept through her mind, and she took in the meaning of her mother's smile and felt the clasp of her husband's hand as he knelt by her bedside and began to repeat the Lord's Prayer, she laid her hand on the infant's head and whispered, "He shall be called John." And so, through Christ, the elder John was saved, and for a brief season there was peace in the household. But as the little John grew in beauty and sweet baby ways, the mother began to fear. Two years went by. Two anxious, weary years to this father and mother, and yet baby John could not run about and play like his brother. Later came the doctor's verdict: "He will never be like other children." And when baby John did begin to walk, the little figure, shambling and zigzaging along the garden path, was an exact miniature of that other one that Dorothy had recognized out on the country road in the early morning light so long ago.

Who shall picture the agony of that father and mother when they realized that the tender child of their love was doomed to bear, perhaps through a long life, the sin of his parents? Sensitive John! The brown curls began to whiten fast, and the stalwart form to take on a shrunken and prematurely old look; and Dorothy, between her anxiety for her husband, and her horror at the result of her sin, grew pale and faded, and sick at heart.

John's health steadily failed, and in the spring Dorothy laid him beneath the springing daisies in the shadowy church yard. John had been saved, but at what a fearful cost!

In the early summer came another child to the sorrowful home, but it was another child like to baby John. Who shall give a reason for this? True it is, and, although not afflicted to the extent that John suffered, yet all his life, too, must little Harry bear the mark of a drunkard's child. Now Dorothy showed her strength. Now life began for her. Not a life of pleasure, but of strong, earnest work. The terrible heartache was there, but her children had need. To save them from a fate worse than death she must be strong. But, in spite of her care, in spite of her tears and prayers, her Willie, John's second boy, inherited his father's love of liquor, and it was not until dissipation had wasted him, and laid him on his deathbed, that his mother's entreaties availed with him to seek the Source of all strength.

Her girls and Robert were Dorothy's helpers and her pride; and year by year, while John and Harry grew gradually more helpless, Dorothy toiled, keeping them all at school, thankful that these were left to her; and so, feeling that with these there would never be greater trouble than she had already passed through, she grew peaceful, and even happy, for they were all united against evil, holding fast by a Hand that never faileth.

Afar from the rush and traffic of cities, in the beautiful old town where Dorothy began her life story, she lives with her boys, John and Harry. Nearly a century has passed since the brown eyes opened on the beautiful hills and the winding river, and yet God permits her to stay and look after her loved ones—invalids both—who can never leave the house, yet true and pure, are living out their lives of suffering and deprivation in meekness and gentle piety. The old neighbors are gone and new ones have taken their places, yet the story of Dorothy is told as a warning to many a young girl who is hesitating as to which road to take.

Growth of the Social Purity Movement.

BY ALICE LEE MOQUE.

IT is gratifying to note that progress along the line of social purity is as evident as in other fields of rational and scientific investigation, about which the world at large thinks and speaks more, but which it, in reality, needs less. To-day, the wise, philanthropic spirit not only seeks to cure, but studies effect to learn cause, appreciating the time-worn axiom, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Those who have learned the lesson taught by the past half century are cognizant of the great strides the world has taken along educational and moral lines. Not more than two score years ago, we are told not one of the literary or religious publications of that day dared speak openly of the great fundamental truths based upon natural law, an ignorance of which dooms the youthful victim to disease, mental degradation and moral death, the result of the solitary and social sins which then as now existed everywhere. Even the Rev. Dr. John Todd, a man not lacking in the courage of his convictions, yielded to the monstrous error and false shame of his day, when publishing his famous "Student's Manual," by considering it necessary to hide beneath the Latin tongue the wise counsel, which to-day the world begins to appreciate every boy should be given; and being taught laws, instructed to obey them.

In that day the popular idea was to keep the young pure by keeping them in ignorance of evil. A mysterious silence was maintained relative to all facts pertaining to the great problems growing out of sin and its consequences, information which to-day is recognized as the best safeguard of inexperienced youth. The wise parent instructs her child why he must shun the fire, not wishing to delay the information until he is burned, and learns the full agony for himself and the penalty of ignorance, the sure result of breaking an immutable law.

In the past almost without exception, not a single paper or periodical raised its voice in the interests of social purity; there was not an available book for the enlightenment of the young, designed to show them "the error of their way," or to teach them the disastrous and inevitable consequences of solitary and social vice. The dawn of the present era of moral education was ushered in by the Young Men's Christian Associations, which began to grow and multiply as their beneficent influence began to be felt and appreciated. To their curriculums were added instruction along sexual lines. Wise teachers recognized the necessity of not only training the soul and mind, but of educating the body. To the evening classes and work in the gymnasium were added timely talks to young men on the vital subject of personal purity, until to-day no youth who attends the course of annual lectures need be in ignorance or unconscious of his personal responsibility.

To the pioneer work of the Y. M. C. Associations have been added in later years the benign influence of the Christian Endeavor movement and other Christian organizations, who each year, at their large annual meetings, with the boys in one tent and the girls in another, are instructed by those who know how to quicken the conscience and moral sense, by addresses on these subjects so necessary to the well-being of this and future generations, the truth being unfolded to them fully, but purely and delicately. With due recognition of the great good accomplished by the influence and agency of the various White Cross societies, the reform movements brought about by the alliance of purity workers, and the ever increasing volumes of purity literature, yet perhaps more than any other agency, one growing intelligence upon this subject is due to the general enlightenment of women, who are beginning to realize the immense responsibility of maternity, and as teachers of the race, the divine opportunity that is theirs, as moulders of the pliant clay, opportunities that no legislators can or would wish to deprive them of—the glory that is woman's only as mother of the human race.

The noble band, known as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, while at first only an organization designed to fight the debasing crime of drunkenness, is to-day a supreme influence along every line of social and moral reform. What the sex has accomplished by organized effort was clearly shown last winter in the wide-spreading influences that were felt far and near, throughout the land, as the result of the first National Congress of Mothers, which owed its inspiration to the loving thought of one expectant mother, and its fulfillment to the generosity and philanthropy of another. Years before the National Congress, the way was cleared, by the informal little "mothers' meetings," held frequently by the Chautauqua circles and by the "mother-talks" organized throughout the land by the W. C. T. U. While not forgetting our manifold and unnumbered blessings, let us rejoice that the situation to-day in our beloved country, on the question of morality, is one of surest promise. The columns of not only the religious, but secular press, are being opened more and more to the consideration of social purity and to the exposition and elucidation of the laws governing the health and well-being of the human family.

THE UNION SIGNAL has fought the good fight, but it no longer stands alone to wage war on the army of sin and uncleanness, for a goodly company of staunch publications stand beside to lend a hand in the battle for truth, purity and right. No longer need the untaught soul fall into sin, ignorant of its dire consequences, for the work of enlightening the young has begun.

Such books as Dr. Stall's and Dr. Mary Wood-Allen's, with their frank exposition of facts and practical information, would have been an impossibility twenty years ago, but they are sure signs of the times. The recognition that they have received proves that the old error of silence and false shame has had its day, and that the world has at last learned the lesson that ignorance is not innocence, and that to instruct youth as to the consequences of sin is the real safeguard upon which purity bases its hope for the future health and morality of the race.

If space permitted, it would be interesting to note the changes which are now rapidly taking place in medical circles. Years ago the average practitioner was uninformed, even ignorant, not only upon the subject of purity, but upon the laws governing the reproductive organs and their functions, and it is not too much to say that the tendency of medical thought catered strongly to the depraved views and inclinations of the male debauchee, who excused every vice on the score of immorality being a necessary evil and one of the "natural" inclinations of the sex. To-day we rejoice in a more rational philosophy, and recognize the truth that sin is always followed by its inevitable consequences, for all of the human family, regardless of sex. How much of this enlightenment may be due to the purifying dominance of women and the teaching of women physicians, we may not hazard, but probably more is due to their beneficent and uplifting influence than the world knows or the male practitioner would be willing to admit.

It is not claimed that the human family is already regenerated and willing to give up their fallacies of past generations to accept the new dispensation; but the truth is mighty and will prevail, and to the intelligent observer the birth has come of a newborn morality that will tend to purify and bless, a morality that will hasten the time when the human body may become the fitting temple of the Holy Spirit.

A Dream Nursery.

BY MARY C. GLASS.

I HAVE had dreams of a nursery but never of a nurse maid. In my dream there was always a good, motherly woman in the kitchen, but the nursery was too precious a thing to be trusted to a stranger's hands and influence. It was the choicest room in the house, between my own and the sitting room, in the southeast corner, with large windows which let in floods of sunlight clear across the room. There was a large, open fireplace, with lovely "story-tyles" all around it, and a pretty mantle where the little ones kept their "art (?) treasures," valentines, Easter eggs, candy hearts, etc.

It was hard to do it, but the fireplace had to be securely screened for safety. On the middle of the floor was a firm, clean, pretty carpet. The walls were painted a delicate gray, with a border of wild roses, the woodwork the same soft color as the walls, for in my dream I thought it best to give my little ones lovely surroundings, and to teach them to take good care of them.

I had a few good pictures, copies of real gems of art. Sweetest of all a beautiful "Madonna and Child," for little children always love "The Baby Jesus." I had a few blooming plants on a window shelf. Over the windows were simple white curtains which could not keep out God's blessed sunlight. Do you know that one of the most fascinating plays in the world to a baby, is to catch its apron full of sunshine and to empty it into "De mamma's lap"? Blessed the mother who is willing to take the "sunshine" they bring into her heart as well as into her lap. Ah! God sends us many blessings by their little hands which we are too stubborn to accept.

In my "dream-nursery" there was a blackboard with colored crayons; there were little drawers for playthings, each child having his own, even the youngest. In my dream I strove to teach them to be courteous, kind and gentle. I strove also to see that each one had "justice," never compelling any one of them to always give up to another simply because it was older or younger, for though that practice may possibly make a saint of the one who gives up, it will surely make a tyrant of the other. Auerbach says: "The sense of justice in children is very strong; let mothers beware, for though infants cannot reason they can feel."

There were little chairs and a little table at which they took their simple breakfast and a little lunch at nine and three o'clock as no "pieces" were allowed. Each child in turn presided at the little lunches, so that they might have practical lessons in table etiquette. Dinner and supper were taken with father and mother, having to eat alone being punishment enough for any ordinary law-breaking. They had a few carefully selected toys. There was an old clean blanket for soap bubbles, and dolls for boys and girls.

You see my "dream-nursery" was not occupied by a poor, lonely, only child, but was overrun with children — healthy, happy, sunny-hearted little ones—not angels, but little human children, with faults to be corrected, tempers to be governed, good traits to be developed. You must remember that my "dream" was dreamed before the day of the kindergarten, when each real mother tried to mother her own.

In my dream nursery there was always a resting place for the busy "little mother," where she could give and take the comfort and encouragement we all so much need. Over in the corner between the window and the fireplace, in a softly-cushioned chair, sat "the good fairy of the nursery," a dear, little, sunny-hearted white-haired angel of peace, who wore with gentle dignity her double crown of silver hair and grandmotherhood. She wore glasses and a cap, and had her knitting, for real dream grandmothers always wear caps and knit.

As the sweet-toned nursery clock struck two, my dream children took off their own shoes, and each climbed into its own little bed and slept for an hour, because it was the rule and they knew no other way. In hot weather they were undressed, but in cold weather it was not necessary. They did not sleep in the nursery, for it is more restful to sleep in a fresh room at night.

I never dreamed that I made it a prison in which my children were compelled to stay, but they stayed in it for the delightsomeness of it when it was too cold to live out of doors.

This dream was dreamed "way back East" where there is snow and wind, but here, in Southern California, the children's and the birds' paradise, where the sun shines for three hundred days in a year, where there is plenty of room out of doors, where the beautiful pepper trees, with their fern-like leaves and crimson berries are as beautiful in January as in June, our little ones have no more need of nurseries than our robins have of barns. I am happy to say that very many of our California children are being allowed to enjoy a real old-fashioned, bare-footed, blue-apron, sun-bonnet, out-door, mud-pie childhood.

It has been said, "God could not be everywhere at once so He made mothers." Surely mothers have to be everywhere at once, in thought and care for their children. Let us try to exalt our motherhood; let us try to approach toward God's thought for us, when He endowed us with this crowning glory of glories.

"A partnership with God is motherhood,
What strength, what purity,
What wisdom should belong to her
Who helps God fashion an immortal soul."

Vacation Days.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Ah, these are delightful days! It is "Fresh Air Mission" with me for two whole weeks, during all THE UNION SIGNAL vacation. A high, rolling plateau, nearly a thousand feet above sea level, and upon it wide stretches of pale golden color where wheat and oats gracefully bend to the wind and sweep away to native oaks reveling in multitudinous leaves polished to the brightest green by rain and sun; luxuriant fields of corn standing like an army with sabers; herds of fawn-colored Jerseys rolling their luminous eyes over a sea of green which they are not able to encompass in spite of all their industrious nipping; pretty white farmhouses with capacious out buildings suggestive of thrift, and an eye to color in the tall hollyhocks, gay nasturtiums and deep dyed purple clematis; native forests where oak and butternut trees spread out their arms and embrace the roadway that responds like cork to the horses' hoofs; flocks of sheep with their little lambs; rabbits scurrying in the fields; a chipmunk upon his hind legs on a post impertinently eyeing the pageantry of our passing; bluejays and robins in the tree tops; the whirr of a mill filling all the wide atmosphere; a long lake to the right glinting with fish and glowing with yellow and white water lilies, luxuriating upon their willowy stems and dish-like leaves, among a forest of fresh water algæ; long tongues of sand lapping out into the blue water; springs pouring out their cold streams in a ceaseless flow and a never ending gurgle in a cuplike basin; trees like a forest of needles piercing the far horizon; and over all a luminous canopy of sky so gorgeous in glintings and sheets of color, or so marshalled upon by battalions of clouds that one seems always in the presence of principalities and powers that gently drop upon the world rain and sun and sleep and all the delicious glories of life and love—Such a spot is a fitting one in which to cross the feet and fold the hands and let nature soothe and heal. It is a place where the tangled threads of life float out into long silken strands. It is a place where weary, attenuated nerves knit together again strong and pliable, a place where the gray matter of the brain gathers together its forces and becomes "as good as new." It is fresh air mission all the days when one can sit amid such scenes and let the eyes follow flowing water off among the watercresses and think, or not, as one chooses.

Two weeks of soaking in sunshine and reveling in color is worth more than months among the stones of a city. Yet two weeks is a short time to heal the wounds of fifty weeks of battle—the daily routine of cars morning and evening with all the intervening hours filled with inexorable mental work, not to mention the warfare with the stones, and the multitudes that strive for goodly Babylonish garments and wedges of gold. After such a conflict it is a great thing to step out of the fight and draw a long breath of country air down to the bottom of the lungs and cool off, and if need be, be bathed and massaged and rolled up and left to darkness and nothingness for a time, that there may be new life.

A friend of mine had a ten-acre farm of small fruits, berries, etc. So long as he worked all the time he never "got on." He took to hiring some help and gave himself a chance to study the markets and decide upon the best way to reach them with his products. To-day he is master of himself and his farm and is "getting on" in comfort, instead of being ruled with a ten acre rod of iron. It is a good thing to conquer even a work basket instead of allowing it to be mistress. It is a real triumph of good sense when the threadbare signs begin to show on one's inner selves, to say to the almost finished outer garment, "Get thee behind me, Satan," until more important things are clothed upon, and it is more sensible to say it before the threads get thin.

The most impressive lesson of my vacation is, "Be mistress of thyself." "Ah," says a weary doubter, "this may do for housewives who can control their time, and have many quiet hours and days all their own, but what of those shut up in cities, circumscribed by office hours and dire necessities?" I answer, to all the book-keepers, office girls, seamstresses, school teachers, literary drudges, business women and to everybody, take a vacation and if possible go to the country, lie on the grass and look into the sky, shut your eyes and let the sun soak you through and through and old mother earth's electric currents tone and strengthen, if it be only for a day, and you will vibrate anew to the calls of the world with pleasure instead of pain.

One who is ready to vibrate with pleasure.

SUSANNA M. D. FRY.

Palmyra Springs Sanitarium, Palmyra, Wis. July 22, 1898.

From Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell.

TO THE UNION SIGNAL:—A copy of your issue for June 2 lies before us, containing editorials on the letter of Mrs. Leavitt, honorary life president of the World's W. C. T. U., to The Voice.

We note: 1st, your representation that it is necessary to assume a different attitude towards the liquor traffic according to custom and public opinion, as prevailing in different countries.

We note: 2d, your declaration that in the full light of a verbatim report of Lady Henry Somerset's testimony before the Royal Commission on Liquor Licensing Laws, you yet boldly declare your loyalty to her as a leader for the W. C. T. U. and state that you would have voted for her re-election at Toronto—at the time that she was supporting a scheme for the government-management of the Indian army evil.

Had there been any doubt as to the full import of these declarations from the official organ of the W. C. T. U., it is fully set at rest by your further declaration that "the whole subject seems to us to reduce itself to two questions, the one of expediency, the other of Christian charity." No one could read your editorial utterances in full without knowing that the "charity" is to be expended on Lady Henry Somerset, and that the expediency is to be applied to a compromising attitude of the W. C. T. U. towards the liquor traffic and towards the state regulation of vice, in case it is necessary to do this in order to preserve a false peace. This plea of "expediency" rather than principle pervades the apology for Lady Henry Somerset's attitude towards these iniquities, all through the articles.

This utterance on your part greatly clears our way by making patent to every W. C. T. U. woman what we have been trying to put before them, viz., the fact that the W. C. T. U. has been changing its attitude towards the liquor traffic and the social evil, from one of absolute hostility to one of compromise. It matters little to us that it is stoutly denied that the W. C. T. U. has "lowered its standards;" descriptive phrases, if they have an objectionable sound, may be dropped. The fact remains that the official organ of the W. C. T. U. advocates a change of attitude towards these iniquities to suit the country one lives in, and to suit the social rank of the individual member of the W. C. T. U. It is a bold, clear challenge, and the responsibility of rallying around any such standard of compromise now rests on the rank and file of the W. C. T. U., for the fact is now openly published to them.

For our own part, we believe we have immortal souls that will be saved or lost, according to whether or not we uphold the same moral standards the world over, without regard to custom or rank; without regard to whether the multitude is with us, or we "walk alone with God in the dark."

To-day we send our withdrawal of local membership in the W. C. T. U. Henceforth we are clear from the blood of all those who, in the organization, make compromise with iniquity. Heretofore, we have felt it a duty to sound the trumpet and warn of the approach of the enemy, as God commands the watchman to do in Ezekiel 33: 1-9. That task is over, for the banner of "expediency" is now held aloft, and the leaders of the W. C. T. U. call on the rank and file to follow. The enemy is here. On each one individually now rests the responsibility to act. We go our way, a widely divergent one from that of the leaders of the W. C. T. U. But be it known that like the house of David, the sword will not soon depart from the W. C. T. U. for the folly that hath this day been wrought in Israel.

The Temple.

Reply to the Statement of the General Officers by the Temple Trustees.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBONERS:—You will no doubt be as much pained and surprised as the Temple Trustees that the General Officers should feel it necessary at this crucial time in the history of the enterprise to call an executive committee meeting and present the statement which they have in regard to the Temple, which will be found on another page.

From it one is led to believe that the president of the Temple Trustees built the Temple on leased ground in opposition to the vote of the National W. C. T. U. Convention, that she commenced the building before she had secured the $500,000 as directed by the vote of the Convention, and issued the Temple Trust Bonds without consulting with any one.

These points have been fully refuted in a pamphlet published several years ago called "A reply to Mr. J. B. Hobbs." There is no need, therefore, of going over the ground again, as the National Minutes will fully sustain this statement, at least in regard to the first two charges, and a letter which Mrs. Carse holds written by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens on behalf of Miss Willard will show that they advised her to issue the bonds or do whatever she considered best in the matter on her own responsibility. This she did, and her action was fully indorsed at the next Convention.

In the statement above referred to they say, "The ultimate date set before the women for the raising of this money [the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds] was July 1, 1898." No such limit is set in the circular letter they sent out the last of March asking for funds for the Temple, but, on the contrary, the National Convention next November is named as the limit. It is true that Mr. Field's offer of $50,000 was limited to July 1, 1898, but as he had before kindly extended the time, there was no fear but he would do so again, and on June 25, the president of the Temple Trustees, then in Boston securing pledges from Temple Trust Bond holders, telegraphed to Chicago that Mr. Field had extended the limit of time to January, 1899. Of this fact the General Officers were duly informed five days before their meeting of July 1.

In regard to the interview of Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon with Mr. Field, July 1, it is stated they asked him if his subscription was cash or stock? His answer was, "Stock, of course." In replying thus he must have forgotten the terms of his agreement with the president of the Temple trustees, when he wrote in her subscription book, "Chicago, February 16, 1897, Marshall Field, on condition that the above bonds [Temple Trust] are all paid and cancelled, fifty thousand dollars ($50,000)." Before writing the above he stated he would not accept stock toward the $300,000, only cash or Temple Trust Bonds would be counted. There could be no other inference drawn than that he meant to pay his subscription in cash in order that the Temple Trust Bonds might be liquidated. Unfortunately the very day (July 9) that the president of the Temple trustees returned from her eastern trip, Mr. Field left for Europe, so that no explanation of the unhappy misunderstanding could be secured. There is no doubt, however, felt by her but that Mr. Field will make good his pledge in cash, as he is a man of the strictest integrity and of the finest sense of honor, and would be the last person to bring disaster upon the Temple enterprise through any failure on his part. The above misunderstanding with Mr. Field seemed to be the determining reason for calling the executive committee meeting of July 15, by the General Officers, and was the cause of such a large majority of the committee voting to recommend "that no further call to local unions or efforts by them be made to own or pay for the Temple." The Temple trustees hold that such a decision is both very unwise and unjust, under the circumstances.

The last National Convention by a large majority voted to continue the work of raising funds until the next National Convention. The war with Spain caused a long delay in setting in motion the plans formulated by both the Temple Trustees and the National Officers. We have held on to the building through seven years of great business depression, during which the president of the trustees has secured promises of large contributions as soon as business revives, which revival has at last become a fact. Lady Henry Somerset, acting president of the World's W. C. T. U., during the past month has sent out to all the branches of the organization under her control a call for contributions of one dollar, more or less, from each member to secure the Temple as a memorial to Miss Willard, and in the statement sent out by the National W. C. T. U. executive committee they concede that this may be expected to bring in about $15,000.

The executive committee of the Canadian W. C. T. U. has recently sent out a similar call to its members, but decided to retain all money so raised in their own treasury until they have full assurance that the Temple is to be made Miss Willard's memorial, when they will pay it over to our treasurer.

When the Temple Trustees sent out a call to the Woman's Clubs of America to give one dollar, more or less, for a memorial to Miss Willard, many of them had disbanded for the season, so only a few have been heard from. The Woman's Club of Denver sent $100 and a few others sent smaller amounts. We are confident that a goodly sum will yet be contributed by the Woman's Clubs in the fall when they again convene.

The Temple Trustees hope in time to secure from the sale of the fac simile copy of Miss Willard's beautiful life size painting on porcelain, a goodly sum for the Temple, as all profits accruing from its sale go for this purpose. We also expect large returns from the fifty cent cards we have sent out to unions—no less than 500,000 have been distributed, but all this seed-sowing at much cost and labor has received a serious setback by the action of the Executive Committee just at the time, when, after waiting seven long years, the tide of success was turning in our favor.

The following is the correct statement up to date of the amount in cash and pledges that have been secured toward the payment of the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds:

Marshall Field's Subscription	$50,000
Other Cash Subscriptions	23,100
Bonds	8,600
Subscribed by Bondholders	87,420
Miss Dow, Custodian, Cash	20,000
Temple Trustees, Cash	20,000
Total	$209,120

Beside the above, the Temple Trustees hold a large number of pledges, amounting to about $20,000, but as the time of payment is uncertain, it would not be safe to count them in the $300,000. They also hold pledges for about $20,000 of Temple stock, to be paid when the $300,000 has been secured. The president of the Temple Trustees, now that she has about accomplished her task of securing pledges from the bondholders, has started, within a few days, a subscription to get a hundred persons to give $1,000 each; already several names have been secured. The amount is to be paid when the entire hundred names have been obtained. She hopes to complete the $100,000 subscription by the National Convention now that business has so greatly improved.

As has often been stated in explanation of the matter, the great majority of leases on down town property in Chicago are for 99 years or less. We secured, therefore, a very exceptional lease from Mr. Field for twice 99 years—198 years—on a low valuation of $800,000 (the property is now valued by the best real estate experts to be worth over $1,000,000) at a stated rental of $40,000 per year (or five per cent of the value) without revaluation. Meaning, say, at the end of ten years, if the property was to be revalued, we would have to pay $50,000 a year rental instead of $40,000, which we now pay. Consequently there being no revaluation, it is very much to our benefit rather than a cause of regret, as is set forth in the statement of the General Officers.

Another complaint which is made in their statement must surely have been written without due consideration. They say, "Bear in mind the fact that, even though the million and a quarter that the Temple cost were to be raised the W. C. T. U. could not own Willard Hall, since it stands on leased ground." If we hold a title, as we do, of ownership of the ground for two centuries, it gives us about as bona fide ownership as reasonable people would ask for, but no doubt the W. C. T. U. generation that will be living two hundred years hence, if the ground has not been donated to them or purchased by them before that time, can renew their lease for another couple of centuries with the privilege granted of having the ground revalued. So we cannot see why we would not have entire ownership of Willard Hall as long as the building stands.

Another statement of the General Officers will, we are sure, be a great surprise to most white-ribboners. They say, "Interviews with business and professional men and women have clearly revealed the fact that there is no lack of interest throughout the nation in a proposed memorial to Miss Willard, and no lack of appreciation of her matchless character and marvelous work, but that the Temple does not appeal to the public as a fitting memorial."

In reply to this, we would say that public opinion must be very fickle indeed, as an entirely opposite expression of it is contained in the letter sent out by these same General Officers three months ago.

The document begins as follows: "Your General Officers have taken counsel of those most competent to advise regarding a suitable memorial to the memory of our great leader, Frances E. Willard. It seems to be the best judgment of all whom we have consulted that inasmuch as the Temple has already been erected, and is so closely connected with her name and that of the W. C. T. U., we can not do better than unite in a supreme effort to raise, by subscriptions from people of wealth, the sum necessary for its purchase. We are encouraged to make this endeavor because of letters which have come to us from all parts of the country urging the plan. Newspapers have also expressed an interest in the project, and prominent individuals have visited us with the same suggestion."

As the delegates to the next National Convention will be called upon to decide this issue, it is not necessary for us to discuss it further.

In their statement the General Officers say, "Miss Willard bravely threw herself into the breach, pledging to give her fifty-ninth year to an effort to retire the Temple Trust Bonds."

They also say: "After her 'going away,' the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U., as soon as they could rally from the shock of their great loss, took up the burden her tired hands had laid down, pledging themselves to send out her letter, and by every means in their power to further the enterprise." The letter above referred to was sent out the last of March, and it was well on in April before the plan was presented to the local unions. At this time the women of the W. C. T. U. were all busily engaged in the duties which so fully occupy all women in the home during April and May. It was the first of June, as you all know, before active work to secure the Temple as Miss Willard's memorial, was begun in earnest. At this time the public had forgotten all minor griefs in their great absorption in the war with Spain. It was most difficult to start any movement unless the war was a factor. Only one month of active work had been given towards securing the fund when the General Officers met and decided that as money had not come in as rapidly as they expected, they would call an executive meeting and use their influence to have all further contributions towards the Temple cease. They succeeded only too well in influencing the majority of the executive committee to this course, as will be seen by the resolutions they passed. While regretting this action on the part of the executive committee, the Board of Trustees agree with the five members of the committee, who made a written declaration that they found nothing in the statement made to the executive committee that justified the change of attitude of that body.

The Temple Trustees are incorporated by the laws of Illinois for the purpose of securing money to purchase the stock and bonds of the Temple for the W. C. T. U., for whom the building was erected. They are fully convinced that their course of action is plain, that there is no other way, nor do they desire other, but to go on paying off the Temple Trust Bonds as rapidly as possible and justify the faith and confidence of the members of the local unions by vigorously carrying forward their intention to make the Temple a memorial building to our great leader, Frances E. Willard.

That thrilling scene the first day of the National Convention at Buffalo, last autumn, can never be forgotten by white-ribboners, when our Chieftain stood forth, and in tones that thrilled the assembled thousands, said:

"Now, in conclusion I will say in regard to the Temple, I believe the enterprise will succeed. . . . We are in debt not legally but morally to the bondholders. I shall never rest what time I live till that debt is paid. . . . I stand by the Temple whatever the results to me. If it were voted here to do no more for it and I were not elected, I should go out and beat the bush to get the money exactly the same. I have not been well for years, but now I feel so well again, and I dedicate my renewal of health and my fifty-ninth year to the Temple. I dedicate the little that I have—they tell me my home might sell for sixteen thousand dollars—I dedicate it to the interest of the bondholders. I have nothing on earth that shall not go into that enterprise. . . . I am going out to follow that path of the Temple nor miss its track not once any more than the sleuth hound misses the quarry that is ahead of it. . . . I thought of Garibaldi and what he said in the great campaign in Italy. You know about his white horse (and he used to be right at the front), and one time the soldiers fell back, their ranks had been decimated and he knew it, and he simply turned in his saddle, and cried out: 'Soldiers, I am going to die,' and without looking back to see if they would follow, he rode ahead; but gallop, gallop, they came closing in about their leader. I am not going to die, I am going to live. Anybody that wants to follow, follow; anybody that must falter, falter."

How can the women who listened to that impassioned appeal do otherwise than work, to at least carry out Frances Willard's heart's wish, the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds? Let their determination be strengthened by the thought that up to the last hour of consciousness, her great soul yearned over the success of the Temple enterprise. Hear what she says to her physician, as recorded by Anna Gordon, on that last Sunday afternoon, when the tide of life was sweeping her out toward the other shore:

> Oh, if I only could be of help! Oh, that some one would help me in my extremity so that success might come to the Temple. Everything about it has not been wise, but was there ever a great enterprise without faults? Yes, they should go on and help the women and get everything into shape. It was a pity, perhaps, to make it so big. I would rather they had not; but it is grand to work for a great cause, and you mustn't let it fail.

Will the women of the white ribbon, because of the faint-heartedness of some of the leaders on account of the large amount yet to be raised to secure the Temple, fold their hands and steel their hearts against the dying cry of their great Chieftain?

We feel assured that the women who loved Frances Willard with such a depth of devotion and mourn her loss so deeply will not falter in the work and will carry out faithfully the charge she left in their keeping. Let all our W. C. T. U. women go to work now for the Temple as never before. Let each one send a personal gift of one dollar. Those who are so circumstanced that they cannot give this amount, let them collect it by dime subscriptions from friends. The Temple Trustees have sent out at much expense about 500,000 fifty cent collection cards to the presidents of unions all over the country, asking that each member send out four of the cards to friends outside of their union. We beg of the women who hold these cards to take the trouble to send them out. We ask all who hold Temple Wheels to get them filled and return at once. If all white-ribboners would faithfully carry out these plans during the next two months, it would bring in $500,000. We could then go to the National Convention in November with hearts, though sad and chastened, yet full of holy joy that we had done our part in carrying out our great Chieftain's living and dying behest. It would also cheer the hearts of a large majority of the very women who have voted to recommend the discontinuance of further gifts because they took counsel of their fears and were appalled by the debt they had to face. They no doubt would be as glad as we to have the Temple paid for. We must not blame them too much for their action, but give them credit for honesty of purpose. No doubt from the presentation made to them, they felt that nothing else could be done.

Signed on behalf of the Temple Trustees.

Our Children.

Vacation Time.

THE grammars and the spellers,
The pencils and the slates,
The books that hold the fractions
And the books that tell the dates;
The crayons and the blackboards,
And the maps upon the wall,
Must all be glad together;
For they won't be used till fall.

They've had to work like beavers
To help the children learn;
And if they want a little rest,
It surely is their turn;
They shut their leaves with pleasure,
The dear old lesson-books,
And the crayons and the blackboards
Put on delighted looks.

So, children, just remember,
When you are gone away,
Your poor old slates and pencils
Are keeping holiday.
The grammars and the spellers
Are as proud as proud can be,
When the boys forsake the schoolroom
And the teacher turns the key.

Kenneth's Golden Rule Arithmetic.

"PHIL," whispered Kenneth Brooks, "I've got a secret to tell you after school."

"Nice?" asked Phil.

"Yes," was the answer; "nice for me."

"Oh!" said Phil, and his eyebrows fell. He followed Kenneth around behind the schoolhouse after school to hear the secret.

"My Uncle George," said Kenneth, "has given me a ticket to go and see the man that makes canary birds fire off pistols and all that. Ever seen him?"

"No," said Phil, hopelessly.

"Well, it's first rate, and my ticket will take me in twice," said Kenneth, cutting a little caper of delight.

"Same thing both times?" asked Phil.

"No, sir-ee; new tricks every time. I say, Phil," Kenneth continued, struck with the other's mournful look, "won't your Uncle George give you one?"

"I ain't got any Uncle George," said Phil.

"That's a fact. How about your mother, Phil?"

"Can't afford it," answered Phil, with his eyes on the ground.

Kenneth took his ticket out of his pocket and looked at it; it certainly promised to admit the bearer into Mozart Hall two afternoons. Then he looked at Phil, and a secret wish stole into his heart that he hadn't said anything about his ticket; but after a few minutes' struggle, "Phil!" he cried, "I wonder if the man wouldn't change this and give me two tickets that would take you and me in one time?"

Phil's eyes grew bright, and a happy little smile crept over his broad little face. "Do you think he would?" he asked, eagerly.

"Let's try," said Kenneth, and the two little boys started off to the office window at the hall.

"But, Kenneth," said Phil, stopping short, "it ain't fair for me to take your ticket."

"It is, though," answered his friend, stoutly, "'cause I'll get more fun from going once with you than twice by myself."

This settled the matter, and Phil gave in.

"So you want two tickets for one time?" said the agent.

"Yes, sir," said Kenneth, taking off his sailor hat to the great man, "one for me and one for Phil, you know."

"You do arithmetic by the Golden Rule down here, don't you?" asked the ticket man.

"No, sir, we use Barnard Smith's," answered the boys. And they didn't know for a long time what that man meant by Golden Rule.

A LITTLE boy was going past a liquor saloon, the door of which was wide open, with his dog, Sport. The dog, not knowing any better, went in, but his little master was soon after him, with the following good advice: "Come out of there, Sport! Don't be disgracing the family."

A Modern Ghost.

THE chief characteristic of the most ancient and best authenticated apparitions of history seems to have consisted in the fact that they "would not down." A like aversion to the supposed normal state of ghostly invisibility, coupled with a strong affinity for putting in an appearance "both in season and out of season," marks the spectre which, for some months past, has been attempting to haunt the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The fact that it has hitherto failed to awaken, in the minds of white-ribboners, any more lively emotion than one of deep pity, seems in no wise to affect its efforts. Its last appearance (positively its last, so far as THE UNION SIGNAL is concerned), may be found in our correspondence column of this week's issue, in the letter signed by two of our former round-the-world missionaries. We can but regret that the three who in other years have shown themselves so dauntless in courage, should so easily fall victims to spectral alarms, nevertheless, we must take facts as we find them. Possibly protracted residences in the Orient, the native home of superstition, may, in some measure, account for this phenomenon.

It is said to be also characteristic of ghostly visitants, that they are not amenable to argument; it is, therefore, with no real hope of convincing those who have largest proprietary rights in this ghost of a dead fear that THE UNION SIGNAL again speaks. It is, rather, from a profound regard for justice and righteousness and in the interests, not of a few, but of our entire constituency.

In this last manifestation direct charges are preferred, which we shall briefly consider. First, It is charged that we claim it to be "necessary to assume a different attitude towards the liquor traffic according to custom and public opinion, as prevailing in different countries." Second, That we have boldly declared our allegiance to Lady Henry Somerset, as president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, knowing that she held certain views concerning method which differed, in form not in spirit, from those held by the majority of white-ribboners; and Third, That we have lifted the "banner of expediency" in place of the banner of principle and are calling our great constituency to ignoble compromise rather than to glorious war.

With reference to all these statements we most respectfully and emphatically plead "not guilty" so far as the spirit of the charges is concerned. Those of our readers who were interested in the editorials of June 2, will perhaps remember that the question at issue was not one of resistance or non-resistance towards the liquor traffic, but rather as to the varying forms through which that resistance might express itself. We claimed that Lady Henry Somerset, together with the other members of the United Kingdom Temperance Alliance, ought to know better than we what would constitute the most effective method of resistance for Great Britain, just as we claim to know the most effective method for the United States.

Our first round-the-world missionary concedes that the United Kingdom Alliance is in favor of the direct veto as a means towards prohibition, and seems most singularly to overlook the fact that when the President of the World's W. C. T. U. says she is not in favor of prohibition by act of parliament, but is in favor of prohibition by direct veto, she is only stating the same fact. The letter from Sir Wilfrid Lawson which has been widely circulated, shows conclusively that he, the president of the United Kingdom Temperance Alliance, which stands first, last and always for prohibition, regards Lady Henry Somerset as holding views identical with his own concerning the best methods for obtaining in Great Britain the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Are the white-ribboners of the United States, of Canada, of Australia, or of India to enter into judgment, forsooth, upon the temperance men and women of Great Britain? Would we permit them thus to sit in judgment upon us?

Remember that it was solely as representing Great Britain that Lady Henry Somerset spoke before the Committee of Inquiry. She did not appear before that august body in her position as vice-president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The committee did not inquire concerning the policy of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union towards prohibition. A witness on the stand is there to answer only such questions as may be put to her. Such literal adherence to rule as the opposition manifests, may sometimes lead to absolutely false conclusions, as has lately been evidenced in our own country when a man's moral character was assailed on the charge that he supported in his own home a woman, called by his name, who was not his wife. The black brows of the jury were suddenly relaxed with laughter when, on a question from his own lawyer, it transpired that this woman was his grandmother. If Lady Henry Somerset's evidence had been followed by other questions distinctly different impressions might have been received even by those most desirous of proving her untrue to the principles of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

As to the second charge we can only briefly reiterate that we voted for Lady Henry Somerset at Toronto, and should do the same thing to-day under exactly the same circumstances. We differed totally from her on the theory as to the suppression of vice in India by putting the offending man upon the same basis as the offending woman, but we had faith enough in her to be sure that she would both see her mistake and nobly retract it, and results have proven that our faith was not a mistaken one. The Toronto Convention, both in the address of the World's president and in the report of the resolutions committee, spoke with no uncertain sound upon the subject of purity. The platform of the World's W. C. T. U. was built solidly and of well seasoned timber. No word of compromise nor of weakness found place there. Having laid down its principles the executive committee proceeded to elect its officers for the ensuing year and it was the unanimous opinion of that executive committee that there was no woman in all our ranks so well fitted for the office of vice-president as Lady Henry Somerset. Against her error of judgment we placed her years of consecrated service, her matchless powers of mind and heart, her executive ability—all, in short, that makes her what she is—and we said the one side of the balance far outweighs the other. We remembered that, in the past, some even of us had occasionally made mistakes, that the same thing had occurred in the lives of the greatest men and women of history, that only a happy—or unhappy—few have ever claimed infallibility of judgment, and that, in the case of those few, the claim has been chiefly supported by self-evidence. In view of these and many other facts we voted as we did, and we believe that, tried by the rules of justice, of charity, of the greatest good to the greatest number, and by all other righteous standards, the action of the Toronto executive must stand approved. Note that, if by electing Lady Henry Somerset we had been obliged to alter our standards of purity; if in the United States, we had been forced to change our ideas concerning prohibition, our action certainly would have been very different. But since when has the personal opinion as to method of an officer in any organization stood before the settled policy of that organization as set forth in its platform of principles?

Moreover, as president of the World's W. C. T. U., Lady Henry in no sense dictates the policy of the various National organizations which are affiliated to the World's union. The widest individual latitude, as to method, has always been allowed to the various countries, just as, in our own National union, the greatest freedom of method is allowed the several states; but that the triple standard of total abstinence, prohibition and purity, which underlies all our work, has ever been lowered, we most emphatically deny. Abundant proofs of the truth of this denial may daily be found by all who have not willed to believe the contrary. What do the resolutions at the Toronto Convention mean except that our standards are not lowered on the purity question? What our continuous work for prohibition except that we still hold, unswervingly to that fundamental principle? What the fact that the World's secretary, Miss Agnes Slack, has just organized in Paris, where in any true sense of the term our work had never before existed, a union of twenty-five members, which number could easily have been quadrupled if she had consented to a lowering of the standard from that of total abstinence? Facts, not assertions, tell, and no number of ghostly midnight visitants can prevent the clear rising of the sun of truth.

As to the "banner of expediency," we believe our own and every other society will be perfectly safe in marching under a banner which was first raised by the Apostle Paul; for it is in what we conceive to be the truly apostolic sense that we used the word, "expediency." "All things are indeed lawful unto me," said the Great Pacificator, "but all things are not expedient." There is a sense in which, under a rigid adherence to our own interpretation of law, we might cast out and condemn all who differ from us. We might even introduce a modified form of the Inquisition, or measure by our own iron bedstead the orthodoxy of friend and foe. But would it be expedient? Would it, moreover, be in harmony with the spirit of the gospel we profess?

God grant that, in the light of His Spirit and His word, all shades of darkness may be exorcised as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union shall go forward to claim its inheritance in the apostle's words, "Ye are all the children of light and the children of the day; we are not of night nor of darkness."

The Temple.

THE statement herewith appended, to which reference is made upon our first page, has been sent to every local union in the nation, accompanied by a letter from the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U., of which the following is the closing paragraph:

"We are sure that we need not remind you that there is in the hearts of the General Officers and the other members of the executive committee only kindness and love toward those who have been most active and zealous in the Temple enterprise. We have no criticisms or recriminations, but only praise for their zeal and loyalty. At the same time we feel that the time has come when the facts of the case should be made known throughout the entire country, in order that in the light of those facts, the history of the next few months may be made. If it be considered that we have lost sight of God as a power in this movement, we must venture to remind you that it seems to us that we have caught a new vision of God in His justice and righteousness, and if it be considered that it is lack of faith which induces us to take the stand we have taken, we must answer, also, that we have faith enough to believe that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will exist and go forward conquering and to conquer, though it be stripped of every outside interest.

"May God give to us all wisdom and light and enable us to do His will."

Statement of the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Your General Officers find, on examining the records of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that the first reference to the Temple, an affiliated interest of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was made in a brief sentence in Miss Willard's address at the Minneapolis Convention in 1886, in which she states that but for the riots Mrs. Carse would have already undertaken the enterprise.

In the Convention of 1887, at Nashville, Tenn., they find the following record: "Mr. Hall was followed by Mrs. Carse, who presented the cause of the Temperance Temple, after which large amounts were subscribed for the enterprise."

In the minutes of the executive committee meeting of November 21, 1887, they find the following record: "Mrs. Hobbs and Mrs. Carse were granted hearings, and addressed the committee on the Temperance Temple. Owing to the pressure of business, Mrs. Rounds moved that this be referred to the General Officers, with a definite understanding that the erection of the Temple upon leased ground cannot be indorsed. Carried."

In the president's annual address of that year the following sentences occur: "Mrs. Matilda B. Carse will tell you of her plans and show you a picture of the wonderful Temple which she has seen in visions on the mount of faith and prayer. She promises not to build until she has $500,000 in the bank, so we are safe from anything chimerical. She does not ask us to assume legal responsibility, so we cannot complain."

In the report of the resolutions committee of 1887, the following resolution appears as No. 12: "Temperance Temple. Resolved, That we cordially endorse the grand plan of the Temperance Temple, as presented by its founder, and pledge to this great enterprise our hearty co-operation with money and influence." After full discussion this resolution was referred to the executive committee, by whom it was again referred to the post executive. In the post executive committee the following was offered by Mrs. Hoffman: "Resolved, That we regard with admiration and amazement the colossal plans of our earnest and devoted sister, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse of Chicago, for the building of a temperance temple in that city as a home and source of financial revenue to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that, while we assume no legal responsibility whatever, we do give to Mrs. Carse our sympathy, our prayers, and pledge ourselves not to hinder or embarrass her in the prosecution of her plans, provided she shall legally obligate herself not to begin the work until $500,000 shall be secured." Adopted.

After the Nashville Convention the whole enterprise seems to have become involved in misunderstanding in the minds of many of the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The building was erected upon leased ground after only $61,000 of stock had been subscribed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Subsequently, all but $15,300 of the $61,000 was used for the issuing of the $300,000 Temple trust bonds, and the accrued interest on the stock purchased, which bonds stand as a mortgage upon $300,000 worth of stock now held in escrow by the American Trust and Savings Bank, as collateral for the Temple trust bonds. While these bonds were issued by Mrs. Carse upon her own responsibility, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union practically endorsed her action at the next convention.

Previous to the Convention of 1897, a committee of inquiry into the status of the affiliated interests of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union was, at the request of Miss Willard, appointed by the General Officers. This committee consisted of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, vice-president-at-large; Miss Elizabeth Preston, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North Dakota, and Miss Margaret Hilles, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Delaware. Miss Hilles found it impossible to serve, but Mrs. Stevens and Miss Preston met at Chicago during the latter part of October, and, together with the other affiliated interests, thoroughly investigated the financial standing of the Temple.

The report of this committee was given by Mrs. Stevens at the Buffalo Convention, and was of a discouraging nature concerning the probability of the final ownership of the Temple by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Miss Willard bravely threw herself into the breach, pledging to give her fifty-ninth year to an effort to retire the Temple Trust Bonds, saying: "I shall not come around making any soft words to the local unions nor the white-ribboners. They have done enough. Turn we now to the Gentiles. I shall only try to help get enough to retire the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds, thus holding the balance of votes, but shall not try to own the whole Temple. The white-ribboners shall not be disturbed. They have done nobly. They have become weary. I do not wonder that they are a little discouraged, and what I would like to do is to lift the burden." Miss Cornelia Dow, daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, of Portland, Me., was nominated by Miss Willard, and appointed by the Convention, as custodian of this fund.

The Convention indorsed Miss Willard's plan of going to the people of wealth with an appeal for the money necessary to retire the Temple Trust Bonds, and a resolution to that effect was carried. During the weeks intervening between the Buffalo Convention and the beginning of Miss Willard's illness in New York, she did all that she could in the way of interviewing people in Chicago and elsewhere, but without marked results. One of her last acts was to prepare the letter since widely circulated, which was to be sent to men and women of wealth throughout the nation, telling the purpose of the Temple and what it stood for in her thought. This letter, though prepared some weeks before her death, was not published until after that sad event. Her fifty-ninth year came all too soon to a close, and the work which was to have occupied its months was left only just begun.

After her "going away" the general officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as soon as they could at all rally from the shock of their great loss, took up the burden her tired hands had laid down, pledging themselves to send out her letter, and by every other means in their power to further the enterprise. They were encouraged by letters, which came to them from all over the nation, to believe that not only her original plan of retiring the Temple Trust Bonds might be carried out, but that, through the impulse of public sympathy and sorrow, the Temple itself might be paid for. Acting upon this thought, they issued a call for the formation of citizens' committees in every state, whose work it should be to raise money for the Temple as a memorial building to our departed leader. March 20 was set apart as a special memorial day, and they asked that the collections taken on that day might be forwarded to Miss Cornelia Dow. In nearly every state this work was taken up; committees were appointed in large cities and in some places almost a house-to-house visitation was made. The ultimate date set before the women for the raising of this money was July 1, 1898, since Mrs. Carse had repeatedly stated in THE UNION SIGNAL and elsewhere that at that time the offer of $50,000 made by Mr. Marshall Field would expire. In addition to the work of the General Officers, the Temple Trustees have continued their endeavor and made a supreme effort toward raising the required amount.

On July 1, your General Officers held a meeting to consider the present status of the enterprise, and found that through their own efforts, combined with those of the Temple Trustees, the results are as follows:

Mrs. Carse claims, through reductions on Temple Trust Bonds (many bondholders having generously promised to donate thirty cents on the dollar, and a few having given their bonds) $90,000.

Cash now in the hands of the Temple Trustees, $20,000.

Cash now in the hands of Miss Dow, custodian of the Willard fund, $20,000.

Conditional cash pledges, $12,500.

This leaves, provided the conditional pledges are met, a deficit of $157,500 before the Temple Trust Bonds of $300,000 can be released.

Stock donated, not available for bonds, $67,000.

Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon, on July 1, had an interview with Mr. Marshall Field, who owns the ground upon which the building stands, and is also the largest stockholder in the Temple corporation. They learned from him that his promised gift of $50,000 is not in cash, but is a part of the stock still remaining in his hands; that it cannot apply on the $300,000 for the purchase of Temple Trust Bonds, as had been the understanding of the Temple trustees and our constituency, and this we count in the $67,000 of stock not available for retiring bonds.

The Temple status to-day is therefore as follows: The building is erected on leased ground, owned by Mr. Marshall Field, for which an annual rental of $40,000 must be paid for 188 years without possibility of revaluation.

Six hundred thousand dollars of building bonds were issued as lien upon the building and are held by the Field Museum of Chicago. These could be purchased only at par value.

Three hundred thousand dollars of stock is held by the American Trust and Savings Bank as security for the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds.

Two hundred and eighty-four thousand seven hundred dollars of stock is owned by capitalists in Chicago, of which amount Mr. Field holds $118,400.

Fifteen thousand three hundred dollars is held by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

To secure the entire Temple, which would still stand upon leased ground, and so could not in reality be owned, we would require, in addition to the $15,300 of stock now held, $300,000 to retire the Temple trust bonds, plus $600,000 building bonds, plus $217,700 stock as above mentioned ($284,700 minus $67,000 equals $217,700). To meet this large total of $1,117,700 we have, at the most generous estimate, only the sum of $142,500 given above, thus leaving a balance of $975,200 to be raised.*

From reports received from states and from foreign lands, the General Office have reason to hope that $15,000 additional might be raised before November 1st. Our women have done their utmost, and stern reality forces us to face the conclusion that the money will not come from the rich people of the nation. If this $15,000 were raised, there would still remain $142,500 deficit on the Temple trust bonds, to say nothing of the other large sums which must be raised before the Temple could be owned.

Interviews with business and professional men and women have clearly revealed the fact that there is no lack of interest throughout the nation in a proposed memorial to Miss Willard, and no lack of appreciation of her matchless character and marvelous work, but that The Temple does not appeal to the public as a fitting memorial. No large sums have been received from the outside public, but white ribbon women have generously responded during the eleven years since the beginning of the enterprise. About $250,000 has been raised for the Temple almost entirely by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This money, with the exception of the $20,000 held by Miss Dow, has been placed in the hands of the Temple directors and Temple trustees, and up to October, 1897, of this amount there had been, according to Mrs. Carse's statement, expended as follows:

*We have not mentioned in this statement the $36,000 accrued interest on the Temple Trust Bonds nor the original floating debt of $65,000, which has been reduced to $20,000.

This statement brings the matter down to the present date, and answers the question why a meeting of the executive committee of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been called in the interim of the National Conventions. Your General Officers, while appreciating the brave spirit and indomitable efforts of Mrs. Carse, have become convinced, not alone of the hopelessness of the attempt to own the Temple, but of the lack of understanding regarding the situation that exists among our own women, as well as on the part of the general public.

In so crucial a time they do not feel warranted in taking a decisive step in regard to the Temple without the wisdom and counsel of the executive committee. They are anxious that some plan should be devised at once, which shall determine the action of our organization during the months intervening before the memorial Convention in St. Paul, in order that that Convention, the most sorrowful in our history as a society, may be free from anything out of harmony with its tender and sacred character. They are sure that, in laying this matter thus before the executive committee and in trying to formulate a plan for united action, they are following out what would be, if she were with us, Miss Willard's own wish. She frequently expressed herself as being unfavorable toward so great a financial undertaking as the Temple has proved itself to be. She said again and again to personal friends that her work for the Temple should not extend beyond this year, that the matter must be settled at the next Convention.

They are fully aware that the National Convention itself is the final court of appeal upon this and all other matters; nevertheless, they believe the executive committee may be able to suggest a policy which shall unite all dissenting voices and bring all together in the union we so greatly desire. Although fully persuaded that it is an utter impossibility for us ever to own the Temple, they still hope that such an arrangement may be entered upon as shall make it possible to pay, in part at least, the most needy bondholders and to retain Willard Hall on a long lease, which, without doubt, could be renewed at its expiration. Bear in mind the fact that, even though the million and a quarter, which the Temple cost, were to be raised, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union could not own Willard Hall, since it stands on leased ground. If favorable terms could be secured, it would be far more economical, and fully as effective in the end, for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to lease Willard Hall and pay rent for National Headquarters in the Temple, which we have done since its completion, as it would be for us to go on in this hopeless effort to own the entire building.

We believe the statement of the General Officers will appeal to our great constituency, and we pray that such divine wisdom may be given as will enable us to plan wisely for the best interests of our great organization.

Adopted by the executive committee and ordered sent out as its official statement, July 15, 1898.

RESOLUTIONS OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, PASSED JULY 16, 1898.

WHEREAS, After eleven years of heroic effort on behalf of the Temple enterprise, an affiliated interest of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we find ourselves forced to face the facts set forth in the official statement of the General Officers of our organization, be it therefore regretfully

Resolved, First, That it is the sense of the executive committee that the appeal of the General Officers sent out in March last should be at once withdrawn, and that all effort on the part of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to raise money with a view to owning the Temple be discontinued, and we recommend that no further call to local unions or efforts by them be made to own or pay for the Temple.

Resolved, Second, That while we are not legally bound, we regard it as a sacred trust to purchase, before the next convention, the Temple trust bonds so far as available funds make possible. Therefore we recommend, provided the permission of the donors be secured, that all money now in the hands of the Temple trustees and Miss Cornelia Dow, with all money forwarded to her for this purpose before November 1, 1898, be used to purchase these bonds. To such bondholders as do not dispose of their Temple trust bonds before November 1, 1898, we recommend that they may be exchanged for their collateral security or Temple stock.

Resolved, Third, That our sincere appreciation be extended to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the founder of the Temple, for the brave effort she has made to secure for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union the building which she has always believed would be a source of a large revenue for the carrying on of the work, and that we are convinced that but for the untoward circumstances which it was impossible for anyone to foresee, the status of the building would be very different to-day.

Resolved, Fourth, That a copy of the official statement of the General Officers on the Temple question, which, by action of the executive committee, has been made its statement, and a copy of the resolutions adopted, be sent to each one named in the official roster of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that they be published in the first issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Resolved, Fifth, That the General Officers be made a committee to confer with Mr. Marshall Field in regard to securing the lease of Willard Hall for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Notice.

THE Y Almanac for 1899 is already in the hands of the W. T. P. A., and promises to excel all others. While the texts are from various workers, including the National officers of the United States and noted foreign representatives, the three hundred and sixty-five sentiments for the days of the year are all from Miss Willard's writings, and are some of her choicest and best. Each day in 1899 we may have her helpful words brought to our minds through the Y Almanac.

The halftones will rival those of 1898. There will be one of Miss Willard and Miss Gordon taken together, which has not appeared before, a new one of Lady Henry Somerset, and a beautiful outdoor picture of Miss Clara Parrish, taken when riding in a jinriksha with Miss Tami Mitani and Mrs. Yajima and her secretary. Another picture is the interior of the W. C. T. U. convention in Yokohama. There will also be a picture of Cummings Hall Y headquarters in South Africa, and others equally desirable. So the Y Almanac with its artistic cover will be a most beautiful and useful compendium for 1899. Send orders early to Mrs. Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Ave., New York, N. Y. Price 25 cents. Sold for the Clara Parrish and World's Y fund.

North Dakota.

IN my last letter to the Y column we were preparing for our Clara Parrish meetings, which were held in February. A most delightful program was arranged consisting of letters from Miss Parrish, one of which, written expressly for North Dakota Y's, in the original was twenty-one feet seven inches long, full of interest from start to finish. Only a few of the unions responded to the call, but we raised from the meetings $36.41 and completed the sale of fifty almanacs, beside creating a great deal of interest in foreign missions and our work in general. May was set apart for work for the Temple; we hoped to raise $100. I have not heard results, but know that the Larimore union sent $25, and two others five dollars each. The Larimore union is, taken from all standpoints, the banner union of the state; no other follows so exactly the adopted plan of work, nor is as systematic in working and giving. Their meetings are held every week; they have adopted our purity pledge, admitting new members only after they have signed the White Shield pledge as well as total abstinence, all the old members having signed the same. Though some of their honoraries are only first and second degree all have taken the White Cross pledge gladly.

If all our unions would work to our plan as faithfully as this one union, the results in North Dakota would be second to no state in the Union.

Notes.

THE Y's of Philmont, N. Y., recently gave the entertainment, "The Deestrick School-Master," in aid of Clara Parrish, and realized twenty dollars for that purpose. The entertainment was a great success in every way; the quaint and picturesque costumes of the pupils added not a little to the charm and merriment of the occasion. Two brilliant duets were played by Miss Gertrude Richardson and Miss Lydia Pulver. The Y's are very grateful to Mrs. Frank L. Harder for her careful and able training.

MISS ESTHER ALONSO, who will be remembered as the bright little Spanish delegate to the World's and National Conventions, writes as follows in a personal letter to Mrs. Barnes:

When I think about the war between our two nations, I thank God with all my heart that the sentiment of hatred of our countrymen does not reach us; we are sisters of peace, and our work is for the tender Master who loved peace so dearly. May God bless my American sisters in every good work that they undertake, and I plead with you to pray for peace; ask God in every prayer for peace for our two nations. Perhaps this pleading does not concern you so much as us; our future is so dark, oh, so dark! Where are our brothers, our relatives? All in the army! Oh, that God may save my country, and that His light may shine upon us more clearly than ever before!

As we looked over the nicely gotten-up program of the annual convention of the W. C. T. U., held at Yokohama, April 2, 3 and 4, we could but notice its similarity to our own, and upon a glance would not have thought it was printed way off in Japan. Among the list of their fifteen departments we notice Young Woman's Work. The session of the first day was called to order by the president, Mrs. Kaji Yajima, the Crusade Psalm read responsively and the Crusade Hymn sung. We noticed the various addresses, among them that of Clara Parrish, on "Our Leaders." A memorial service to Frances E. Willard, and the reports, solos, quartettes and organ voluntaries made it all seem as homelike as our own. Blest be the tie that has wrought this.

IT is interesting to note the positions of trust that many of our Y leaders occupy outside the ranks of our W. C. T. U. Notably among them: Frances J. Barnes, World's Y secretary W. C. T. U., is an elder in the Religious Society of Friends (orthodox), and is also a trustee of Friends Seminary, Union Springs, N. Y. Miss Carrie Lee Carter, National Y organizer, is an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian church. During March, Miss Carter had the honor of addressing the General Assembly of that denomination (which was in session in Missouri) as a fraternal delegate from the National W. C. T. U. She was favored by a most enthusiastic reception. The fact of her being an elder created more interest and good-will both for the cause of woman and temperance. The resolution passed by the Assembly endorsed the W. C. T. U. in all its lines of work.

Tasmania.

MRS. NICHOLLS, our Australasian president, has just concluded a very successful visit to Tasmania. The last few weeks have been spent among the unions at Hagley, Westbury, Sheffield, Devonport, Penguin, Burnie and Wynyard, while Longford and Waratah have been visited en route. Cordial receptions have awaited her, and platform meetings, meetings for women and gatherings of united Sunday-schools have been held. Addresses have been given on the origin and aim of our organization, on temperance, womanhood, suffrage and purity. The results are, that additional interest has been manifest on these subjects, and there is an increase of membership, and our women are encouraged to go forward to work for God and for the protection of their homes. A small, yet enthusiastic meeting has been organized at Scottsdale, a township to the east of Launceston. At Devonport the L. T. L. presented her with a bouquet of flowers and verses of welcome, and the Wynyard L. T. L. also presented her with a handsome bouquet. The assistant secretary and the youngest member of the Burnie L. T. L. gave Mrs. Nicholls an address of welcome and a bouquet. On behalf of Mrs. Rooke, the local president, Mrs. Nicholls presented this Legion with a handsome cream satin banner, with shaded blue lettering, forming the words, "Burnie L. T. L. We fight to conquer." The night previous to her departure for South Australia a franchise meeting was held in the Masonic Hall, Launceston, at which the Rev. H. Jones, M. A., presided. Mrs. Nicholls' able address was listened to by a large and appreciative audience, and elicited hearty applause. Our president carries away with her the love, the goodwill and "God bless you" of many.

The grand lodge of the I. O. G. T. held its twenty-fifth annual meeting in the Temperance Hall, Launceston, this month. At the close of the sittings there was an open conference on the prohibition of the liquor traffic, which afforded an opportunity for discussing a much debated subject. Several able papers were contributed, all the writers claiming prohibition to be necessary to the extinction of the drink traffic.

Alderman Barrett has moved a resolution that the Parliamentary committee be requested to submit for the consideration of the Launceston council, a by-law to prohibit children and youths under a certain age smoking cigars, tobacco or cigarettes in the streets and other public places within the city boundaries. This is a step in the right direction and we sincerely hope that it will be carried out.

The Tasmanian Temperance Alliance has just held its forty-second annual meeting in Hobart. The secretary's report speaks of progress during the past year. Successful open air meetings have been held, and £500 has been wiped off the existing debt on the handsome building. Regret was expressed at the continual violation of the licensiug laws, particularly in reference to the Sunday closing clause. Particular reference was made to the good work being done by the W. C. T. U., and to the loss the temperance cause had sustained by the death of Miss Frances Willard. Mr. L. Lodge has again been re-elected president, and it was decided that The People's Friend be continued for another year.

And so the temperance work is slowly but surely gaining in strength and influence, and we are nearer to the dethronement of the liquor traffic and that blessed time when the homes of the people shall be secure from its seductive wiles.

Colonial Correspondent.

Hawaiian Islands.

A PERSONAL letter gives an interesting account of memorial services for Miss Willard, held in Haiti church, Hilo, from which we make the following extracts:

"The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. for May was under the direction of the King's Daughters society, and it was decided to make it a memorial service for Miss Willard. The church was well filled, and Rev. Mr. Derha, Hawaiian, and Rev. A. V. Soares, Portuguese, sat together in the pulpit. Exercises opened with singing by a very full choir of both the Hawaiian and Hilo foreign churches. Prominent among the singers were members of the King's Daughters all in white, and it was a beautiful sight. After the opening hymns by choir and congregation, there was a Scripture reading in English by Agnes Hill. The extracts were portions of the second chapter of Second Timothy, and the choicest verses of the description of the virtuous woman in Proverbs. This selection was read later on in Hawaiian, by Elia Pihi, of the Hilo boarding school. A hymn was sung by the Haiti choir, rendered in the English language. Opening prayer by Mr. Soares, pastor of the Honolulu Portuguese church, who is visiting here a short time. There was a solo by Miss Willis, with violin as well as organ accompaniment. Then followed some papers, prepared from extracts of Miss Willard's life and death, and the tributes to her memory, from Miss Deyo. Miss Elvira Richardson read the tribute spoken over her in her own church at Evanston, at her funeral. A duet of great sweetness by Mrs. Shaw and Margaret Nape, broke the continuity of readings. Then came a spirited burst of congregational singing on three verses of 'Am I a Soldier of the Cross?' and we were fully prepared for Rev. Mr. Derha's beautiful tribute in Hawaiian, which was prepared by himself quite independent of translation of other speakers, from his own reading of the many papers received.

"Then Miss Nellie Wire repeated in a most lovely manner, the little poem, 'Our Leader,' by Sarah E. Bolton, found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 24, and we closed with a hymn and the benediction."

World's Wave Crests.

MRS. PHILLIPS, president of the W. C. T. U. of India, has been obliged to return to this country on account of the serious illness of her son.

A TEMPERANCE Hospital has been started at Bombay, India, which it is hoped will soon be self-supporting. For the present, contributions are solicited from interested friends.

THE National executive committee of the British Women's Temperance Association recently met at Duxhurst, by invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, and decided to observe the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Crusade. The Associations are urged to have special meetings for this purpose in November or December, when the history of the movement which led to the formation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union should be specially brought forward. The following resolution was proposed by Miss Agnes

A Warning to Users of Alum Baking Powders.

CASES OF POISONING IN INDIANA.

The following appeared in the Logansport, Indiana, Times:—

Dr. Souder was summoned by telegraph last Sunday night to attend the family of Braden Harper, living southwest of Logansport. Four of the family were poisoned from eating dumplings. The father and one child, who had not partaken of the dumplings, were well, while the mother and three children were in a serious condition. It is probable that had not vomiting ensued, emptying the stomach, the four would have died from the effects. It is supposed the poison was caused from the baking powder used in making the dumplings. The wife probably added a larger amount than she usually did, which in the greater quantity proved a noxious poison. The baking powder used was branded the * * * *, manufactured by the * * * * This should be a warning in using cheap baking powders, which flood the country. People buy them because they are cheap, and the merchant buys them because he can sell them for a profit. In many stores one can not purchase a standard brand. You have to purchase the cheap stuff or do without. We are of the opinion that most of the prize baking powders belong to this class.

The highest authorities in chemical science pronounce alum injurious to health and a destroyer of digestion.

Here is explicit evidence that it is a noxious poison.

Alum baking powders likewise coagulate the blood rapidly, interfering with its ready course through the arteries and valves of the heart, predisposing to heart-failure.

The laws of Minnesota and Wisconsin prohibit the sale of alum baking powders, unless they are branded as a warning to the public.

By the laws of England it is a crime to put alum in bread in any form.

NOTE. The Royal Baking Powder Co. publish the above facts because they are facts of great importance, and to say that while alum baking powders are sold cheap they have little strength, and are dear at half price, to say nothing of their effect upon the health, and the bitter taste they impart to the food.

The Royal Baking Powder is far above question as regards its quality and healthfulness, because it is made of cream of tartar derived only from grapes. No other article has ever received such high praise for its quality.

Consumers may use the Royal with full assurance that they not only get the worth of their money, but that they also get the best cream of tartar baking powder that can be had.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Slack and Mrs. Price Hughes, and carried unanimously:

That this committee greatly deplore the efforts which have recently been made in some constituencies to lessen the importance of temperance principles, and expresses an earnest hope that the Liberal party should not in any degree cease to recognize the principle of the direct veto which stands for sacred principles of the greatest moment to humanity for justice, freedom and progress.

News From the Field.

[State reporters are earnestly requested to send no news over two months old. Brief and frequent reports are preferable.—THE EDITORS.]

Southern California.

THE "crown and key of the valley," the beautiful city of Pasadena, entertained the sixteenth annual state convention, May 31 to June 3. All of the state officers and most of the superintendents were present, so the executive was well attended.

The first afternoon was given to the president's address and reports of state officers. As it was the first annual message from Mrs. Kenney more than usual importance was attached to it, and evidently none were disappointed. From the reports it was apparent that the work in this state is prospering amid many difficulties.

It is seldom that our state gathering has been blessed with the presence of so many National workers and crusaders. There were ten of the latter, and Mesdames Mary E. Teats, Eugenia St. John, E. T. Scott, Isabel Wing-Lake, Carrie Geisel and Mary Barbour represented the mother society. Major Scott was also present, as was Miss Margaret Sudduth.

More time than usual was given to reports of department work, yet so much had been accomplished that the half could not be told in the moments allowed.

An excellent W. C. T. U. silver medal contest, conducted by Miss Nina Cuthbert, state superintendent, was held in the large tabernacle auditorium, Tuesday evening. The contestants were four young persons of each sex and they did well their parts. Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard presented the medal to Mr. George Braden, who recited "A Terrible Charge."

Previous to the contest Pasadena presented her welcome to the convention in an able address by Professor Edwards, of Throop University, who passed from memories of Memorial day to the great peaceful war carried on by the greatest organization of women and against a greater than a Spanish foe. State president, Mrs. Kenney, gave a brief response, expressing the pleasure of the convention in being entertained in a city without saloons.

Wednesday morning Mrs. Faulkner asked for more earnest work among the children if we would advance Sabbath observance. Mrs. Dimmick told of the excellent work being done among the prisoners of the Los Angeles county jail by the Sunday services held there. Mrs. Bowen desired a better knowledge of good literature for the foreigners. Dr. Rachel Reid pleaded for her dear colored people, who are not yet much interested in aggressive temperance work. Mrs. Griffith urged immediate work for the soldiers and sailors.

Just before noon on Wednesday the memorial services were opened by Mrs. Anna B. Southwick, who read the list of departed ones. She then introduced Dr. Kellogg-Lane, who gave a fine spiritual address upon the price and blessing of full consecration. To this was added, "I shall know Him," sung by Mrs. Laura B. Carter.

In the county president's symposium every president responded except the one from Ventura, Mrs. Susanna Sharp, who was at the sick bed of her soldier boy. All gave words of encouragement.

Reports from Ransom Home showed that many friendless and erring women and girls had been sheltered and helped over hard places. Most of them had become Christians before leaving the Home. Industrial training is made a prominent feature, and some of the girls' work was on sale—the workman to share in the profits. The Home has moved into a larger house, with better accommodations.

An earnest plea was made for our temple, the indebtedness on which is small compared with that of the National Temple, but our field is eight counties instead of world wide. By vote of the convention the temple is to be made a woman's building, a place where rooms will be rented to women only, and in time educational and other features added. Could the $13,500 mortgage be lifted the change would be made at once. The National Temple and THE UNION SIGNAL were also presented.

"Election Day for Jesus Christ," was the striking title of a paper by Mrs. Mary G. Tongier, state organizer and superintendent of Christian citizenship. It was considered the strongest paper of the convention.

The state paper, the White Ribbon, was reported to be financially sound, by its editor, Mrs. Anna S. Walfakill. "Where is Our Klondike?" was state treasurer Mrs. Plimpton's route to financial matters.

For election there were 122 delegates who registered their majority preference for the following officers: President, Mrs. Mary A. Kenney; vice-president, Mrs. Emma Cash; corresponding secretary, Miss G. T. Stickney; recording secretary, Mrs. Lizzie H. Mills; treasurer, Mrs. Sophia W. Plimpton; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Allie Simmons.

Wednesday evening the convention speakers were assigned to twenty church prayer meetings, and members, money and friends were gained for the cause.

Demonstration night was anticipated with some curiosity, as but few had witnessed such an event, and some had so little conception of what was desired that their enthusiasm was not fully aroused until rather late. Rev. Eugenia F. St. John was "marshal of the day," assisted by Miss Mary Barbour, and when the line of march was formed, one brave man led the way carrying "Old Glory," and following him was a line of women, two abreast, extending more than two blocks. As the quiet town of Pasadena does not permit music on the streets without special permission, there was none to announce our coming. A large audience at the Tabernacle greeted the marching and counter-marching column in the hall, especially applauding the L. T. L., with their many banners. Reaching the platform, all joined in singing "My country, 'tis of thee," after which the delegates withdrew and left the costumed superintendents. Mrs. St. John introduced each department briefly and the superintendent condensed her thought in a few short sentences—one great lesson in itself that women can "talk to the point." The L. T. L.'s—white and colored—did so well they carried off the honors as to applause, especially the two dark-faced little ones, who sang:

You can't catch me with your wine dinner,
For it would make me a whisky sinner.

The convention closed Friday noon, when many delegates joined the excursion to Mount Lowe, and on the heights, under the pines, held a prayer-meeting, and then returned to gaze at the stars through the wonderful telescope at Mt. Echo.

Mrs. Mary E. Teats left for the North after the convention, to be absent some years. Her labors are more fully appreciated with each return to our field, and the seed she has sown is bearing much fruit.

Mrs. Isabel Wing-Lake and Dr. Geisel are now capturing the southland in the interest of rescue work. Their headquarters are Temperance Temple, Los Angeles, but their labors have until recently been in Pasadena and Pomona. To the former union a cottage has been given for rescue work.

Miss Mary Barbour returned to Santa Paula, where in Ventura and adjoining counties she has done much excellent work.

We bade farewell to Miss Margaret Sudduth with much regret. The convention sent greeting and sympathy to Miss Alice, and both have the love of their Southern California sisters.

Mrs. E. T. Scott is now the president of San Bernardino county W. C. T. U., and the state secretary of Young Woman's Branch. Now the young folks will be carefully mothered.

Florida.

"TO write or not to write," has been the question perplexing my brain ever since the soldiers came—whether I would better write what others are doing or keep on as I have been, helping the inadequate few accomplish the great task which has fallen at our W. C. T. U. door. This especially applies to the situation in Tampa, of course, where we are few in point of numbers, but since the beginning we have not ceased to do all that we could for the comfort of our "boys in blue." And, just here, I must say our white-ribbon sisters of other states have and are sending us material aid—money, literature and comfort bags—and our own Florida unions have done nobly, for all of which we are duly thankful. If these dear sisters could realize the eagerness with which the soldiers receive their gifts and hear the hearty cheers given for the W. C. T. U., they would feel more than repaid. We have given out nearly a thousand comfort bags, but think how many thousands of soldiers there are beyond the supply. Our headquarters on Tampa Heights, in the very center of the camps when put there, has been abandoned since the first expedition to Santiago, as the soldiers encamped there all went away.

For a few weeks we ministered to the soldiers by visiting them at camp; now we have established headquarters in a comfortable room down town adjoining those occupied by the Y. M. C. A. We will thus be brought in touch with thousands of the soldiers every day, will keep all our stores there and cool water, which the generous money contributions from our northern unions will enable us to do.

Our state superintendent of soldiers and sailors, Mrs. A. E. Rainey, of St. Augustine, kindly came to us for a few days and rendered great help in systematizing our work. Tampa union will have our state evangelist, Rev. E. Springer Oliver, for a few weeks' consecrated service.

Jacksonville is doing noble work for the soldiers; Mrs. Rainey went to their aid also. An auxiliary formed of two representative women from each church, empowered to choose their own helpers, work under the direction of the president of the union, taking charge each a week, of their reading room in camp. Failing to get the use of a government tent for the purpose, the union accepted a corner of the gospel tent on camp ground. There the soldier is invited to feel free to read, write or enjoy social intercourse with comrades and the W. C. T. U. mothers and sisters. Hospital work is a marked feature of our busy sisters' work. They make night shirts and delicacies for the sick, carry flowers to brighten and cheer. In Mrs. Goodhue's own words: "We lose no opportunity of doing the soldiers good; they absorb our thoughts and fill our hands and hearts."

There are no troops stationed at St. Augustine now, but reduced rates are given the soldiers from Jacksonville, enabling many of them to make frequent trips to see the ancient city. How the W. C. T. U. receives them Miss M. C. Reynolds, press superintendent of the local union, has told us in her "notes" supplied weekly for her home paper. I quote: "Surely there were soldiers in town last Saturday. And surely, too, they enjoyed and appreciated the ice water furnished by the W. C. T. U. The thirsty ones swarmed around it at different times during the day. This is practical temperance work, this furnishing of good ice water; for, listen! when cool, fresh water has quenched thirst, beer is not wanted."

The great need is of comfort rolls; Tampa women are working hard to make them; but the help of every woman is needed, for thousands of soldiers are anxious for these little helpers.

The Temple teas of St. Augustine union, given weekly, have netted a handsome sum, more than sixty dollars for our House Beautiful. These are to be continued, dividing the profits, however, with the work for our soldiers. The volunteers, two companies, recruited there, were supplied by St. Augustine women with comfort rolls at a cost of $16.80, $13 of which amount was raised by the local W. C. T. U.

I have not received reports from other unions, except Sanford, where the union made, equipped and gave to the company going out from their homes enough to supply all. There is so much to write about it is hard to choose that which is best to write and hard to stop anywhere.

NOTES.

When we began our work in Tampa for the soldiers, money was very scarce; we had given out all the comfort bags we had, about thirty, many eager hands had been stretched out for more, and our hearts ached because we could not fill them. So Mrs. Stewart and I started down town with all the money we had, forty cents all told, to buy material and supplies for a few more. On our way we met many soldiers hurrying toward camp, for they had marching orders. One big regular, his arms full of bundles, laid them down on the sidewalk, doffed his hat, and begging our pardon, addressed us politely, "I should like to know, ladies, how you are paying for all these little articles you are giving the boys." After we had explained, he drew three dollars from his pocketbook, saying, "I owe this to the Lord; I always give one-tenth of my income; now I am going to Cuba, and I want to pay my debt." We accepted the gift, called down blessings on the generous donor, and went our way happier and richer in that we could buy more largely.

Our Florence Nightingale, Mrs. Jennie Willer, visits the hospitals two days out of each week. She uses her glorious voice to comfort and cheer the sick ones. No one wonders that they love her presence among them and count the days until she comes again.

Other good women are constantly ministering to the sick, Miss Lawrence and Miss Taylor notably among the white-ribboners. Flowers fulfill their heavenly mission to the uttermost. I could write many touching instances of their effect, but lack of space forbids.

Virginia.

IN spite of wars and rumors of wars Virginia keeps working right along.

Richmond district held a successful quarterly convention in June. Richmond City unions will entertain the state convention this year. Preparations for it are already well under way. It is safe to predict that this gathering of white-ribbon women at the seven-hilled capital of the Old Dominion will become historic in their annals. Richmond unions are especially successful in jail and flower mission work.

Eastern Shore District: This district, under the able direction of its president, Mrs. Ren, is growing rapidly. Its conventions are successful both as to attendance and manifest interest. The temperance work of the unions is everywhere successful. Third party prohibitionists were strong on the Eastern Shore when the W. C. T. U. was weak, and have helped to cherish it. The district is not yet two years old, but works quite smoothly. With a president of large personal influence and entire devotion to the work the W. C. T. U. is sure to succeed on the Eastern Shore.

Loudoun County: Old Loudoun, the camping-ground of our faithful state secretary, is always at work. Flower Mission day was appropriately observed in Round Hill by a reception, with program, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Noland. It was very successful. At 6 A. M. of the same day the Round Hill W. C. T. U. presented flowers, text cards tied with white ribbon, to employés of the Southern Railway; the superintendent of the road being on the train, received a bouquet also.

Norfolk District: This district lies on both sides of the James, not where it is a mere mill stream, but where it opens wide and becomes Hampton Roads. An hour's steaming separates the two parts of the District. A successful convention was lately held at Newport News. What promises to become the most important act of that meeting was the appointment of a committee to arrange for a soldiers' and sailors' reading-room at Phœbus, between the volunteer camp and the National Soldiers' Home. The wickedness of Phœbus provokes the gentlest to unlimited condemnation. Within a few days a board of managers for the reading-room has been organized, Mrs. Joseph Bradley, wife of the chaplain of the Soldiers' Home, being the chairman. It is in charge of a man and his wife experienced in seaman's mission work. A home restaurant will soon be opened in connection with it. There is but one other place in Phœbus, and that a bakery and ice-cream parlor, where food is sold that is not also a drinking place. Any woman whose loved ones march in the ranks of Uncle Sam's army may comfort herself and some mother's boy by sending any gift she likes, of money or home comfort, to Mrs. Bradley. It will be thankfully received and carefully used to add to the attractiveness of this "White Ribbon Rest." The place has already had many visitors, both volunteers and veterans, all of whom take the greatest interest in the preparations for their comfort. The touching element is the deep interest taken by the sober veterans at the Home in this effort to help the volunteers in camp.

Norfolk Central union, of which the state president is the head, recently presented to the city a free ice-water fountain. It is of bronze, plain and substantial, and stands on a busy corner in a busy district of the town. The fountain was presented to the city on behalf of the women, by the pastor of the largest church in town. In his brief and appropriate speech he improved the occasion by pointing out some badly neglected duties of municipalities in general. The fountain is the means of slaking many thirsts, heretofore valuable to sellers of ice-cold beer.

A gold medal contest, for the benefit of the District, will have taken place before this letter appears.

Indiana.

INDIANA has changed the name "school of methods" to "normal institute." She tried large and small groups of counties, concluding that while much could be said in favor of both, they did not school enough women for the outlay of money, time and effort involved. This year she arranged for two days' county normal institutes; three a week; dividing the state into four sections, with a worker in charge of each section. Out of ninety-two counties, sixty-three tested the arrangement. Considering the attendance of the membership, and that of the general public, the coöperation of other reform and Christian workers and representative people, in the way of papers, discussions, addresses, etc., she is most decidedly in favor of county, rather than inter-county institutes.

Other points of advantage are, more general advertising, as the local press gave large space willingly; church choirs and young people gladly contributed their treasure of music and song.

Three institutes a week are feasible. Mondays and Saturdays can be used when women see the need of this economy.

Miss Mary Hadley, Bloomingdale, state superintendent of this department, prepared the program, which was generally satisfactory, giving best of results and in many instances winning strong commendation. The state furnished programs free of cost for all the counties. Several counties considered it best to provide a special program, using the same subjects. Less than half a dozen counties changed the schedule dates. Our membership roll and subscription list to the Message and THE UNION SIGNAL, were handsomely added to. Twelve unions and four counties organized, and our special legislative work, woman's ballot, introduced. This manner of teaching in any state must have the effect of thorough cultivation of the soil, and the harvests in return will be measured by the soil's fertility. Three institutes called Mrs. Louise Rounds; two, Miss Marie Brehm, of Illinois; one, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Missouri. The rest of the work was done by our state workers, Madames McWhirter, Whitson, Hadley, Balch, Cammack, Beck and Trish, and several counties used only home talent. The expenses of these institutes come from collections, door fees of contests, and the county and local union treasuries. A contest carefully managed the second evening in every institute would save any drain on local treasuries.

Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, National organizer, filled five dates in our state, organizing two unions. The places visited spoke well of our sister and her services. Miss Marie Brehm, Chicago, gave us forty-seven dates. At one point five men stand pledged to give five dollars each to bring her back, sometime, for another week's work. That kind of praise means something. Voters were highly pleased with her address, "Everybody's Business." At one Sunday meeting standing room was at a discount and appreciation at white heat. Mrs. Blair, National chalk-talker, has just completed a trip through our state, filling several dates and organizing three L. T. L's. We shall plan for her coming again in the autumn. A month's work for Mrs. Helen L. Bullock and her daughter is planned for September, and we also expect Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, at that time.

Mrs. Lucy Thurman spent three full weeks on Hoosier soil, called by Mrs. Mary E. Sims, Indianapolis, superintendent of that department. She has a warm place in the hearts of white-ribboners of both races here; never fails to do work that will last and multiply.

Miss Anna Downey, of Evanston, made an exceptionally good record. Her scholarly attainments, her strong, sweet spirit and her devotion to the cause were points in the newspaper comments and reports of comrades in service.

Wabash union in April lost one of its honorary members, known throughout the state as Father B. O. Spencer. When the weight of years dimmed his eyes, he still continued to get up clubs for THE UNION SIGNAL and Organizer, and asked his friends to read their columns for him. He was a particular friend of our sister, Miss Lodie E. Reed, member of Wallace union, of this city, Indianapolis, known to white-ribboners the world round, now resting from her abundant labors in the company of the redeemed.

Churubusco union has driven out every saloon, and is standing guard that none return. Willard union, Frankfort, reports every member as being pledged to systematic giving. Valparaiso rejoices in a curfew ordinance. Many towns have secured this legislative blessing. Loogoolee entertained the normal teachers and school and W. C. T. U's, about two hundred in all, in the opera house. This union has something new in the "do-everything policy." The secretary, Mrs. D. T. Smith, writes souvenir papers, which has the effect of increasing the attendance at the regular meetings and adding to the membership; in many ways this union is strong and busy. It is an open question whether Frankfort, LaFayette, or Meridian union (of Indianapolis) will be the largest at the time of the state convention; they are the three largest in the state now.

The good points of other unions will be the subject of my next letter.

MARY E. BALCH,
State Reporter, Indianapolis.

Oregon.

THIS seems like an off time of the year, I have such meager reports from which to cull, but I feel sure our unions have been plodding persistently on, deeming what they have done deserves but little notice. Certainly the volunteer enthusiasm has been very engrossing, and for weeks and weeks after our lamented Miss Willard's death memorial services were taking place in, I should say, every locality where there was a grieving handful of women to organize them.

In Portland the Noon Rest has removed to better and more spacious quarters, although sorry as to the reason for its doing so. The owner of the old building ejected his tenants for the sake of making way for a saloon! The working girls show a growing appreciation of the noon-day bit of comfort prepared for them. During the illness of the regular matron, Mrs. Susie Foster, our state corresponding secretary has been devoting her time to the work. She read an able paper at the Woman's Congress held in Portland, on the aims and work of the W. C. T. U., in a broad sense first, and then localizing it as it is seen and known in Portland.

Our state superintendent for the labor department, Mrs. L. H. Additon, has lately returned from a lengthy visit to her old home in Massachusetts, bringing home notes and suggestions from the wider and fuller horizon. Flower Mission Day was one she stirred up for work in her department. The most beautiful of our special days throughout the year!

The Albina union, though a very small one, makes itself felt in that Portland suburb. They invited Mrs. M. L. Hidden, of Vancouver (of easy distance), to give an address at a gospel temperance service, when several ladies gave in their names as willing to augment their numbers. Mrs. Spangler gave soon after a public address as from the department of mothers' meetings. She is always welcome. They gave a tea at the Seamen's Bethel, with a prepared program. At the close one of the visitors remarked: "That is what I call practical Christianity."

Just as I said I expected, Monroe has profited by the accession of Mrs. L. P. Rounds into its pretty village. Two public services were shortly after held, and since then two medal contests and a Sunday service in a neighboring chapel; finally, one at the county poor farm, with fresh plans to follow on.

The inmates of the Florence Crittenton Refuge Home have been suffering from a severe attack of grippe—a sore fatigue and anxiety to their truly devoted Mrs. A. R. Riggs. She herself succumbed eventually. All are now mercifully restored to health.

THE Kentucky Chautauqua at Lexington has just closed a most successful session of eleven days. So successful has it been financially, that in spite of the predictions of many that this would be its last year, it is to continue, let us hope, for many years.

One of the most delightful and instructive features of the program every year is the hour given to the W. C. T. U. school of methods. The state president, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, has charge and management of this work, and each year has some woman of force and ability as conductor. This year we were so fortunate as to have Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, who has no superior as a speaker, and has always been loved and admired in Lexington, and many have expressed the desire to have her with us again next year. Her audiences increased each day, and many were led to think more earnestly of their duty in regard to the great questions under consideration, by her clear, logical arguments.

The following are the topics discussed: Temperance and Labor, Physiological Reasons for Total Abstinence, Sociological Reasons for Prohibition, Christian Citizenship, Purity, Franchise, Tobacco and other Narcotics, Organization and Young People.

Purity Literature for the Soldiers.

Our hearts have been turning toward the soldier boys in camp, with a great longing to do something for their comfort and aid, and other hearts across the water have been turning towards us with thoughts of helpfulness. Some days ago I received the following letter from Miss Ellice Hopkins:

HOME VIEW, RUSTHALL,
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, ENG.

Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, World's and National Superintendent of Purity, Ann Arbor, Mich.

DEAR MADAM:—Our English hearts are so much with you in this righteous war you are waging against intolerable wrong, and I was wondering whether the White Cross movement we are endeavoring to carry out through the length and breadth of our own army would carry any helpful suggestion to you, though your army may not stand in such dire need of it as ours. I have a strong feeling that we have no right to oppose the terrible military C. D. Acts of our country, and never put our hands to the true solution of what must in all countries always be an army problem, so in my sick room I set to work and raised nearly £400. We have two devoted men at the head of the White Cross League, one being a military man in extensive touch with the army. All the army temperance organizations were asked to co-operate in a careful hand-to-hand circulation of White Cross papers. Meetings are held, largely addressed by officers and the men enrolled. No words can express the interest the men show in the work, small knots of men forming themselves in a White Cross band, and becoming at once a centre of power for better things.

Far from finding war a bad time for carrying on the work, we found that as the men had a certain amount of time on their hands and little to read, the tents where the White Cross papers were given out were besieged by applicants, generally ten men for one paper, which was afterward passed from hand to hand. The men being removed from temptation were more open to impressions for good.

Of course, I am alluding to our Indian frontier war, where the pure, cold mountain air and terrible marches were found excellent conservers of morality. This, of course, would not be the case in that hot bed of moral corruption, Cuba, but the need would be all the greater. On the other hand, your citizen-army would present better material to work on, and the huge mass of men gathered together and to a certain degree sobered by the possibility of being dead on the morrow, seems to me an opportunity of striking at the root of the degradation of woman, which ought not to be lost. The chaplains, or any earnest officers you may know of, will help in the circulation of the White Cross papers, if you can supply them. You have excellent papers of your own.

Certainly in England we are making some headway. Men are beginning to feel more and more the utter base unmanliness of immorality and the terrible wrong done to women by keeping up, with their money, a pariah class of young girls. More thankful am I than I can say that in the stress of present perils the two nations are becoming one, and we women must be standing shoulder to shoulder and heart to heart in defense of the sanctity of womanhood and those great trusts of home and family which have been given to us as women.

Very sincerely yours,
ELLICE HOPKINS.

Acting in accordance with this spirit, I have secured the coöperation of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. in the distribution of appropriate literature to the troops; and now comes the query, How shall we secure the literature? We have the offer of obtaining White Cross leaflets at reduced rates, but some money must be raised even with this reduction. If Miss Hopkins in a sick room could raise nearly $2,000, surely we, by united, energetic effort, should raise something to further the same good work among our own soldiers.

The purity department will make a donation of $25 to this work, and as National purity superintendent, I wish it might be possible to expend a much larger sum for the purchase of White Cross and other purity literature and for the transportation of the same to the army in care of the Y. M. C. A.

Yours hopefully,
MARY WOOD-ALLEN,
Ann Arbor, Mich.

Department of Fairs and Expositions.

The work of the W. C. T. U. on fair grounds, at Fourth of July celebrations, harvest homes, picnics and other places where people gather in large numbers, is appreciated.

In many places fair directors give ground free, for buildings or space to put up tents or booths, and have been loud in their praises of the good accomplished by the W. C. T. U. The "rest room" provided for the weary women and children has been the means of interesting the indifferent, who went in to rest. The ever-watchful white-ribboner seizes such opportunities to increase membership. The printed page is given as freely as the ice water, so generously provided by the W. C. T. U., very often the only place on the grounds where a drink of water can be obtained. Attractive lunch counters have yielded a goodly revenue, and fancy articles have found favor with the public and sold readily.

Permission has been obtained from several fair associations to hold medal contests on a given day, and speakers from our ranks have edified the crowds. Prizes have been awarded at fairs and other gatherings for essays on "Hygiene." At one place in Missouri, a nursery was kept open where the little ones were cared for, a small amount being charged for service.

I hope a full report of all work done will be sent in as soon as the blanks are sent out. More work along this line can be accomplished if superintendents are appointed by the local unions.

This season I would suggest that this department help the department of soldiers and sailors, by calling on the farmers to bring in of their abundance, for hospital use, to help the "boys" at the front. Tell them you will receive a dozen of eggs, chickens, turkeys, geese, wheat, corn, apples or anything that can be turned into money, or jellies and unfermented grape juice, in small quantities, for immediate use, as open cans or jars permit contents soon to spoil. Make your headquarters a receiving depot, and let it be known through the daily and weekly papers a week or two before the fair opens. You will find your appeal will meet a generous response.

Among the horrors of war the hospital service is the only mitigation. It is the white-winged messenger of God, a ministering spirit to the victims of war. Tell the people what you need; the response will be prompt and generous.

Keep an accurate account of all contributions, publish a list, sell produce to the highest bidder, then remit to your state treasurer, so your state may receive credit. Your state treasurer will remit to a brigade surgeon, or to one of the ladies named by Mrs. Thacher.

The following list of articles has been given by a brigade surgeon, showing their needs: Shirts, drawers, towels, slippers, sheets, bandages, pillow cases, wash rags, assorted prepared cotton, toilet soap, a few combs, fine and coarse; cotton cloth for various uses, to be left in the pieces contributed, of this forty or fifty yards; small tin cups, teaspoons, table spoons, knives and forks, all common; a few salt servers, a few granite wash basins of various sizes, a few dozen cheap pocket handkerchiefs, several tooth brushes, needles, assorted; thread, white and black; black shirt and pants buttons, several cards of black buttons for regulation shirts; socks, any color but white—dark colors choice.

Use the Fair number of THE UNION SIGNAL freely, leaflets on beer, cider, tobacco and scientific temperance instruction, also those on the treatment of animals. Will you try?

Yours with best wishes,

Department of Proportionate Giving.

The report blanks have been sent out, and I hope each local superintendent will feel herself responsible to fill hers and return to her state superintendent. For every one that misses this, there is just that much lacking of an accurate report, just that much of a fracture in the complete structure.

Early in the year a letter was sent to each local union in the states which has taken up this department. Another letter to the presidents of states which have not yet taken up this department was also sent, begging attention be given to it. These last have proved serviceable in more than one instance, and I think the next roster of our department will show several new names. We can not expect to succeed financially till we come to the divine plan.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL AND COMRADE ORGANIZERS:—I believe it my time to write to our columns again. My letter will be brief, for I am too busy with the doing of things to take much time to tell about it. I began work in the upper peninsula of Michigan in May, and have been hard at work ever since. I expect to be here for some time yet.

As it is not always possible to get the people into the churches or halls this warm weather, we have been holding many street meetings with most excellent success. I wish to recommend these meetings to all. If one has a voice loud enough for street meetings, I believe more can be accomplished in one such than half a dozen others.

Just now the war takes the attention of the people a great deal, still we have no reason to complain of our success in any way. We have been busy gathering up literature for the soldiers, and also helping the women to get comfort bags off to them.

Soon after the Michigan soldiers were camped at Island Lake, it was my privilege to hold some meetings with them, and the results were most satisfactory. We circulated, or rather caused to be circulated, one thousand pledge cards. The chaplain afterwards sent for five hundred more.

One thing I am sure of, and that is, no kind of work is so much needed among the soldiers as temperance work; many can be persuaded to let the "canteen" alone, if work of the right kind is done among SONGS OF HAPPY LIFE.

Compiled by Sarah J. Eddy.
Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, Superintendent of the Department of Mercy, says: "Probably the most delightful book of the kind ever issued. The literary merit of the book is of a high order, but its crowning virtue is that it teaches a tender and loving consideration for all created living things. It points to the highest ideals, and no child trained in its use will be likely to develop a coarse or cruel disposition."
This book should be in every home as well as in every school.

Form of Bequest.

I give and bequeath to "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" the sum of (———) for the use of said institution absolutely.

An Appreciative Letter.

A former secretary for the L. T. L. branch of Indiana, Kathrin T. A. Straw, writes to the hospital board from North Manchester, Ind., such an appreciative letter concerning the hospital that we give it herewith entire:

"It is in my heart to write you a letter to tell you how much I appreciate the privilege of being an inmate of our National Temperance Hospital.

"In the ten years of my state work for the Loyal Temperance Legion—with time, money and vitality freely given—I was frequently asked, 'Are you paid for your work?' to which I replied, 'Yes, with a consciousness of duty well done.' 'But, do you not receive a salary?' 'Oh, yes, a good salary which I will draw after I climb the golden stairs.' But now, dear sisters, I feel that, in what the hospital has done for me, I have drawn some of that salary at the foot of the golden stairs and through its beneficent influence my face is again turned humanityward. The bread cast upon W. C. T. U. waters has returned to me after many days.

"From the very beginning of our hospital I have been in sympathy with it and interested in its welfare. Personally and officially I did what I could for it because I had great faith in the need and far-reaching influence of the principles which it is aimed to demonstrate, and now that I have been for eight weeks an inmate I feel, if possible, more interested, at least that having been there my influence can be more effective in its behalf than before. I see, too, as I did not before, how much need we have of a larger and better building—that our cause of non-alcoholic medication has become popular among physicians and patrons to the extent that we have outgrown our present quarters and are not measuring up to our opportunities, and besides with a larger and more modern building we could accommodate more patients and at better prices and make the hospital self-sustaining.

"If the rank and file of our white-ribboners knew more about the hospital, its work, its needs and its opportunities, and were impressed with the idea of what a National hospital ought to be, and could be made, they would not only feel the responsibility of helping to make it such, but would come to the rescue with an enthusiasm never before manifested.

"I congratulate the board on having in the hospital a matron of such marked ability and gracious presence as Mrs. Milner, a woman so capable of making the many household wheels run in such a smooth, steady and economical manner that it is almost a marvel. It was my fortune to be in the hospital when there were five new girls on probation, as nurses. All but one had everything to learn. It was gratifying to observe how they grew in knowledge, tact and skill, which speaks well for the powers of discernment, training qualities and management of dear Miss Kellogg. I am very grateful for the kindness and care I received from the nurses and Dr. Tenny, and all connected with the hospital, and to faithful Harry in whose strong arms my unconscious body was three times carried up stairs. To the skill and generosity of Dr. Boynton — that Great-heart to whom I owe very much, and as Miss Willard said of Dr. Hills, 'I shall remember his loving kindness through all eternity.'"

Now that vacation times are nearly over we hope the friends will interest themselves greatly for the hospital. Yours,

MARGARET INGLEHART.

Who Has a Good Recipe?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our local papers have been publishing a recipe for blackberry cordial for the benefit of the emergency corps and one ingredient is "good brandy." The accompanying statement is made that without the "brandy" the cordial will not keep. Will you please publish in your very next issue a recipe warranted to keep and be all that a good cordial can be, without any alcoholic ingredient? You will bless many homes and help the soldiers. As soon as it comes out I will have it copied in our local papers. So please give it without fail. I wish I had it to-day for the emergency corps are at work. Yours very truly,

W. C. T. U. News.

[Bright, newsy items of special interest are acceptable for this column, but do not send detailed reports of unions or conventions to us. Send them to your state reporter.]

THE local union at Washington, D. C., known as the Mary Clement Leavitt Y, has changed its name.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY has been constantly at work since the National Convention in New York and New Jersey. She has organized twelve new unions and tied the white ribbon on several hundred new members.

THE union reading-rooms are a great feature of our work in Texarkana, Tex. The Cotton Belt Railroad contributes liberally to their support. Miss Helen Gould donates a dozen or two of the finest periodicals year after year.

TRIUMPH, Ill., has a little union of eight members. A Fourth of July celebration in the grove under its auspices was a great success. A good temperance program was given, a picnic dinner was enjoyed, and many a young man kept through this diversion from the temptations of the town.

THE statistics of ten cities in North Carolina, where the school savings bank system has been in vogue show that in three years the children have deposited $54,598.21, and have now to their credit $23,672.89.

THE address of Miss Belle Kearney for the summer is Saunderston, R. I. Miss Kearney's last address in the South resulted in the organization of a large union at Pulaski, Tenn. She will be in the East until quite late.

THE West Philadelphia W. C. T. U. is increasing its coffers and adding to its popularity by giving excursions each year to Cape May. The Watersprite, a little folder published in the interest of the excursion by the press superintendent, is bright, newsy and well filled with advertising matter.

ORDERS against the canteen system have been made and enforced in many camps. Waltham, Mass., reports this enforcement by General Graham at Camp Alger, and Olympia, Wash., reports the same restrictions having been made by Colonel Wholley, of the First Regiment of Washington volunteers. Scranton, Pa., and Milo, Mo., unions report good work being done for the soldiers.

MRS. E. S. DAYTON, president W. C. T. U., of Port Jefferson, N. Y. writes: "The W. C. T. U. of Port Jefferson, N. Y., through local papers advertised a 'Soldiers' Meeting' to make 'comfort bags,' and asked help. They received five dollars in money and other contributions that enabled them to make and send seventy-five 'comfort bags' to our soldier boys, each containing, beside other things, a Testament and pledge card."

THE W. C. T. U. of Augusta, Ga., is prominent in mission work. They have bought a lot and built a home upon it, and are free from taxes by instituting a chapel in which religious services are held. A Christian union mission has been established on the corner of Marbury and Reynolds streets, in the heart of the slums of the city, and has succeeded in saving about seventy women of ill-fame. Out of this number, only a very few have returned to their immoral lives after being reformed by the mission. Three houses of ill-fame have been closed.

IN writing of the free lunch to soldiers opened in Washington, D. C., Mrs. Platt says: "We have served 830 men. Our rooms are open all day. There is a reading table, writing material (and many letters are there written by the boys), newspapers, magazines, leaflets. They can have a 'wash,' a good, substantial lunch, and a rest, all free. Good women are there to talk with them, and many a word is said that the boys will remember and that must have a good influence. They seem very grateful and one, just a boy, said to-day: 'I shall write home and tell mamma all about this.' Another one, when asked if he knew any white-ribboners at home said, 'Oh, yes, mamma is a white-ribboner,' and then he choked up and could say no more. We had a song and prayer service and a number of the soldiers led in prayer, and our women gave short talks. We had about 100 men there up to four o'clock, when I left. We have been told that the saloon men are grumbling because our free lunch attracts the boys away from the saloons. Our own women do the work and the supplies are donated. On the 'Fourth' we fed about 150 men. We started with nothing, but have had enough each day."

Publisher's Notes.

AUGUST BIBLE READING. "Vines and Branches," by Rev. Frances E. Townsley. Christ took His illustrations chiefly from nature. The interdependent relation of vine and branches is pointed out; also ways in which the vine of our fields or vineyards is both like and unlike Christ. The business of the branches is to bear fruit, not to make it, and there are, we are reminded, different stages of development. Stem, leaf, bud are each necessary to the perfect berry. The value of the pruning process and the importance of abiding in the vine is emphasized.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR AUGUST. "Physical Culture," by Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of that department. The connection of this work with temperance is explained and reasons given why all people—men, women and children—should take systematic physical exercise. Mrs. Leiter also tells how to arouse an interest in this subject among parents and teachers. how to start a gymnasium in a small town, where to obtain helps, and furnishes information about the department generally. The one fact alone that this branch of our work originated with Miss Willard and was often referred to by her as her "child," will kindle a desire in the hearts of W. C. T. U. women to know more about its aims and methods.

The memorial volume of Miss Willard's Life should be obtained from the Publishing House of whom you have purchased your prospectus. If you have not placed your order, it can be filled at regular list prices by sending $2 for cloth edition, $2.75 half morocco, $3.75 full morocco, to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple. We do not carry these books in stock but can place your orders with our general agents, through whom the book is sold by subscription.

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

IF YOU LEAVE HOME
for the summer, go where you will find almost literally a new world. Such a spot is Yellowstone Park. There is no place like it in the world. You will be astonished at what you see and learn there. A month's outing in those mountains 7,000 feet above the sea level, in an atmosphere pure and invigorating, would add years to your life. There are four modern hotels, good roads—maintained by the U. S. Government—for riding, driving or cycling; riding horses and pack trains. Geysers, canyons, mud springs, lakes, cataracts and cascades in large number, are crowded into a space 54 by 62 miles in size. If you can afford it, you wrong yourself by not going there, especially if you are a patriotic American. If you can not afford it, then go to beautiful Leech Lake in Minnesota, a new and popular resort. New hotels, fine fishing and hunting, and good boating at reasonable rates. Send Chas. S. Fee of Northern Pacific Railway, St. Paul, Minn., six cents for Wonderland, '98, that describes by pen and picture both resorts. Mention where advertisement was seen.

A VACATION in NORTHERN MICHIGAN is an experience every one who can possibly do so should enjoy. The delightfully cool breezes, fresh from the great lakes, invigorate and refresh one as no other tonic can do. The Northland is truly a natural sanitarium. The Chicago & West Michigan Ry. is, with its connections from Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, etc., a popular route to the Traverse City region, and Charlevoix, Petoskey, Bay View, Mackinac Island, etc. Through sleeping cars leave St. Louis via Illinois Central R. R., leave Chicago via Michigan Central R. R., and Detroit via the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western R. R., all going via Grand Rapids via the C. & W. M. Ry., and arriving at the resorts in time for breakfast next morning. Send for a copy of our summer folder. GEO. DEHAVEN, General Passenger Agent, Grand Rapids, Mich.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, St. Paul, Minn., November 11-16.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue—August 18—will be our annual Fair number and will contain articles of special interest to agricultural communities. Local unions should order liberally for distribution at state and county fairs.

WE are informed that Kentucky distillers have expressed their intention of donating 50,000 bottles of whisky to the American soldiers in Cuba as soon as the occupation of that island is accomplished. We are wondering why the distillers object so strongly to the presence of American soldiers in Cuba that they are thus planning to join forces with a tropical climate in killing them off.

APROPOS of the closing of Chicago gambling dens by the chief of police and the statement in a morning paper that "notice was served by detectives wherever a game was found in operation," the Chicago Record caustically remarks that "in the same way burglars should be notified to behave themselves whenever they are found cutting out a window pane or drilling the lock on a back door." We believe with the Record that there is considerable food for thought in the tender solicitude manifested toward this class of lawbreakers by the city officials.

THE new charter of Montreal, Canada, extends municipal suffrage to widows and unmarried women who lease or own taxable property in the city. This is in line with the just principle, "no taxation without representation," but why should our friends across the border discriminate against women with husbands? This is to place a premium upon "single blessedness," which, as has been recently decided by the courts of the mother country, is contrary to the spirit (if not the letter) of English law. But perhaps married women in Canada do not own or lease taxable property?

MISS AGNES SLACK, World's corresponding secretary, asks us to call special attention to the action of the executive committee of the B. W. T. A. at its recent meeting at Duxhurst, by which it was decided to commemorate, in appropriate manner, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Crusades. She urges that W. C. T. U. organizations all over the world observe this anniversary, holding special meetings and presenting the history of the pentecostal uprising which finally crystallized into the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We would add our word of appeal to Miss Slack's timely suggestion, believing with her that immense gain would thereby come to our World's organization.

THE city of Chicago, it is said, spends $70,000 annually for drink. This amounts in three years to the entire money value of the property destroyed in the great fire of 1871. The license system, further, quarters upon the city 30,000 saloon-keepers and their assistants. Truly, as said Dr. Henson in a recent temperance speech, if such an army were quartered upon them by a foreign foe the people would rise in their might and free themselves from the tyranny of such high-handed proceedings. But because the oppressor is of their own household and in large measure of their own creating, they have grown accustomed to their bondage, and, except for the protest of a few whose efforts for freedom are denounced as fanatical, the people of this rum-ridden city accept the legalized saloon and its results as "necessary evils."

THE national prohibition committee, through Chairman Dickie, has sent out a call for help in the Pennsylvania campaign. The unusual combination of interests involved in this campaign, has, it is pointed out, focused upon Dr. Swallow, prohibition candidate for governor, the eyes not only of prohibitionists but of observing men of all parties. Dr. Swallow stands upon a broad platform. He represents more than the single issue, prohibition. He stands for anti-bossism, for the destruction of "Quayism" and the entire republican machine, whose corruptness has despoiled the treasury and disgraced the name of the Keystone state. He counts among his following, not only prohibitionists, but a goodly proportion of the decent element in all parties, and his election would mean an important victory for freedom and humanity

WE regret even to seem to detract in smallest measure from the honors which have been heaped upon the redoubtable "Toots," but in the interests of strict veracity we desire to correct a misapprehension which has gone abroad concerning the amount of money that renowned feline is said to have contributed to the National W. C. T. U. A correspondent, writing in our issue of June 16, under the heading, "Miss Willard's last visit to Toots," states that he added $2,000 to the treasury through the sale of his pictures. We are informed upon unimpeachable authority that the sum would be nearer correct if divided by one hundred. The writer probably confused the $2,000 raised by the children for the bronze figure of the fountain at the entrance to Willard Hall with the twenty odd dollars Toots was instrumental in raising for the purpose of sending out literature with which to start L. T. L. organizations.

WE bespeak patience on the part of our contributors. THE UNION SIGNAL vacation always brings an embarrassment of riches to its various departments, and we must ask for a little time in which to bring our knitting to the seam needle again. We wished to make this gentle reminder last week and to say some other things upon resuming our routine duties, but the space was given to paragraphs by the National officers concerning the Temple meeting, and this precluded any thing more than the announcement of departures. We are believing that the comprehensive statements made by the National executive, and the reply to the same by the Temple Board, so completely includes the whole question, pro and con, that a further elaboration could not possibly make the matter any plainer. We are also convinced that treatment of the subject by piecemeal would only serve to confuse and lead to wrong conclusions. We therefore hope that white-ribboners will be content to find answers to their questions in what has already been printed. Every woman ought to be willing to make a faithful study of the published statements, and if necessary to "ask her husband at home," rather than to ask for further discussion in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. By common consent the field of endeavor for the three hundred thousand dollars is open till November. The W. C. T. U. can, therefore, now that the facts are before them, well afford to leave the more weighty question of entire ownership, to the National Convention.

Current Events.

Spain Considering Terms.

Premier Sagasta Summons Leaders of all Parties to a Conference.

THE Spanish Cabinet Council, after a lengthy conference, finally accepted the American conditions of peace. Such is the news cabled from Madrid by the Associated Press on Sunday. The formal reply submitting to America's terms is hourly expected in Washington. It has been sanctioned by the queen regent and telegraphed to the Spanish ambassador at Paris with instructions to convey it promptly to the French minister of foreign affairs, who in turn will transmit it to the French ambassador at Washington who has represented Spain in the peace negotiations.

The condition of the troops at Santiago has become so serious, owing to the ravages of fever, that the whole command has been ordered home, with the exception of two regiments of regulars and five of immunes, which will be left to police the province. The troops will be brought to Montauk Point, L. I., for recuperation, and will be ready to return to Cuba for active service in the autumn should a treaty of peace not be effected in the meantime.

Several minor points on the eastern coast of Porto Rico have surrendered to the American marines without resistance. The city of San Juan will be the next to fall should the Spanish government not hasten to accept the peace propositions offered. Admiral Dewey still "holds the fort" in the Philippines, and the Pope has telegraphed the archbishop of Manila to place himself under the protection of the United States.

The International Sunday School Convention.

ABOUT 2,500 delegates attended the World's Sunday-school Convention held in London. They represented 24,000 Sunday-schools, 2,500,000 teachers and 25,000,000 scholars. The tone of the meetings was spiritual and evangelistic. Tender allusions were made to the missing four who went down on the lost Bourgogne. The American flag was generously in evidence, and rousing applause greeted every allusion to America. A reception and lunch was tendered by the British Bible Society. The delegates were also received by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of London. Among the most interesting addresses were those of welcome by the Marquis of Northampton, by Mr. Edward Towers for the churches of Great Britain and Ireland, and by Rev. John Clifford, D. D., for the churches of England and Wales. Rev. Dr. Spalding, of Massachusetts, responded for the United States, and Hon. S. H. Blake for Canada. Many countries were represented. Bishop Thoburn, of India, spoke of 5,538 schools, with over 257,000 teachers and pupils in India. Dr. Joseph Parker, of London, preached a great sermon to a packed audience on "Subdue It." The chief inspiration given by the many notable speakers and remarkable addresses was that of the value and the potency of Sunday-school work.

Temperance.

THE temperance people of Danville, Va., begin the publication of a monthly paper this month to be called the No-License Advocate.

THE supreme court of Wisconsin has rendered a decision confirming the decision of a lower court that the law passed by the Modern Woodmen prohibiting liquor dealers from becoming or continuing as members is legal.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Toronto, Canada, under date of July 30: "It is authoritatively stated that the Dominion cabinet has decided to take the vote on national prohibition during September. It will probably be Thursday, September 29."

IT is arranged that the Rev. Dr. John Clifford, the eminent London Nonconformist minister, shall preside over the great annual public meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance, to be held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, England, on Tuesday, October 18.

THE Good Templar's Watchword notes that, "Our brother, the Rev. J. H. Hector, the black knight, refused to take a subscription for the Livingstone College from a wine and spirit merchant, who is also a Wesleyan Sunday-school superintendent, and had already given a grand organ to the Methodist church. Some of the Wesleyan ministers are displeased with Brother Hector's action, and making it a bit 'hot' for him."

WHEN General Shafter entered the city of Santiago, according to the newspaper reports, the first thing that he did was to order all the saloons of the city closed. When the troops captured El Caney, the press dispatches announced that among the spoils captured by the American army were twenty barrels of wine. All this was poured out on the ground, to prevent it falling into the hands of our soldiers. Now that General Miles has captured the city of Ponce, Porto Rico, the newspaper correspondents tell us that one of the first official things that he did was to order all the saloons and liquor shops of the city closed. The newspaper accounts also state that no alcohol is used in the hospitals of Siboney in the treatment of fever cases. In this connection, the remarkably small ratio of deaths is almost startling—less than half a dozen daily deaths, and 400 or 500 persons daily discharged out of over 3,000 cases of fever alone.

In the States of America, and in our Canadian, Australian and South African colonies, laws have been enacted prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to young people, and we are not without hope that some day our own country will demand a similar concession from its Parliament. Already the Isle of Man has uttered its voice in relation to this matter. In the London Daily Mail, for April 27th last, the following paragraph appeared: "An excellent amendment of the licensing acts has been passed by the Manx House of Keys, under which a fine of £5 may be imposed upon any licensed person who sells intoxicating liquor to a child under the age of fourteen. Some more stringent regulations on this head are greatly needed." There are difficulties, no doubt, in the way of proving the age; but the protection of young children might, at least, be insured by fixing the limit at sixteen.—The Alliance News.

About Women.

MRS. FLORA B. RENKES, of Michigan, is a candidate for state superintendent of schools on the democratic ticket.

THE municipal authorities of Paisley, Scotland, have appointed a woman as sanitary inspector in connection with an epidemic of measles.

MISS HANNAH KINDBOM, a bright young woman of Swedish birth, has been installed as professor of nursing in the University of Texas.

THE Rev. O. R. Miller, of Holyoke, Mass., is doing good work by contributing each Saturday a column of temperance matter to two daily papers in that city.

PRESIDENT HARPER of the University of Chicago, announces a gift of $15,000 from Miss Katharine Gross, of New York, for the promotion of the study of astronomy.

THE new charter of Montreal, Canada, gives full municipal suffrage to women, either widows or unmarried, who occupy either as lessees or owners, property in the city subject to taxation.

THE London school board has decided that one of the two medical practitioners to be appointed to examine defective children shall be a woman, who shall examine the women applicants for teaching positions.

MISS MARION GRAVES, of Minneapolis, Minn., is winning fame by the superb work she has done in designing and executing a cathedral glass window, which is now on exhibition at the Transmississippi Exposition in Omaha.

MME. J. LANGLES, of New Orleans, and her daughter, Miss Angelle Langles, who perished in the Bourgogne disaster, left among other bequests, $10,000 to the Charity Hospital in New Orleans, $1,000 to the ambulance fund, $2,000 to the House of the Good Shepherd, and $3,000 to the Newsboys' Home. Provision was also made for the erection in that city of a memorial hospital for women and children.

IT is stated that the Union Pacific Railroad has taken a stand against women clerks and stenographers, having, it is said, already discharged a number of them. There are about 200 women employed in the different offices, all giving general satisfaction.

IT is reported that the Czar of Russia is in favor of all movements in the direction of the advancement of women. A new law, for example, has just been promulgated throwing open to women physicians all official positions, on perfect equality with men, including the same salary and the official pension that accrues after a certain number of years of service. A fine provision of this pension is that it passes from father to children, and the same advantage is now extended to the mother physicians.

Educational.

REV. DR. RICHARD GEAR HOBBS, of Springfield, Ill., has received news of his election as president of Bengali College, the Methodist Episcopal college for males at Calcutta, India. The college has 600 students.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM R. HARPER announced at the twenty-fourth convocation of the University of Chicago, gifts to the institution aggregating $30,000, as follows: Mrs. Emmons Blaine, $25,000; Mrs. William R. Linn, $3,000; Mrs. A. C Bartlett, $500; the Castle family, $1,500.

The gift of Mrs. Blaine is to establish in the down-town district of Chicago a branch of the university for the higher education of teachers in the public schools.

The following is the plan for the college as outlined by President Harper:

That there be established at a central point the full curriculum of the freshman and sophomore classes as taught in the university, the work to be organized upon the same standard and in accordance with the same general regulations.

That as occasion may warrant or demand, courses more advanced and less advanced be offered in connection with those ordinarily termed freshmen and sophomore.

That there be selected a separate and independent faculty with its own dean, the work of the faculty to be recognized by the university in the same way as similar work at the university is recognized.

That courses of instruction be given in the afternoons and on Saturdays, each course consisting of four hours a week for twelve weeks, each class meeting twice a week, each session being a session of two hours.

That a faculty be constituted, which shall consist of twenty or more instructors, representing the departments of pedagogy, psychology, history, sociology, Greek, Latin, French, German, English, mathematics, physics, chemistry, geology and biology.

That teachers in the grammar and high school grades of the city schools be received without examination, and that others be received in accordance with the usage of the university.

That the smallest possible fee be charged for the instruction given.

For the sum of $6,000 or $8,000 a year a thousand or more of the teachers of Chicago could be enabled to do a work which would not only elevate themselves, but exert an influence upon the instruction of every child with whom the teacher came into contact. The plan contemplates a college for teachers, not a college in which the great proportion of time should be given, as in normal schools, to the study of methods, but a college in which the teacher would be brought face to face with material that in one form or another would later be transmitted to those who have been intrusted to his care.

Abroad.

THE Earl of Minto is to be the successor of Lord Aberdeen as governor-general of Canada, the appointment having been approved by the Queen.

IT is reported that Hawaii has agreed to pay Japan £40,000 in settlement of the dispute which arose out of the exclusion of Japanese emigrants from the Hawaiian Islands.

PRINCE OTTO VON BISMARCK, "the iron chancellor" of Germany, died on July 30, aged eighty-three years. Every possible honor was paid his memory by the German people, and messages of condolence and tribute were sent by the official representatives of nearly every foreign power.

SIR ROBERT SEXTON, the new lord mayor of Dublin, is the first conservative elected to that office during the past fifteen years. The vote in the national council was largely in his favor and the action is regarded as a distinct departure in the politics of Ireland. It is freely predicted that the choice of Sir Robert for the dignified position of executive of the Irish capital is the marking of a new era in Irish politics. The new mayor will hold his office during the year of 1899

In Sardis.

BY LOUISE MANNING HODGKINS.

Revelation 2: 1-6.

FOUL the streets of Sardis thread
Many a way of shame,
Walk I there among the dead,
Dead beyond reclaim.

Slain by passion, greed and crime,
Oft across my way,
Lies the youth in manhood's prime,
Lies the head of gray.

Yet the King of spirits seven,
In His hand a star,
Speaks from out His highest heaven,
"There thy goings are!"

"Strengthen, comfort, watch apace,
Not one soul deny,
Ready are they for my grace,
Ready, too, to die.

"Raiment fair awaits thy toil,
Where beyond the strife
Stands thy name without assoil
In the Book of Life."

Lord, I kiss thy garment's hem
Only heavenly might
Can in Sardis take of them
Who shall "walk in white."

Miss Kate's Boys.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

"THEY'RE about as mean a set of boys as I ever see in my life!" declared Roxy Ann with characteristic energy. "They're forever pleggin' the life out of some cat or dog, or picking on some little feller—though I must say it's only that Crandall boy that does that—an' 'coonin' apples, as they call it, and—well, I can't begin to tell their mean, hateful tricks. All I say is I bet you'll rue the day you hired this cottage way out here in the suburbs amongst them pesky boys. They're meaner'n pusley!"

Miss Kate smiled in her serene way as her energetic handmaiden paused for breath. "But what if I could do something for those boys, Roxy Ann?" said she. "What if I should get acquainted with them and try to do them good? I do think that my having been sandwiched in between two brothers was not in vain. I'm sure I understand boys and their ways pretty well by this time."

Roxy Ann sniffed with something like contempt. "I don't doubt but what you do, Miss Kate," she said grudgingly, "and I don't doubt but what them boys need a restrainin', or a guidin' hand, but they don't need yours—at least they hadn't ought to have it. They'd wear you out completely, an' you know you ain't over an' above strong. Why, that's the very reason you come way out here, five miles out of the city, to get the country air, an' rest an' quiet. You'd be just crazy to undertake to do anything for them boys. But I know you, an' I haven't a mite of doubt but what you'll do it. You're clever an' kind, Miss Kate, as every one knows—no one more than I—but I do say it's almost wicked to waste your strength—what little you've got—an' your energies, on such a thankless pack of boys. Like as not if you was to speak to 'em when they go past to school they'd only sass you back instead of tippin' their hats like nice boys would."

Miss Kate smiled. "I'm willing to take the risk, Roxy Ann," she said. "If they get saucy or throw things at me I'll call for you to help me."

Roxy Ann laughed grimly, "Wouldn't I just enjoy giving it to that big, hulking Williams boy with my broom? Well, I guess! I seem to owe him a grudge just on general principles. He slouches by so plegged lazy I can't hardly keep from running out an' proddin' him up with my broom!"

Miss Kate rose from her seat beside the kitchen table where Roxy Ann had been industriously washing the dishes. "Well, we'll see," she said, briskly, "whatever I do or don't do you'll think it's about right, won't you, Roxy Ann?"

Miss Kate flashed her radiant smile upon her servant as she left the room and Roxy Ann smiled back. "Bless her!" said that good woman, as the door closed. "If ever there lived a perfect angel in this world—that smile of hers would win the heart of even the toughest of them boys, an' if she's set on doing for 'em I'll pitch in an' help"—which was characteristic of Roxy Ann.

Miss Kate, aged thirty-eight, alone in the world but for faithful Roxy Ann, who had been her friend and helper for years, "not so strong as she might be," as Roxy Ann would say, and possessed of fortune enough to make herself comfortable for life, "which is fortune enough for anybody," to again quote Roxy Ann—Miss Kate with her plain-featured face which was made beautiful by her kind brown eyes, soft brown hair, and more than all, by that wonderful smile of hers, had long ago decided that it was her mission to live the life of an old maid and, in a quiet way do good. Miss Kate had had her early love affair—what old maid has not!—and had survived it gracefully.

For days Miss Kate, whose pleasant business it was to spend some hours of each day before her easel, had sat in her lace-draped bay-window and casually watched the boys and girls as they wandered past on their way to and from school. Her heart had grown to ache at the listless, dawdling, dragging pace of some of them, the vulgar words of others and the general lack of something to do which made the boys, as Roxy Ann expressed it, "so plegged mean an' lazy."

Miss Kate at her piano in the soft twilight the day after her talk with Roxy Ann, struck tender chords and ran her practiced fingers over the keys in little ripples of melody, while Roxy Ann sat in her big, old-fashioned yellow rocker and knitted long, gray stockings as she swayed back and forth in perfect content, listening.

The music ceased abruptly, and Miss Kate wheeled around on the stool. "Wouldn't it be nice for those boys to come in here, say, one or two evenings a week, and learn to sing some of these dear old hymns?" she said. "When I think of their growing up to be men without these precious memories of better things to go with them—for I've found out that not one of them has a really pleasant home—I could almost cry. Their young lives are missing so much!"

Roxy Ann, in her yellow rocker, thought unutterable things, but the soft twilight and its gentle influence kept her silent. Miss Kate went on more confidently. "The evenings are growing long, now, and I'm going to ask them here. You'll help me, won't you, Roxy Ann? You'll surely know some nice way to make it more pleasant. They can't sing sacred songs all the evening, you know—nor any other, for I mean to get one of those glee club song books they use at college."

What it cost Roxy Ann to fall in with this plan, her mistress did not guess. But after a little silence, in which her methodical soul revolted at the thought of noisy boots, muddy footprints and badly combed hair, or hair not combed at all, she said: "I've had some experience with boys myself, an' I ain't afraid to guess that popcorn an' apples go a good long way towards softenin' a boy's tough heart. I ain't sure that molasses candy don't accomplish about the same purpose that singin' hymns does."

Miss Kate laughed. "Thank you, Roxy Ann," she cried, "you're a jewel! Your practical soul thought of the very thing! Apples, popcorn an' molasses candy—we'll have 'em all!"

The next morning Miss Kate was working busily away at her violet bed in the front yard as "the gang," as they called themselves, sauntered by to school. She rose, trowel in hand, and smiled brightly upon them. "Good morning, boys," she said, quite as though she had known them always. One or two answered her greeting but not one touched his hat. Roxy Ann, peering unseen through the lace curtains of the bay window, felt a sudden desire to rush out, catch Jed Williams by his slovenly collar and "jerk him up smart" as he lounged upon the shoulder of a smaller boy. "Bet she'll be sorry she ever tackled that mean set of boys," she said to herself, "but if she will do it I ain't goin' to hender."

To say "the gang" was astonished at Miss Kate's invitation would be only a faint way of expressing it. Never in their rough, neglected lives had a like invitation come to them before. But when she had named the early hour at which they were to come and smiled brightly upon them as she turned once more to her violet bed they one and all slouched and drifted away down the street without as much as a single thank you or even a good-bye.

"It looks rather dubious," thought Miss Kate as she worked among the violets, "I really don't believe they'll come, but we'll get ready anyhow and see."

What the boys were saying as they reached the school-house grounds and leaned against the fence was something like this: "Aw, I know what she's after, kids. Wants to make a Sunday-school out of us. Kind o' home missionary business, you know. Mebby we need it, but we don't take it from her, do we, fellers?"

"I ain't a-goin', you bet. Pass around Bibles an' hymn-books. 'Now, boys, let us read a chapter an' sing a hymn'—that's what she'll say."

"She's mighty pleasant lookin' anyhow, an' smiles sweeter'n taffy. Wonder if she means it. I ain't afraid to go if you other fellers will."

"Go? well, I guess not! Go to a evening Sunday-school class? Nit!"

But at seven o'clock that October evening Miss Kate, peering through the gauzy silk curtain at her front door saw to her smiling surprise "the gang" congregated at the front gate. Some of them looked sheepish and ashamed, one or two looked bold and daring, and others stood about uncertain what to do. There were seven of them.

Miss Kate noiselessly opened the door a little and the pleasant odor of buttered popcorn stole out upon the air. She listened breathlessly. "Whew, boys, smell 'em! popcorn! What's the matter with goin' in!"

Miss Kate stepped out on the porch. She had on a pretty, warm, red house dress, with creamy lace at the neck and wrists. She had dressed for these street urchins with the care of a maid dressing for her lover. Now she smilingly came down the steps. "Why, how nice and prompt you are, boys; come right in," and before Jed Williams could realize it he was walking up the steps beside Miss Kate, while the other boys followed like a flock of sheep.

Inside how bright and warm and cozy it was! In Miss Kate's sitting room was no useless bric-a-brac which a clumsy boy could tip over. Wide, easy couches, rocking-chairs and inviting window seats held out pleasant inducements, and the open piano lit by the rosy light of the tall, red-shaded lamp looked hospitable. And to make them all more easy, Miss Kate excused herself for a few minutes and left them to themselves, while she went to the savory-smelling kitchen to report her success to Roxy Ann. Then she came back and sat sociably among them, asking this one and that various questions and drawing them out gradually, till every boy had had something to say. But when she chanced to ask Tad Ellis if he liked music and saw how the homely, freckled face lighted up at the question, she went to the piano and began to play. The boys listened in silence. Marches, gallops, waltzes followed one another and then she struck the notes of "America." "Come up around the piano, boys," said Miss Kate, in the most natural way, and to their own surprise they one and all came and stood awkwardly around as they joined one by one in the well known strain.

Miss Kate played vigorously and sang in a clear, strong voice, and even the most timid ones sang too, thinking they were not heard. It was a great success, and at its close Miss Kate turned and said a few words about the song—of the man who wrote it, and of how dear it should be to the heart of every American boy. She looked up at the large silk flag draped upon the wall above the piano, and the boys looked too. Nor was it strange that as they looked Miss Kate softly touched the keys and they began to sing the last verse over again, this time more softly, reverently. than before, guided by Miss Kate's sympathetic voice.

In the kitchen Roxy Ann was heaping plates with snowy, delicious-smelling popcorn. "That's mighty pretty in there," she said to herself, "but I guess we better have a little less patriotism an' a little more popcorn. I'll pass this around," and pass it around she did and each one of the seven boys presently found himself eating popcorn with a relish while Miss Kate, in her willow rocker, ate, too, and laughed and talked in the jolliest kind of way. After that there were games at the big dining-table under which awkward feet might be stowed away. It was wonderful with what skill they played dominoes and checkers and even authors when Miss Kate had shown them how.

It was a happy evening. The boys never forgot it though many others like it followed.

Two evenings every week found "the gang" in Miss Kate's warm, red-lighted rooms, and all winter this happy program continued. There was no great and sudden change in the behavior of the boys but gradually and naturally, led by Miss Kate's sweet influence, they dropped their rough ways of speech and manner and fell into ways more manly. And the best of all and perhaps the secret of all was that Miss Kate never "preached." She rarely even corrected a mistake and actually never seemed shocked at anything she heard or saw. And she sought and found, too, the hidden talent each boy possessed. In John Rumsey she discovered a strong artistic instinct and to him she spared on Saturday afternoons an hour of her time and the lesson which gave him his first insight into the mysteries of color and form. Ed Winters developed a real genius for photography and she went with him on Saturday mornings along pretty roads and bits of woods in search of choice bits for her camera which she freely lent him. In another boy a decided leaning towards geology cropped out like a piece of gleaming quartz from an unpromising dirt-heap, and in another the gift of song was weekly developing itself under her fostering care.

Her boys became the one absorbing interest of Miss Kate's life. The work she had undertaken out of pity became a labor of love. Even Roxy Ann's aversion, Jed Williams, became tolerable in her sight because of his faithful admiration for Miss Kate. Jed was not and never would be "extra bright," but he was faithful and as Roxy Ann remarked, "he lived up to all that was in him," which would be a great deal for any of us to do.

The summer vacation proved to be a season of delight. Almost any pleasant day Miss Kate might have been seen with her troop of boys tramping here and there through fields and woods in pursuit of specimens or sketching or photography. There were picnics, too—jolly, hearty affairs, with big hampers full of good things and Roxy Ann's brusque kindness to go with them. There were bicycle trips on long summer days, for Miss Kate was a wheelwoman and some of the boys owned bicycles, while Miss Kate rented wheels for the three or four who could not afford them. "Some would call that downright extravagant," said Roxy Ann, "but I don't. It gives 'em all pleasure, an' I don't know how one of them boys could stand it to be left behind. I guess she can afford it all right, little as she spends on society an' clothes an' all that."

It was a happy summer. The one truly happy one in the lives of the seven boys who, under the wise leadership of Miss Kate, were finding themselves and becoming acquainted with the natural beauties and wonders of the world they lived in. It was a happy winter which followed for "the club," as they called themselves now instead of "the gang," met as before at the dear, familiar home, which always gave them a royal welcome.

This happened several years ago. Miss Kate has bought her pretty home and permanently settled there. Some of her boys are out in the world making for themselves a name. One is a civil engineer of promise, one is beginning to be known as an illustrator of magazines, one has a profitable photograph business established, and one has managed somehow to enter one of the great colleges of our land. One is a well-paid employé in a large mercantile business, and one has become a florist of some reputation.

Only one remains in Miss Kate's neighborhood—Jed Williams, who lives at home with his mother and runs the small farm. Poor Jed! he sometimes thinks of the "other fellows" out in the busy world making their fame and fortune, and he, alone, of all the boys left in that quiet place. And then he comforts himself with the thought that while the other fellows can only run out to see Miss Kate occasionally, and some of them not at all, he can go to see her every day, to tie up her roses, or weed her flower beds, or work in Roxy Ann's vegetable garden. And Roxy Ann, herself, has nothing but the kindest words for Jed.

The Slaughter of the Birds.

BY MARGARET S. ORGAN, M. D.

IN his unbounded egoism, man has ever conceived and acted upon the idea that this vast earth with its varied wealth of the inorganic, vegetable and sentient kingdoms, was made for his exclusive benefit; at least, he considers such was the primary and ultimate design of the Creator. Therefore, there could be no purpose other than simply to subserve his use, pleasure and glory in the creation of animate and inanimate nature. That the lower animals and all sentient creation are endowed by the Creator with the inalienable right to life and happiness commensurate with their nature and capacity, it has not entered into the mind of the average man to conceive or perceive.

But thanks to the innate tendency of the human soul to progress, to the widening of men's minds "by the process of the suns," to the unfolding of the altruistic element, there are, all over the civilized world, souls of higher endowment, who, in these later years, have recognized the beautiful scientific truth that there is a kinship between the human and all sentient creation—links which bind it to us in the reciprocal relations of love, friendship and fidelity.

Waiving for the time being, the assumption that man has the right to take the life of his inferior fellow creatures—the animals for food, we can postulate with emphatic certitude that he has no right to take the life of beast or bird for sport or to satisfy the demands of fashion and vanity. More, it is an abuse of his superior powers, an abuse barbarous and criminal. The very helplessness of the animal kingdom as compared with man's inventive power for destruction, should be to him an appeal most strong and sacred for their protection.

In 1886, the report of the ornithologists was: "From carefully gathered statistics it is proved that on the most moderate calculation five million song birds are annually required to fill the demands for the ornamentation of the hats of American women. The slaughter is not confined to song birds. Everything that wears feathers is a target for the bird butcher. In a single season, forty thousand terns were killed at Cape Cod for exportation, and the swamps and marshes of Florida have been depopulated of their egrets and herons. In one month one million bobolinks have been killed near Philadelphia, and from a single Long Island village, seventy thousand song birds were supplied in a short time to New York dealers for millinery purposes."

This report, given thirteen years ago, is but an index of what has been going on ever since in the habitat of the birds all over the land. In fact, during the past two years the slaughter has been greater than ever before. Even the owl, carrion crow and the barnyard fowl have fallen victims to this insatiable craze of fashion. Over many a woman's hat, in all its resplendent glory and grace waves the caudal appendage of chanticleer. Rare, it is, indeed, to see a woman's hat or bonnet without the corpse of a bird upon it, or a part of its corpse. If not these, then the egrets, which can only be procured by the killing of the bird. If this heartless, cruel devastation goes on, the whole bird creation must inevitably be exterminated. All the greater is the danger of this utter extinction; all the more barbarous, heartless and fiendish the slaughter, because it is done in the mating season, or when the birds are rearing their young. Therefore, the killing of one bird by lead means the killing of three, four or five younglings by starvation.

Birds are killed at this season because their plumage is then the most beautiful. The mating instinct—the beautiful conjugal impulse, is, by some mysterious influence of spring's awakening, quickened into its intensest action. The organic nerve centers, through sympathetic relation, are thus stimulated into increased activity, resulting in brighter, fuller and more beautiful plumage. Tennyson beautifully expresses this physiological fact:

> In the spring a fuller crimson comes upon the robin's breast;
> In the spring the wanton lapwing gets himself another crest;
> In the spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove.

I make the plea for the birds upon the basis of their God-given right to life and its fullest, completest enjoyment—their right to this beautiful world which is theirs by inheritance as much as it is that of the human. I also protest against their slaughter because of the demoralizing, brutalizing influence it has upon man. It is a violation of all the holier, better influences of human nature, a crime against the moral law of our being to kill birds and animals for sport—for the mere love of killing, for mere pleasure or the gratification of vanity. All wrong doing, all unmerciful acts done either to man or the animal creation, whether wilfully or through ignorance, are, and in the very nature of things, must be retroactive. Therefore, no one can kill birds or animals through the motives I have named without injury to his own soul. Such act must inevitably blunt the finer sensibilities, sear the moral sense, deaden, to a degree, the tenderness of heart, and to this extent render all life, human as well as animal, less sacred.

From an esthetic and spiritual point of view, mankind is also the loser by this wholesale slaughter of the birds. Their beauty of form and color, their airy, graceful motions, all tend to cultivate the esthetic in our nature. Their cheery, happy, joyous songs, their songs of love and faith and tenderness are to us spiritual inspirations, awakening in our hearts a kindred love, tenderness and faith. Even those who profess insusceptibility and believe themselves utterly indifferent to the music of the birds and to their happy, active presence would be astonished to find how much of life's cheer they missed if there were never a song of bird, a rustle of its wings or a chirp of its happy energy. Such a stillness over the woodlands would be like a funeral pall; it would throw over nature a depressing, weird-like spell, that would be both startling and appalling. Every woman who wears upon her head covering the corpse of a bird, a part of it, or an egret, is, whether or no she recognizes the fact, as much its slayer as though by her own hand she sent the deadly shot through its body. The very wearing of birds' plumage is practically a proclamation of acquiescence in their slaughter—an ukase which is not only hastening the total extinction of the birds, but which in its finality demoralizes and hardens the one who does the actual killing. Therefore, in this slaughter of the innocents, woman is particeps criminis.

The attempt to excuse woman's wearing of birds or their plumage upon the plea of ignorance—as has so often been done—will not avail, for every woman knows that birds must be killed in order that her millinery may be thus decorated. This is so palpable a fact, that to say women wear birds through ignorance, is a reflection upon their intelligence or sanity. That they are worn through thoughtlessness, we may readily admit—thoughtlessness in conjunction with the all-embracing, all-permeating desire to be in fashion, no matter how absurd, ridiculous, unbeautiful or hideous that fashion may be.

I appeal most earnestly to all women to use their influence both by precept and example against this barbarous, cruel and conscienceless slaughter of the birds. Never let an apropos opportunity pass without pleading earnestly, soulfully for the dear, beautiful, innocent little creatures that have no power to plead for themselves. Do this, not only for their sake, but for the sake of the boys and girls and for children of mature growth—physically. For just so sure as effect follows cause, just so sure will this debasing, dehumanizing practice of killing the birds—our fellow-creatures—tend to deaden the finer and more tender susceptibilities of mind and heart. Slaughter is a word fraught with fearful import, suggestive forever of violence, of antagonism to life's highest ideals, and any act which exhibits tacit consent thereto, has a potent influence in awakening the latent savage propensity in man, and is thus a hindrance to those agencies which make for the higher moral and spiritual development of humanity.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

THE summer months bring many tourists to our House Beautiful. Michigan, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York, Oregon, and a sweet singer from Oklahoma, are only a few suggestions in name of the many interested visitors who enter the portals of Willard Hall. "Please pray for our Y's," said one dear girl, "we need more earnestness;" "pray for an old man's wayward son;" "for two ladies that they may become active Christian workers"; "for a boy in a Louisiana jail who has signed the pledge and fears he may not be strong enough to resist the drink habit when set free. God can keep him, pray that He may have faith in God's keeping power." A granddaughter asked prayers for her grandmother, and came next day to let us rejoice with her, because her grandmother was converted during the noon hour, while we were praying for her.

A widowed daughter asked prayers for her mother on her seventieth birthday, and that her Christian experience may increase in sweetness and helpfulness.

One of the city mission workers spoke with great spiritual power of God's saving grace. Four years and six months ago, the speaker, born in a saloon, brought up in one, dirty, ragged, cold, foul inside and out, went into a mission, was converted, and clean and in his right mind is now preaching the power of God to save to the uttermost.

Work for Soldiers at Chattanooga.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We have at Camp Thomas more soldiers than at any other point. Notwithstanding the fact that regiments are constantly being ordered to the front, it is estimated that there are fifty thousand men at Chickamauga wearing the blue. Of these, from five to six thousand are in Chattanooga each day.

We at first thought of opening headquarters at the park, but after carefully looking over the ground, were convinced that there could be more good accomplished right here. On June 20, we rented headquarters at 816 Georgia Ave., and began to "fix up." There was just $1.75 in local treasury, and but five or six women with any faith in our being able to accomplish any good. Our president had been called to a sick sister in Florida; our treasurer was in a sanitarium in the North. I confess it did not look very bright, but Mrs. Lowe, Mrs. Darling and I concluded to start, anyhow. We begged bunting of merchants, and a local music dealer loaned us a fine piano. We had not money to have it moved, but he did it, and trusted us for the dollar. We sent for painters, and got stationery on thirty days' time. Nothing paid for; then we went on our knees and told the Lord all about it. I wrote letters to old friends, and we went right on. Soldiers began to come in, a few at first, then in crowds, until now, in less than three weeks, we have over one hundred a day. We have a bath-room, cots, lounges, chairs, tables, flowers, ice water and a hearty welcome.

I have just said good-by to the adopted son of our Mrs. Bailey, of Vermont. How loyal and chivalric these white-ribbon boys are! We have sent nice things to eat to hospitals, comfort bags and housewives have been given out by the hundreds and we need more at once. The Y's of Orange, N. J., sent fifty comfort bags which were perfect; the boys liked the shoe strings and scissors especially. A soldier suggests that those putting in darning cotton have it blue. It would have done the dear girls good to see these soldiers read the little personal note in each bag. Several took these out, folded them and placed them in their note books, saying, "If I am killed this will be found near my heart."

Yesterday thirty boys came in together. A young Virginian sat down at the piano and played for a time, then they all gathered around and sang, "Home, Sweet Home," "Annie Laurie," "My Old Kentucky Home," after which our pianist began to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Then the sweet tones of the piano were heard in the oratorio, "The Redeemer," and crowds gathered about the door to hear. After they had registered I found one of the boys was from Maine, two from Nebraska, one from Michigan, one from Georgia, two from Mississippi, four from New York, two from Virginia, one from Montana, two from Missouri, one from South Carolina, and the rest from Illinois. All college bred. And ten of them had been in the L. T. L.; twelve were the sons of white-ribboners.

We are doing much more here than we could at camp, beside the Christian Commission and Y. M. C. A. are filling the needs out there, all of whom are our friends and are ready to coöperate with us. They are doing untold good.

We are having gospel meetings Sunday, early in the morning and in the afternoon. The Rest keeps open all day. What we need most now is money and comfort bags and housewives, magazines and late papers. If women living in cities will see that we have Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans, Chicago, and other daily papers, we will be so thankful. We would also like the leaflet by Mr. Bok, "Why I do not Drink," I think it is.

And we do so need small Testaments, not more than four or five inches long. We could use hundreds.

May God help us all to do our best for these mothers' boys. M. L. WELLES.

Flag Day at Lexington Chautauqua, Ky.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—July 2 was a memorable day at the Kentucky Chautauqua. By suggestion, direction and help of the W. C. T. U. the school children of city and county had purchased a beautiful flag of stars and stripes for the Chautauqua grounds. Mrs. Beauchamp had visited Governor Bradley, and secured his promise to come and present the flag to the Chautauqua association in the name of the children.

The day was clear and intensely hot. Soon after noon the Governor drove into the grounds, and came at once to the W. C. T. U headquarters, "beautiful for situation," and the resort of all the good and notable who come to the grounds. The newly mustered-in state guards with a band met the children at the gate and conducted them across the grounds to the auditorium, the whole long procession—guards, band and children—passing in review before the Governor. Ah! it was a pretty sight, and a great sight, and a long sight!

Manager Davidson paid a fine compliment to the W. C. T. U., giving them full credit for the day's exercises. Mrs. Beauchamp gave an interesting history of the growth and final development of the stars and stripes, and several young girls presented from the platform the different flags which were used by Americans before the adoption of "Old Glory" in its present form. Then Governor Bradley made a fine, spirited, sensible and patriotic address, presenting the flag in the name of the children, to which Mr. Beauchamp, as member of the Chautauqua Board, replied in most appropriate words.

The children and vast audience gathered round the flagpole in front of the auditorium. Songs were sung, patriotic W. C. T. U. mottoes given in concert, and the stars and stripes were run up and shook out their folds to the breeze.

I find that the W. C. T. U. is the best recognized and most influential organization on the Kentucky Chautauqua grounds, and this is due to the indomitable efforts of a few women, chief among whom is Kentucky's energetic and capable president, Mrs. Beauchamp. W. C. T. U. headquarters are large, attractive and most hospitable. Open house and real gospel hospitality is dispensed here all the time. The college Y's tendered a reception to the Indiana Glee Club before they left. The C. L. S. C. gave a reception to Bishop Vincent on Recognition day, and on College day the young women gave a reception to the college contestants, all and everything at W. C. T. U. headquarters. And so the blessed influence radiates from this point all over the state.

I wish this were true in every state.

The Carnival Parade at Milwaukee, Wis.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The great parade, showing the industries of the city and the state, was a success in several respects. But there were, however, some great mistakes made. For instance: the abominable breweries and distilleries were permitted to parade in line with the useful industries. Worse still, it was a brewery that took the lead of all the other industries. A rich thought for contemplation!

The different useful manufacturers displayed their magnificent products. One company had a complete engine upon its float, another manufacturer had modern tools. A trunk manufacturer had an immense trunk on a float drawn by six horses. A harvester company had a complete harvester on exhibition, and a basket manufacturer showed how basket goods were made, etc. But what did the brewers and distillers exhibit? Did they also exhibit their products? Did they show how drunkards were made by their products as clearly as the basket manufacturer showed how baskets were made? No, no! For if they had done that they would have blocked up the streets, broken up the procession and made an awful disturbance. Why? Because breweries and distilleries produce drunkards, and drunkards make disturbances. They break up everything in their power. Health, business, homes, character and happiness. If, therefore, the breweries and distilleries had paraded with their products there would have been an army of intoxicated persons marching as best they could behind the floats. There would also have been an army of poor, unhappy, scantily clad and broken-hearted women and wretched, neglected children. There would have been a long line of insane, idiots and imbeciles, made so through strong drink. There would have been a large army of criminals produced by drink. There would have been a long string of poor, ragged people made destitute by strong drink. There would also have been representations of prisons, poorhouses and insane asylums, which are built and supported by the tax-payer's money, only to receive the ready-made products of the manufacturers of intoxicating drinks. (It is a well-established fact that three-fourths of poverty, four-fifths of crime, and one-fourth of insanity can be charged to the account of intoxicating drinks.) There would also have been in that parade an extra company of policemen, to take charge (at public expense) of the degraded and demoralized products of the manufacturers of strong drink. And then public servants would have had a difficult task to perform if they should keep this parading army in line, so as to do justice to the producers of all this misery.

Such a parade would have been a fearful sight. What a horrible picture! Shall we put a veil over it? Shall we conceal it in darkness? Shall we hide it in oblivion? No, no! Hang that awful picture on the walls of our legislative halls and over every ballot-box. Let this dreadful picture stand out in bold relief; let it stare our lawmakers in the face, and haunt them day and night until they make up their minds to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks.

Surely if the breweries and distilleries in our country desire to participate in a parade, they ought to organize and support a parade of their own. They are entirely out of place in a parade of the useful industries of the state and country.

A Spiritual High Tide.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Boston, '95, was a historic convention. Washington, '96, stood for Christian citizenship, San Francisco, '97, accentuated home missions, but Nashville, '98, will ever be remembered by Christian Endeavorers for two things: First, the magnificent outburst of hand clasped patriotism that left all the old sectional scars covered with beautiful entwinings of brotherly love. Dr. Vance, of Nashville, called it the "brotherly love" convention; and second, the climax of spiritual consecration and power reached in a series of quiet hour meetings in the great union gospel tabernacle conducted by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, in which thousands were led into the larger truths of God and a closer fellowship with the Spirit.

One thing which contributed to this was the absence of sight-seers; it was emphatically a power-seekers' convention. The pulpits and prayer meetings of the land will feel the pulsings of a more abounding spiritual life, for, to quote the impressive utterance of Dr. J. H. Barrows, to many it was true: "July 10 has been a spiritual birthday." Another said: "I mean to call all the pastors and church workers at home together and try to make them feel the spirit of this meeting."

This was one of the things which gave distinctive flavor to the convention. Another was the spontaneous, irrepressible tides of patriotic fervor which welled up from hearts north and south and met here in a great sweet fraternal kiss which swept the bitter memories of the past out of existence.

After General Howard and General Evans, two of the speakers in the rally, who had fought on opposite sides in the late war, had responded to each other fraternally, and Bishop J. N. Fitz-Gerald, of the M. E. Church, and Bishop Arnett, of the African M. E. church, had stood with clasped hands before the vast audience and the latter pronounced the marriage ceremony of sections and races in words that will live, "The blue and the gray have stood side by side, and now the black and the white clasp hands; it is done," it is no wonder that Ira Lundrith, the chairman of the Nashville 1898 committee, should say: "In the face of what has been witnessed here today, it is hard for some of us who have been born since the war to believe that it was ever possible to have such a war, and it is easy for all of us to believe that had there been such Christian Endeavor conventions as this meeting in the North and South prior to 1860, there never could have been such a war."

The hearts of the camp and the hearts of the Christian people were knit closer together than ever by the presence of a band of soldier Endeavorers, who pitched their tent on the convention grounds and sat in places of honor on the platforms, and by the large number of patriotic pilgrims who flocked to Camp Thomas at Chickamauga Park after the convention was over. The most powerful appeal that has yet been made for a combined effort on the part of Christian people to do everything possible to secure better moral conditions in the camps, was what the quick eyes of these thousands of home folks read of the loneliness, temptations to dissipation and other demoralizing influences of camp life.

The regimental canteen has been seen at close range, and the mothers, sisters and fathers of the boys know for themselves that it means hell.

The good that wholesome literature, frequent cheery letters and the efforts of the army Christian workers with their tents and meetings is appreciated, and will be supported as never before.

Temperance Reform in the Old Country—No. 2.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Since my last letter, just two months ago, there has been considerable activity among temperance workers here. On June 25, the great juvenile demonstrations took place simultaneously in five of the principal London parks, arranged by the United Temperance Council. Processions of many thousands of Band of Hope children took part. Packets of refreshments had been provided beforehand for distribution among them. The Duchess of Portland presided over a vast assembly of children and adults in Hyde Park.

It is encouraging that at the recent annual meeting of the Women's Liberal Federation, the cause of temperance reform was most vigorously advocated. At a meeting of the council, Lady Carlisle in the chair, the following resolution was proposed by Miss Agnes Slack, seconded by Mrs. Price Hughes, and carried by a large majority: "This Council, while supporting every reform that tends to limit even the least of the evils arising from the drink traffic, expresses its strong conviction that the local veto, by direct popular vote, is an essential and indispensable part of any effective scheme of temperance reform." At one of the meetings of the federation, Lady Trevelyan in the chair, the Right Hon. John Morley, M. P., gave a stirring address. I have attended many men's liberal gatherings, but at no meeting (except an alliance or temperance one) have I heard temperance reform welcomed with such rapturous applause. When Mr. Morley, almost at the outset of his magnificent speech, said boldly, he cared not what unpopularity it might attract, he held that the first step in social reform was temperance, his declaration was received by an ovation which no one will readily forget, and when a few minutes later, he added, "The principle of the proposals the late government made, namely, the principle of popular control, was a principle from which he, at any rate, did not mean to draw back," the cheers were renewed with a vigor and persistence I have never heard surpassed at any meeting called to consider any one of the burning questions of the hour.

Yesterday, the annual National Temperance Féte and Choral Festival was held at the Crystal Palace. The Palace and grounds were, for the day, handed over entirely to the organizers of the féte. Every intoxicating tap was turned off, and nearly forty thousand people were, for the time, at least, total abstainers. Mr. A. F. Hills, president of the National Temperance Council, was at the head of the proceedings, which commenced by a breakfast in the Palace. Among the numerous meetings held in the course of the day were those of the Army Temperance Society, at which it was stated that there were about thirty-three thousand total abstainers in the British army; the Naval Temperance Society, which boasts about an equal number; the B. W. T. A., presided over by Mrs. Eva McLaren, and at which Mrs. Bamford Slack and Mrs. Pearsall Smith spoke. The Good Templars held several meetings. An effective feature in the day's proceedings was a procession in which nearly fifty temperance organizations took part. Three concerts, of five thousand voices each, were given during the day. A brilliant display of fireworks brought the long program to a close.

A Plea for the Soldiers.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I wish to add my little testimony to the need of work among the soldiers. Soon after the camp was established at Island Lake, Mich., a soldier came to the meeting of the Detroit union and requested the union to do something in the way of temperance work at the camp. He presented the matter in a strong manner, and assured us that no other line of work was so much needed. It resulted in the union having one thousand special pledge cards printed, and your humble servant was detailed to go out and do the work.

At the top of the card is the American flag, and the pledge reads, "For the sake of the dear ones at home, I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, including wine, beer and cider, as a beverage, while in service as a soldier."

We spent two days in the work, and the results were so especially satisfactory that we were impressed that this work should by all means be continued, and wrote to some of our officers to that effect. Several officers and soldiers in letters since have said that they did not need any kind of a worker quite so much as a special temperance worker, one who can present the facts and can make a specialty of this subject.

There are several workers who are ready to go just for expenses, giving their services entirely free, and it seems to me that money could not be put to better use. It would not only result in great good to the soldiers, but to the W. C. T. U. also. The twelfth district of Michigan is beginning to raise a little fund for this purpose.

Yours for the salvation of our soldiers,
E. NORINE LAW.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

My spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not. Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude, for the battle is not yours but God's.—Hag. 2:5: II Chron. 20:15.

LET every member of the Temple praying band be much in prayer; a crisis is upon us such as we have never had to face before. The one we have always counted upon as standing by us and the Temple, God has transplanted to the House Beautiful above. We have no Saint Frances to intercede for us now. God is sifting us. We have been leaning too much upon the arm of flesh and not enough on Him and His precious promises. It is nothing with God whether He saves by many or by few. Let our cry go up to Him that His mighty arm may be revealed in the redeeming of this house which we have built to the honor of His name and the redemption of His weak and tempted children, and which we have every assurance He commanded us to build. Let all who believe God hears and answers prayers join our ranks; let prayer and works be continuous.

The letters which come to us from faithful white-ribboners who have heard the Temple has been abandoned is quite heartrending. One from Missouri writes: "I can not tell thee how heartbroken I am at the thought of giving up our beautiful house, with all the effort that has been made, in the particularly hard times, and all we have had to contend with. I could but shed some bitter tears when I found the action that had been taken; that it will be a great blow to our work I am fully assured." A letter from a white-ribboner in Kentucky contains the following: "Our union received a letter this week from the National officers, which was read before our union; with sad hearts did we hear it. We went on our knees in prayer for you and in behalf of the Temple, that it may yet be ours." Another white-ribboner from Pennsylvania writes: "The more I read about the opinion of our leaders in regard to the Temple, the more I am convinced it may be redeemed. Why they put so much emphasis on the leased ground I do not understand. There are but few business blocks in our large cities but what are built on leased ground." A county president in Massachusetts writes: "Have seen the action of the executive in the Voice, and it comes to us as we are making a special effort in our county on behalf of the Temple. I think you can still rally the women."

Words now in behalf of the "House Beautiful" is of little avail, work is what will tell. Let our work for the Temple be unceasing until the National Convention in November. The plans for raising money sent out by the Temple Trustees should be followed with the greatest persistency. The vote at the National Convention in regard to the Temple will be decided by what has been accomplished towards its redemption. Let every white-ribboner that can raise a dollar send it at once. The W. C. T. U. women the world round are asked to give this amount to the Temple as a memorial to Miss Willard. We are just in receipt of a letter from the president of the W. C. T. U. of Australia. She says they are sending out the Temple Trustees' appeal for dollar subscriptions and they heartily indorse the movement.

Then the fifty-cent subscription cards which we have sent out to most of our local unions should be pushed with all diligence. It takes no money from the local unions; it only makes each white-ribboner an agent to get four outside friends to give fifty cents each towards the enterprise. Miss Willard's beautiful life-size picture in living tints should be in the possession of every white-ribboner; a dollar could not be spent better than in its purchase; all profits go to the Temple. The Temple Wheels should be used now more than ever; persons who cannot give dollars will give dimes to pay for the Temple. I myself am now at work getting up a Temple Roll of Honor, of one hundred persons who will subscribe $1,000 each, and also one of one hundred persons who will subscribe $100 each. I have made good headway in both; when completed, the two will bring in $110,000. The money is not to be paid until each list is completed. I will be glad to receive names for either list.

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

A Girl's Joy.

I'M glad I am a little girl,
And have the afternoon for play;
For if I were a busy bee
I s'pose I'd have to work all day.

And if I were an owl I'd be Afraid to keep awake all night;
And if I were an elephant
How could I learn to be polite?

And if I were a Jersey calf
I might forget my name and age;
And if I were a little dog
I couldn't read the children's page.

My sakes! When I begin to count,
It makes my head go all awhirl;
There are so many reasons why
I'm glad I am a little girl.

Willie's "Amendment."

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

"TO-MORROW," said Miss Reed, "you may all bring me some incidents showing the harm that liquor and tobacco have done; something you have read in the paper or know of yourself." Miss Reed was just going to dismiss her little country school when a hand was raised, and, "Teacher," came from a bright, questioning boy.

"Don't they never do no good?" asked Willie Swenson.

"That is a good question, Willie; we must always be just, even to our enemies, so I will ask you to also bring any fact or case where they have done good." And in the burst of unconcerned merriment and noise that followed the tap of the bell, it would seem that all of "teacher's" injunctions and requests must be forgotten.

But before the long walks across the beautiful prairies were accomplished, every one of the twenty blue-eyed, flaxen-haired little Swedes and Danes was eagerly searching his scanty collection of facts, and almost before the "piece" was called for, mamma was asked to help out on "teacher's question." At the supper tables it was also an interesting topic, especially Willie Swenson's "amendment," as one of the older boys termed it. This seemed to especially please the fathers, most of whom used the subtle weed while all thought it no harm to take a "friendly glass" now and then. Still the little community was above the average in industry and morality, owning large, well-tilled farms, and having a Sunday-school, and "preaching" occasionally in their own language.

As might be expected, therefore, facts concerning "Willie's Amendment" were abundant, and more than one "Adolph" and "Emil" and "Theda" were very anxious for "to-morrow."

"Oh, I got one; what you got?" was the universal greeting that bright June morning; but, oh, how the facts seem to vanish, as, after the short devotional exercises, they were each called to give them. "This telling about things, like a preacher," as Claus Oleson termed it, was one of Miss Reed's many "new ways" of developing her pupils, and as yet was a terrible strain on the courage of these timid little foreigners.

Some of the older ones prefaced their quaintly told stories or incidents with, "It stood in the paper last night," and, of course, were the familiar tales of misery and ruin.

"But has no one found any good that these things do?" asked the teacher, as Beda Isaacson sat down, her cheeks rivaling the sweet roses pinned on her blue gown.

For a few seconds there was an awkward pause, when the doughty Willie Swenson rose to champion his amendment:

"Well, my fader had a aunt, and her stomach got bad (heartburn), and she took all the medicine in the drugstore, but she didn't get no better, and so the doctor, he told her to chew some tobacco and swallow the juice, and she got well right off."

Every other word of this short speech had stuck in the poor boy's throat, but by means of worming his bare feet and working at his one suspender, he scored a victory. Several of his companions on the "defense" looked jubilant, but almost before the teacher asked "how they would answer this fact," hands were up.

"I don't think it did cure the stomach," replied Iva Larson, who was studying physiology, "it only deadened the nerves, so she didn't feel it."

"But if it did cure that," added thoughtful Anna Iverson, "tobacco is tobacco, and it did other things, too,—just what physiology says—about the lungs and juices and kidneys."

"And it hurts the eyes," chipped in Adolph Johnson, a little fellow of seven, while his seatmate gained courage to add, "And the heart, teacher."

"Yes," said Miss Reed, "the physicians who are now examining the men for the war find a great many with hearts injured by tobacco, and they can not take them, for they would not make good soldiers. Has any one else an answer?"

"Well," exclaimed Laura Roline, noted for "hitting the nail on the head," "I think I'd as soon have the heartburn as swallow tobacco juice!" At this there was a hearty laugh and even a faint clapping of hands and Willie's "amendment" was considered hopelessly lost. The other good effects of the vile weed were not heard from.

"I am really proud of your work this morning, scholars," said Miss Reed, her face glowing with smiles. "Your answers to Willie's incident are almost word for word like those of a very noted physician. Some one asked him about using tobacco for heartburn and he said the same thing. And now as our time is up we will hear the pro and con of the liquor question to-morrow." And all went at their lessons with a peculiar zest.

"Well, what did teacher say about your story?" asked Mr. Swenson of his boy, as they all sat around the supper table that evening.

"Oh, she didn't say much, but Iva and Anna and Adolph and Otto, they did, and Laura Roline, she just knocked it higher'n a kite and they all laughed. I ain't a going to stand up for the dirty stuff again," and Willie then told all that had been said, and a lively talk followed.

Indeed, the story of Willie's "amendment," was the all-absorbing topic in every home in the neighborhood that night, and more than one parent began to seriously inquire concerning this thing.

What "Sing a Song of Sixpence" Means.

YOU all know this rhyme, but have you ever heard what it really means?

The four-and-twenty blackbirds represent the twenty-four hours. The bottom of the pie is the world, while the top crust is the sky that overarches it. The opening of the pie is the day dawn, when the birds begin to sing, and surely such a sight is fit for a king.

The king, who is represented sitting in his parlor counting out his money, is the sun, while the gold pieces that slip through his fingers, as he counts them, are the golden sunbeams.

The queen, who sits in the dark kitchen, is the moon, and the honey with which she regales herself is the moonlight.

The industrious maid, who is in the garden at work before her king—the sun—has risen, is the day dawn, and the clothes she hangs out are the clouds. The bird who so tragically ends the song by "nipping off her nose" is the sunset. So we have the whole day, if not in a nutshell, in a pie.—Exchange.

I LOVE a young lass of summers scarce five,
Whose bounty has kept many creatures alive.
The last private collection that graced her playpen,
Was a sheep and a goose and an old clucking hen.
She's just in from her pets with eyelids quite red,
Explaining to "mamma" the old goose is dead,
As she sobs, "The sheep stepped on it so with its head."

What Next?

IT is a common experience of human life to find that a line of action which beforehand seemed plain and simple, once entered upon, involves great and unsuspected consequences and proves to be indeed a turning point which radically changes one's whole life. This is no less true in the lives of nations than of individuals, and seems to have an exemplification in our own national life in this present issue.

However we may regard the war with Spain, we are forced to recognize that its consequences are not to be alone the freedom of Cuba. Its effect upon our life as a nation is likely to be more far-reaching than any one had anticipated. When we entered upon this war, nothing was further from the thought of our people than a permanent departure from our established policy of minding our own internal business and letting the rest of the world alone so long as it let us alone. But the war has taught us several things. From the comments of foreign papers and the testimony of our own citizens who are residents of European nations, we have learned that for years back there has been, on the part of some of the European powers, a steadily growing dislike and jealousy of the United States, due to our rapid political and commercial growth. Accustomed to a diplomacy radically different from ours, they have put no confidence in our assertions that this war is waged not for the acquirement of territory, but for humanity's sake.

The only nation which believes thoroughly in our sincerity and gives us sympathy is that of our kinsmen, the English. That nation has given us a cordial support, which should bury forever in oblivion all our past differences. But the sympathy of England only intensifies the dislike of other European nations, who regard England with even greater dislike than they do the United States, because of her commercial supremacy and her free institutions, which are a constant menace to despotism. The unexpected victories of our arms have aroused the unbounded enthusiasm of our English friends and laid to rest the sneers of our enemies.

But from all this one lesson is to be learned: Whether we wish it or not, we shall perforce hold a different position in the world, and play a different part in its drama from that of the first hundred and twenty years of our existence. Henceforth European nations will regard the United States as a factor that has to be considered in every question of politics and diplomacy; they will watch our movements with the same fear and distrust with which they watch each other; they will scarcely let an opportunity slip to do us an injury; at the very least, they will oppose, when they can, any growth of our power. This attitude on their part necessitates an entire change on ours. In the past we have had an unprotected seaboard and been proud of it. We boasted that we had no part or lot in European squabbles. Our standing army has never been anything but a police force, and we have rested proudly in the knowledge that millions of men were ready to leave farm and workbench and don the soldier's dress should a foe threaten our beloved land. But hereafter all will be changed. Above all we must recognize that the free institutions of the Anglo-Saxon must take the world, and that the interests of the two great English-speaking nations stand and fall together. Whether we like it or not, whether we will or not, henceforth our nation occupies a different place in the world's thought from what it has ever occupied before, and we must adjust ourselves to our new place.

All that this involves we do not undertake to predict. European nations believe and some of our own people fear that we are entering upon an era of conquest and of territorial expansion. And in the temptation to selfish aggrandizement lies our danger. We fully believe that Providence calls the English-speaking world to a great mission, to carry Christian civilization to all the world, and that for that purpose, at the appointed time, there has been thrust upon our nation new and unexpected responsibilities. It should not be a mission of war; it cannot be and reach its end. But should the two English nations join hands, they could banish war from the earth, prevent the cruel oppression of the weak by the strong, as in the case of Cuba and Armenia, and extend our free institutions and our Christian religion to all the world. This is our great opportunity.

But only a sober nation, one in which righteousness, not wealth nor political trickery, reigns, can carry such a responsibility. The questions which pressed upon us for settlement before loom up magnified many fold by the new duties which confront us. It was one thing to work out the problems of temperance, of labor, of political purification when we had nothing to do but set our own house in order. It will be a far different thing to do if we must work them out in the presence of these other new and untried world problems. There was never a time when we had so little use for saloons as now, never a time when we had so sore need of real patriots, of men and women ready to lay themselves willing sacrifices upon the altar of their country, not merely to die for her, but to live for her, not as targets for the bullets of their enemies, but to devote brain and hand and money and time to make the nation fit for its high calling.

Petition Against the Canteen.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:—We, the undersigned petitioners, citizens of the United States, do most respectfully represent: that there are now established at the army posts and army encampments numerous regimental saloons called "canteens," run under the direction and authority of army officers, professedly designed to keep our soldiers out of temptations of saloons outside of camp, but which, in fact, have resulted in bringing the saloon temptation directly within the camp, exposing thereto many thousands of young men carefully nurtured in temperance principles in Christian homes and churches.

And further, the amount of liquor consumed (the sales often averaging from $100 to $600 a day to a canteen) threatens seriously to injure and does injure the military efficiency of our troops and causes widespread demoralization in the troops, wholesale drunkenness, numerous shooting and stabbing affrays, nameless outrages, and several murders.

And further, leading army surgeons declare the use of alcoholic liquors of any kind to be extremely dangerous to the health and stamina of our soldiers campaigning in a tropical climate like that of Cuba.

Therefore, we do hereby respectfully petition that you will, to the extent of your authority as commander-in-chief of the army, forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors at all post and camp exchanges, or elsewhere within the lines of the armies of the United States.

Let every white-ribboner cut the above petition out and get as many signatures as possible and send it at once direct to President McKinley. No time should be lost in this matter. Let the W. C. T. U's join with all other societies and good people in this work. Nothing is of more importance at this moment. Mrs. Platt, president District of Columbia, writes: "A soldier told me to-day that many a boy who never knew the taste of liquor is learning to drink." Many similar testimonies come from all the camps. One thousand persons at the Staten Island Congress voted a memorial to President McKinley. It was presented by Hon. Joshua Levering, Emmet D. Nichols, Esq., and Col. Alexander S. Bacon. Mr. Levering says of this interview:

After a brief delay we were received by the President in company with General Alger, Secretary of War. We were accorded the greatest courtesy, listened to attentively, and assured by the President that he now had the matter under consideration and that it was his desire to minimize and, if possible to abolish entirely the use of alcoholic beverages in the army. I believe fully in the desire of the President as above expressed, but it must be remembered that the friends of the beer interests are a mighty host, and their influences far-reaching and assertive, and therefore it is but right that the President should have the active support and encouragement of all those opposed to the continuance of the canteen in the army camps and soldiers' homes, so that he can feel he has behind him a mightier host still asking protection for the soldiers from an enemy worse than Spanish bullets.

Mr. Levering then goes on to urge the work of petitioning and says:

I truly believe that if this suggestion is promptly and generally acted on that the canteen in American army posts will be a thing of the past.

The first step toward the abolition of the canteen is to make President McKinley feel that the people want it—a great host—a majority of them. This can be done by petitioning. It should be an overwhelming voice that reaches his ear, so overwhelming that it will drown that of the brewers, the saloon-keepers, the drunkards, the tipplers, the mercenary copartners, and, if necessary, the army and navy.

The Army Canteen System.

IN spite of the Associated Press statement that no intoxicants are sold in the canteens at Chickamauga Park, the sale of beer goes on and drunkenness is the result. In fact, the so-called authorized statement, through the Associated Press, purporting to be from General Brooke, contained a direct contradiction, which showed it to be written by a novice on the subject of temperance, for it said: "No intoxicants are sold in the canteens. Beer is only on sale in limited quantities, no one being able to obtain an excess." Hundreds of men whose veracity is unquestioned have testified to the contrary in large assemblages and in the public print. We desire to quote from several articles received at this office. Hon. Joshua Levering, of Baltimore, a member of the Army and Navy Commission of the Y. M. C. A., after speaking of the good work done by the Y. M. C. A., and its great need in the camps as he had seen it personally, says:

There is a dark side, however, to the picture. In all these camps, with perhaps, but one or two exceptions, there have been established the so-called army canteen, but which, in reality, is nothing more than the regular beer saloon.

Not only have these saloons been thus established, but some subtle, mysterious influence seems to be at work to force the soldiers to patronize them and thus start them on the way of becoming drunkards, or so weakening their constitutions as to make them an easy prey to yellow fever or other tropical diseases.

Just a day or two before I visited the camp at Chickamauga Park an order had been issued forbidding the sale of all soft drinks, including lemonade, soda water, and even ice-cream and cake on the theory that these articles were detrimental to the health of the soldiers, but at the same time allowing them all the beer they desired.

When their money was exhausted beer checks were issued, which were taken out of the pay of those using them when pay day rolled around. It is hardly necessary to add when pay day did come, some of the boys had little or no money due them to send home to loved ones dependent on them.

The establishment of the canteen in soldiers' homes, where they are working sad havoc among the veterans of the late war, in army posts and camps, was inaugurated by the Secretary of War under Mr. Cleveland's first administration, endorsed by Congress making an appropriation for the starting of them, and has been continued and gradually extended by the succeeding administrations of Mr. Harrison, Mr. Cleveland's second term and that of the present Executive.

It is to be remembered that there is no law authorizing these canteens. They are allowed by an "Army Regulation" wherever a commandant of an army post desires one.

The surprising fact is that notwithstanding the unanimous testimony of the highest medical and military authorities of our own and foreign lands, that the safest protection soldiers can have in going into tropical countries is to abstain entirely from alcoholic beverages, as witness the statements of General Miles, Surgeon-General Sternberg, Captain Woodson, government expert, General Woolsey, of England, and others; yet these saloons are allowed to continue their process of debauching our soldier boys and preparing them to become early victims to the climatic diseases of Cuba, Porto Rico, and even our own southland during the unhealthy fall season.

The responsibility for the continuance of this great evil rests with the colonel of the regiment where it exists, with the general in command of each camp, with the Secretary of War, and with the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States—the President—any one of whom can suspend the operation of the "Army Regulation" by a simple order to that effect.

Rev. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago, who has been preaching to the boys at Camp Thomas says, in speaking of the 50,000 young men in that camp:

The temptation to drink beer is terrible. The government affords the soldiers every convenience for getting it; even giving them credit checks on their next month's pay if they haven't ready money. The extremely high temperature makes the men very thirsty. The dust is very trying. Sometimes a man must stand in line a half hour in the broiling sun waiting for his turn to get water. The effect can be readily imagined. Those who never drank before seem almost driven to it under such conditions. In one regiment the canteen took in $180 from beer sales in one day, or an average of nearly four glasses for every man.

D. L. Moody, E. Northfield, Mass., writes: "You will be glad to hear that we have already received subscriptions to the army and navy Christian commission work as a result of an article published in your paper." He then quotes from an address given by Rev. Mr. Torrey, to the college students at the Northfield conference in part as follows:

These checks are issued for nothing but beer, not for bread, nor ice water, nor clothes—only beer. The effect on the mind of the thirsty volunteer is almost irresistible. His government, his officers, the cravings of his own thirst, all unite to tell him that a drink of that ice cold beer will do him good.

The result is easily predicted. Men who never drank before are going down before this temptation, and will come out of the army confirmed beer drinkers. Five college students, professedly Christian men, a few days ago went down to the canteen and came back so drunk that they were all disciplined, and those that were non-commissioned officers had to be reduced to the ranks.

We had an illustration the other day of the effect of the ice water barrels on the canteen business. Through some miscarriage there was no water in the barrel in one of the tents. Man after man came up to that barrel to get his drink of water, and waited and it was not supplied. It was empty for half an hour, and in that time man after man went off to the canteen because he had to get his drink somewhere.

Never was there a time when petitioning might accomplish so much as now. To abolish the saloon in camps and soldiers' homes would be to do more for temperance than a century of desultory effort. And the ice water barrel! Never was it so potent. Our own women are maintaining headquarters at or near all of these camps and are begging for money for ice and other absolute necessities. We know that the men breathe dust, eat dust, swallow dust, almost suffocate in dust and the extreme heat, and that if water is not to be had they will go for the ice-cold beer. No one can estimate the good one barrel kept filled with cold water will do. Our National officers have made an appeal for the soldiers and ask that money be sent to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer, the Temple, Chicago, or to Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, Sea Side Park, Ocean county, N. J. (summer address), who will distribute it according to the needs.

THE recent Congress of Temperance at Staten Island created a provisional committee to nominate an advisory committee, which should outline a plan of campaign in which temperance men of all shades of belief can unite. Among the important movements urged by the conference were an effort to induce boards of education to insist upon total abstinence as a qualification for all teachers in the schools; to urge insurance companies to grant total abstainers reduced rates of premiums on life insurance policies; that universities and colleges be urged to protect their students by providing places for social pleasure minus bars, and that the universities and colleges which do not formally outlaw the drink habit be exposed to public and parental censure; that pressure be brought to bear on military and naval officials to enforce total abstinence in the army and navy, and that every opportunity be improved for impressing upon employer and employé the economic value of total abstinence. We would have been glad to report this congress much more at length in our columns had not the two weeks' vacation of THE UNION SIGNAL occurred soon after its session began. The work as proposed is practical, and we believe feasible. The W. C. T. U. was one of the great organized bodies represented, and these propositions will meet the hearty approbation of its members.

COL. ELI F. RITTER, a distinguished attorney of Indianapolis, advises Indiana soldiers that they do not have to obey an order to sell beer in the army canteens. He says there is no authority to compel such service on the part of enlisted men or officers who command them. "They never enlisted to become bartenders; that is no part of the United States service, nor duty of a soldier." He further says:

I see it urged that, because of the habits of some of the soldiers before they entered the army, the establishment of a canteen is thereby made necessary. The very same reasons and arguments that are urged in favor of such an institution have been urged and years ago prevailed, in some parts of the English army, in favor of gambling and prostitution, and there are just as good reasons for gambling and prostitution establishments as for regimental saloons.

If the canteen can become a fixed fact and the army brought to accept it, the other institutions to meet the depraved habits and devilish passions will follow. I am willing to go to Chickamauga, if properly requested to do so, and defend, without charge, any Indiana soldier who may be charged with the disregard of such an order or refusal to serve on such a detail. In so doing, I should feel that I would be serving God as faithfully and well as I did when I faced the foe on that bloody field in 1863.

The Watch Tower.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Miss Belle Kearney writes that she has received a letter telling of the death of her oldest brother, a young man of great promise.

Miss Clara Parrish expects to leave Japan the first week in October. She will stop long enough in China to hold a conference and then go on to Burma. The women there have written her a cordial welcome.

Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent physical culture department, addressed the Christian Endeavor convention of Ohio, on "The Gospel of Sound Bodies." Thirteen hundred delegates were in attendance.

Mrs. M. L. Welles, president of the Chattanooga union, asks that all mail and supplies addressed to herself or Mrs. Lowe or Mrs. Darling be sent to their new headquarters, 816 Georgia Ave., Chattanooga, instead of to the first address given.

Mrs. Maria E. Landers, of Toronto, Canada, has taken a child-widow of India to educate, giving it her own name, "Maria." Mrs. Landers is a W. C. T. U. worker, and is desirous of inducing others to care for a child-widow in connection with the temperance work.

Mrs. J. S. Dinwoodie, head president of the Locust Point Social Settlement in Baltimore, resigned her position, and goes to Talledaga College, Talledaga, Ala., as teacher and preceptress. Mrs. Dinwoodie is a devoted white-ribboner, and we congratulate Alabama on her residence in that state.

Mrs. W. F. Crafts, World's Sunday-school superintendent, and Miss Brehm, National superintendent of suffrage, have been speaking at the Monona Lake Assembly, Wisconsin. Prof. John B. DeMotte, of Bryn Mawr university, Pennsylvania, and Dr. J. A. Worden, are also highly spoken of in their lecture and normal work. It is estimated that three thousand was the average attendance upon classes and lectures.

Miss L. C. Kessler, for years corresponding secretary of the District of Columbia, and one of the most valued members of the executive committee, has recently removed to Philadelphia. White-ribboners united with her church friends in giving her a parting reception in the parlors of Wesley Chapel, always her church home, and the general officers presented her with a copy of the "Beautiful Life of Miss Willard."

Mrs. Platt, president of the District of Columbia, writes in a private letter: "Mrs. Thacher, superintendent of soldiers and sailors, and I visited Camp Alger Saturday. To-day we called on Secretary Long and President McKinley, to present petitions and protest against army canteens. Friday night we held a meeting at the arsenal, an open air meeting, right out in God's temple, with His beautiful full-orbed moon for light and the green, velvety sod for carpet. At the close the boys gave cheer after cheer for the W. C. T. U. We are trying to arrange for a series of meetings out at Camp Alger."

Miss Agnes Slack sailed for Bergen, Norway, August 2. Miss Espenak, the secretary of the National Norwegian W. C. T. U. arranged an important series of meetings for our World's secretary at the chief Norwegian towns, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and she will address several meetings in Bergen and meet representatives from all the Norwegian W. C. T. U's who are going to Bergen to attend the National Exhibition. One meeting will be exclusively for school teachers from different parts of the country. Miss Slack is in correspondence with leading temperance workers in Denmark and Sweden, and if the time can be arranged she will probably also visit those countries.

Indiana.

SINCE I last wrote the Y work in Indiana has been on the steady increase, the third quarter's report being the best for two years. Benton county is the banner county, having four Y branches; Goshen, the banner union, having sixty-three paid members, and July 15th was its first birthday. It has these lines in our state paper, the Message, of July 1, among the notes of a model union: "Has a Y Branch; requires a written report from each local department each quarter." We adopted this plan at the Y conference at South Bend last fall, and find that by having quarterly reports we know where to strengthen the weak places, thus preventing unions from dying.

The Y's prepared a silver medal contest for Camp Acton the evening of August 3, when the president of the L. T. L. delivered his annual address and the L. T. L. graduating exercises took place.

"Y Work," by Y secretaries; remember the papers upon this subject must be sent to Clara M. Sears, 106 W. 14th street, Anderson, by noon, August 15; the best paper will have a place on the program at State convention. I am pleased to notice that Y's begin to call state and National workers; we know this shows a healthy condition. Girls, bring your brothers to the Y meetings! It will do them good and increase our honorary membership; let us bring up the number to five hundred. Plan to have a paid up membership by September 15, also to send a delegate or delegates to our Y conference, held at LaFayette during the Convention date, October 7 to 11. Be prompt, be ready with plans that will advance the work next year; may each succeeding year be the best.

Lovingly and prayerfully,

CLARA M. SEARS,
State Y Secretary and Organizer.

THE Competition and Jumble Fair, in aid of headquarters, was most successful, as friends had been liberal with gifts of every kind. The opening, by Lady Lamington, our governor's wife, was very pretty; each day was well attended and business brisk, so headquarters' fund has gained considerably. The entire management was well carried out, and the competitions in music, literature, fine arts, flowers, needlework and cookery added interest to the show. Prizes were won for papers on "The Life and Work of Frances Willard," and "How to Make Domestic Service Popular." The committee are most devoted, and work hard to make Queensland headquarters all that it should be.

The unions in South Brisbane show lively progress. The West End union has an ever increasing Loyal Temperance Legion, numbering now forty children, who seem to be grasping the principles of temperance in a very intelligent manner, being able to give good explanations in their own childish way, which can not fail to help their parents realize the poisonous nature of drink. Instances have been known when the words of her innocent child have borne seed in the heart of a drunken mother. Habits of economy are also taught through the penny savings bank, and every week a sewing lesson is given when the children are as happy and busy as bees. A picnic was given them to the botanical gardens, which they thoroughly enjoyed. This union has also weekly mothers' meetings, with an attendance of twenty, which have been the means of opening out the way from poverty and want to industry and brightness. The husbands come with their wives to the evening meetings, and many have joined churches and thank God for all the good He has given them through these meetings. The mothers also visit the hospital and bring to the meeting any desire of sick ones for special prayer. At a "drawing room" recently given them several new members were gained.

The South Brisbane Y's gave an evening at home at their president's, when honorary members and friends were present; all were interested and several joined; parlor games and music lightened the program. Fairfield union held a drawing-room, when pledges were taken and new members gained. The Thompson estate hold regular mothers' meetings. A farewell tea was recently given them by Mrs. N. H. Horsley, when fifty members were present. The South Brisbane district tendered a welcome to Mrs. Doran, who has been doing splendid pioneer work in Charter's Towers, a northern town, where temperance is sorely needed. Her husband has been removed to a Wesleyan church in South Brisbane. A drawing-room was given by North Brisbane in Willard rooms to meet the mayoress, Mrs. Thorne, when the rooms were crowded. The Ipswich union has held successful drawing-rooms at Silkstone to keep up interest in the W. C. T. U. with those who were formerly a union; one for consideration of the purity question, when the Colonial superintendent was present, and one as a birthday surprise to their president, Mrs. Payne, who was given "Memories of the Crusade" and "A Great Mother," and a bouquets of flowers which no white-ribbon presentation is complete without. The Ipswich union always prepares at the new year printed programs of meetings, with the subjects for papers or discussion.

The Darling Downs district has just held its fifth annual conference of two days' session, with a public reception, conversazione and garden party. There were twenty-one delegates, besides officers and friends; reports showed a membership of 258, and that the position of last year had been held, both in numbers and influence of departments, each union fostering the departments most needed in its neighborhood. Tract distribution is carried out by house-to-house visitation, at workshops, factories, state schools, railways and jail, while placards are kept in workshops, etc. Flower missions, Christmas cheer, sewing for the needy, temperance booths at athletic sports are also some of the departments worked, while there is no decrease in numbers or interest at the mothers' meetings; the first of these was held at Baintree, seventy-five years ago by a young wife of nineteen. Mrs. Johnson, president, said women of the W. C. T. U. worked for eternity; they often saw but few results, though the time was coming when temperance reform would be crystallized on statute books and success was sure to come, if all were faithful, patient, hopeful and brave to do or dare for the cause, knowing it to be right.

A paper on "Justice" received well-merited applause, also "Heredity," "Temperance," by Dean Farrar, and "Model Daughters." A mothers' conference and model meeting proved interesting and many bright suggestions were given in the discussions. A Sabbath observance also a White Shield society was formed; a Willard memorial service was held and it was decided to collect for the Willard Temple, as a monument to Miss Willard who has been so much to white-ribbon women.

Gympie Y's are taking up the Australasian competitive examination, forming classes in different parts of the town; in other ways they have done good in Gympie alone; they with the W. C. T. U. held a Willard memorial and crusade service, when papers bearing on the life and aims of Frances Willard were read by Y's. In all parts of the colony Willard memorial services have been held.

The Roma union held a most successful booth at the show, which was more than satisfactory. It was something quite new for temperance to compete with the publicans for public patronage but people were glad to have somewhere to sit down, and men were thankful to go home sober with money in their pockets, because there was somewhere else than a bar to obtain lunch. These booths are often worked with great difficulty in bush districts, but they always prove a success.

Jerusalem.

THE following interesting letter comes from the Holy Land, where Mrs. J. K. Barney organized a W. C. T. U. during her recent trip as eighth round-the-world missionary:

"Since organization we have lost five of our charter members, two having moved away to Jaffa, one returned to England, one to be married and go to live at Carrick, and, through the change in the administration, our president returned to the United States. We have gained one new member, the new consul's wife, and we are praying and thinking she will be our next president. At our last meeting our recording secretary resigned, giving as her reason that it was principally because the union is conducted on American lines.

"We hold, for the boys, monthly meetings for Bible instruction in temperance; and every three months a social. We have taken up prison work, and only lack of funds for donations prevent weekly visits, permission having been very graciously given by the keeper to visit it as often as we wished. Now, some of your readers will not understand that remark, 'lack of funds for donations,' but, remember, we are not in free America, where you are at liberty to give the gospel freely, but where the government is hostile to the Christian religion, and which imprisons and then makes soldiers for life any of their number who desire to become Christians. The first time we went Miss Brown had the names of two Christians who were in for murder. I think each for fifteen years. We asked the keeper to see these and they were called up to the grated door; many Mohammedans crowded around also, and five Turkish officers in the office. Miss Brown gave in Arabic a blessed gospel message, and at times, when puzzled for a word to express her meaning, the keeper would explain to the prisoners. This is the way the word has to be given in this land, and the result left with Him who has said it shall not return unto Him void. Miss Slack suggested that we take up press work, and send notices to the press of our work, which would be a real pleasure had we any press, but unfortunately we have none in this place to send them to. She also recommended the distribution of literature; all literature to be of any avail here must be in Arabic; this we have not, nor the means to procure it. This brings us down to our last meeting, May 27, when it was decided to take up flower mission work, and Miss Lovell, vice-president, and who is also matron of the home for blind girls here, was chosen superintendent of that department. Accordingly, six of us volunteered to raise flowers and distribute them among the hospitals, and a young Mohammedan man who is learning English donated a basketful of elegant flowers, beside getting his brother to write fifty Scriptural texts in Arabic, Miss Lovel's young teacher, a native of Beyrout, writing the rest. The Turkish, the Children's, the German, and the London Jews' hospital for Jews, were each visited, and oh, how glad the recipients were to get the flowers. In all, about one hundred and twenty-five bouquets were given out. Making the bouquets and distributing them was such a real pleasure to the inmates of the blind Home, and such a diversion from their daily humdrum routine, that they wished to visit the hospitals weekly, and they collected flowers and went again last Thursday, and found many still treasuring their faded flowers. This can be done weekly but a short time, for the flowers are nearly done with until the winter comes again, but Miss Dunn suggested that it could be a fruit mission, with Scriptural texts, but even this can not be afforded. The W. C. T. U. could establish a grand foreign mission temperance work on this line, and so, if the Master lays it on the hearts of any of His children to do anything for Him here, they will know the needs and the different departments of work, and the need is just as great now as in Paul's day for collections for the saints at Jerusalem in order to work for the Master. And now, to all the dear readers, greetings and love, with assurance of prayers in His Name. (MRS.) M. RYERSON,
"Cor. Sec. W. C. T. U., Jerusalem."

THE temperance organizations are busily engaged in protesting against the proposition of the government granting the sum of £20,000 towards the wine industry. The W. C. T. U. are very earnest in this matter.

The Australasian competitive examination on the subject of temperance physiology is being taken up very generally and we hope to have a large number of successful competitors in November.

An illustrated memorial number of our White

Ribbon Signal was issued in May, which contained much valuable information of our beloved leader.

According to reports fifteen new members have been added to our ranks during the month of May. Bendigo Y's report sixteen new members for the year.

Mothers' meetings, L. T. L. or Bands of Hope are the principal department of work among country unions.

The time is drawing near for agricultural shows. The Colonial superintendent is very energetic in this department, urging all unions to secure booths.

The executive met as usual and reported working the Frances Willard club successfully, also the half yearly conference was a decided success. A large number of communications were read and discussed, and business arising therefrom attended to.

A new union has been formed at South Melbourne and successful anniversaries held elsewhere.

Nebraska.

THE efforts of our faithful home workers in various parts of the state have been greatly helped by the assistance of some of our National organizers. Mrs. L. G. Johnson spent two and a half months of continuous work, visiting the second, third, sixth and ninth districts. She gave sixty-nine public addresses and thirty-two to women only; organized eight counties and added about two hundred new members to our organization. Her work has been very acceptable and the results are good. She will be warmly welcomed when she visits us again. Mrs. Unruh was another helpful worker, spending thirty-seven days in the state, holding a large number of meetings and adding many new members. She organized three unions and attended two conventions. Mrs. Unruh is an old friend always welcome to Nebraska.

Considerable excitement has been caused not only in our union ranks, but in all religious and temperance circles by the license to sell liquors on the grounds of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, which was given in spite of more than two hundred thousand remonstrants. Organizations all over the state worked heroically to prevent the disgrace. When no attention was paid them and the license was granted, some of these—notably the Christian Endeavor, the Red Ribbon Club and Nebraska Wesleyan University—pledged themselves to remain away from the Exposition and influence as many others as possible to do the same. Urgent solicitation was brought to bear upon the state W. C. T. U. to withdraw their headquarters and join in this pledge. The matter was canvassed in a most earnest spirit in executive meeting, the majority being in favor of maintaining headquarters and using every influence possible in counteracting the evil and showing our never-dying and ever-active opposition to the liquor traffic. Many strong sentiments have been expressed which strengthens us in our belief that we are right in so doing. In the last Union Worker our state president, Mrs. Walker, says, "To have withdrawn our headquarters would have been the first record in the twenty-five years of our history that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had shown retreat. We have protested as individuals and as an organization; to withdraw would be to surrender to the liquor element, and would be regarded by them as a great victory. We can not so make the sacrifice."

Hon. C. E. Bently, former candidate for president of the National party, wrote a very strong article supporting our position for both the State Journal of Lincoln and the Worker. He said, "If there is a conspicuous and flagrant wrong in selling liquor at the exposition, that is just the place for the W. C. T. U. to locate with flying banners. That is what it was born for and that is its divine mission. It must camp on the battlefield, humanity's 'Red Cross,' for moral nursing and healing, the ever aggressive, unrelenting foe to wrong, the ever present protest to legalized crime." The National officers also approved the stand of the state union, and with such gallant support we take courage. Headquarters are to be found in the Nebraska building at room seventeen, where all visiting sisters to the exposition are welcome. Preparations are going on for a temperance congress sometime during the summer, at which national speakers are expected. The program will be given in the Union Worker, Mrs. E. W. Smith, York, Nebraska, editor. A temperance restaurant may also be found upstairs in the "Boys' and Girls'" building, conducted by a prominent white-ribboner of Omaha, Mrs. Ida Tilden.

Fifth district convention was held in Sutton June 5. From reports from a little over half the number of unions in the district a membership of 443 was returned. Eleven unions observed memorial days for Miss Willard and Neal Dow. Good work has been done distributing literature, Fairbury having raised eleven dollars to circulate the National Education. A fine paper on "Franchise" was read by Mrs. M. J. Warner, of Chester, and one entitled, "What Hinders?" by Mrs. Bertha D. Town, of Hebron. The Temple superintendent reported $132 collected for the Temple in the past nine months. Mrs. Angie F. Newman, of Lincoln, was present and gave her fine lecture on "Egypt." Revs. Fowler and Losey, pastors of Sutton, addressed the convention. Mrs. C. E. Welton, Fairbury, was re-elected president.

The Otoe county convention held in Palmyra was largely attended and was a most interesting occasion. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. N. A. Hayes, and responded to by Mrs. Dee, of Hazel Dell. The address of the evening was by Mrs. Hoover, second district president, and was a description of her visit to the World's and National Conventions and to Niagara Falls upon her return.

A conference of mothers, conducted by Mrs. Hoover, was a feature of the convention, as also a suffrage symposium, led by Mrs. Winklepleck, and a memorial service, in charge of Mrs. McGrew. Officers elected were Mrs. Pendleton, Nebraska City, president; Mrs. Sweet, Palmyra, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Winklepleck, Palmyra, recording secretary, Mrs. Davies, Nebraska City, treasurer.

Gage county's convention was a very profitable one, though laboring under the disadvantage of a rainy week. The ladies of Blue Springs were very cordial in their welcome, and any failures in program by reason of absentees, were promptly filled by faithful women present, the Y's responding readily as well as the older ones. Miss Anna Goudy, state superintendent of Y work, was especially helpful in every place, and the Y quartette of Beatrice furnished excellent music. Mrs. Shadle, editor of the Odell Wave, read a paper of unusual merit upon the duty of women to the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Kate Filley, of Filley, a paper on "Our Unconscious Influence," that was very full of helpful thought. Rev. Mr. Bright, of Beatrice, gave a stirring address in the evening. Ten dollars was voted to be sent to the Temple fund. Officers elected were: Mrs. L. M. Russell, Wymore, president; Miss Addie Sylvester, Blue Springs, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Nellie Wheelock, Beatrice, recording secretary; Mrs. Hartzell, Blue Springs, treasurer. The very interesting mothers' meeting, in charge of Mrs. Gamble, of Beatrice, was highly appreciated.

Crete union holds mothers' meetings once a month, which are largely attended by many outside the union. They held a memorial service for Miss Willard, at which resolutions were adopted to follow the counsels of our departed leader and remain loyal to our National officers.

At Thayer county convention report was made of sixty-eight dollars sent to the Temple fund, each union pledging, through its delegate, to give one dollar per member in the next year.

Nebraska state union has sustained a great loss in the death of Mrs. Nettie Doty, the loved president of the eleventh district. Mrs. Doty has been for a number of years one of our most energetic and capable district presidents, keeping her district in the front rank of active work during the long period of crop failure in which it suffered more than almost any other. She was greatly beloved by the women of her district, and in her death the executive board have lost a strong member.

Soon after the second regiment of Nebraska volunteers went into camp at Chickamauga, Colonel Bills, its commander, declared that no canteen should exist within its bounds. He has since received numberless letters from mothers and friends of the soldiers, and from organizations, among which the W. C. T. U. was first, thanking him for his noble stand and expressing great satisfaction at the circumstance. Money and contributions have been raised and forwarded for hospital use in the regiment. Colonel Bills has endeared himself to the "home folks" by his manly action, and many a mothers' heart is relieved of much anxiety. God bless such fearless men.

Missouri.

THE annual convention of the first district was held in Kahoka, June 9 and 10, and was a very successful one. The day sessions were very interesting, and at night Mrs. Hoffman addressed the large congregations in attendance. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. S. C. Nutter, president; Mrs. Sue Ballard, secretary; Mrs. L. B. Spangler, treasurer. The district president, Mrs. Nutter, has been most untiring in her efforts to bring this district to the front, and she is loved by every member of the unions.

The fourth district is mourning the loss of one of its most loved white-ribboners, Mrs. Julia Price Towns, who died at her home in Blue Ridge, June 8, after a short illness. She had been a member of the white-ribbon band for eight years, being a most faithful worker, and was the district recording secretary, being re-elected at the district convention, held in King City in May, where she also gave a happy response to the welcome addresses. The news of her death was a shock to all, and her husband, Mr. W. F. Towns, has the sympathy of a host of friends. Funeral services were conducted at the Missionary Baptist church, of which she was a member, by Rev. J. C. Poe, assisted by Rev. G. A. Lewis, of the M. E. church, and Mrs. Lura Hyden-Boleyn, president of the fourth district. Mrs. Towns' wish was carried out in dispensing with mourning, but beautiful floral offerings were many, among them being some from the Bethany W. C. T. U., L. T. L. of Bethany, the fourth district W. C. T. U. and Blue Ridge W. C. T. U. The Blue Ridge union has lost a most faithful worker, for she was the press reporter from that union and also the earnest contest superintendent. Through her efforts, the union was made the banner union at the convention held a year ago in Jameson.

Bethany had a rose and conversazione social on June 9, at the home of the flower mission superintendent, Mrs. Lucy Crossan. The rooms were beautifully decorated with roses, in wreaths, festoons and bouquets, and it elicited much praise from all. While the hearts of white-ribboners were sad over the death of Mrs. Towns, yet the visitors present had a very pleasant evening. A large number of the roses was sent to the funeral of Mrs. Towns, which was held June 10. Mrs. Crossan lately held a very interesting flower mission meeting in the union.

FIFTH DISTRICT: Nodaway county convention was held May 23, and was a most successful gathering. Every active member of the W. C. T. U. present was made a delegate. Miss Millie Kester spoke on department work, social purity, mothers' meetings, franchise and press work. Mrs. Joseph Morris, of Quitman, spoke of the juvenile work. The importance of press and literature was spoken of by Mrs. Walcott and others. Mrs. Saylor told of scientific temperance instruction. Social work was discussed and the best way to meet the wants of the young people for pure and helpful social meetings. The reports of unions were given in the afternoon.

Burlington Junction union reported that fourteen members were added at Mrs. Hoffman's meetings. They have mothers', social purity and gospel meetings.

The Quitman union has had two silver medal contests. Mrs. Fields was well received and organized an L. T. L. of thirty members. The union has eleven active members.

Maryville union circulated a protest against the drinking customs of Yale college, and secured the signatures of the young people's societies in the various churches. Also secured the names of forty of the leading business men on the anti-cigaret petitions. Mothers' meetings is the most successful department; large attendance at Bible study or evangelistic meetings. Bishop Vincent, of the M. E. church, was chief speaker at their memorial service, and paid a magnificent tribute to our promoted leader, Frances Willard. An effort is being made to organize

A Matter of Health

Extreme care is necessary in purchasing baking powders to avoid those made from burnt alum, phosphatic or other harsh acids, of which there are innumerable brands in the market.

Great efforts are made to foist these inferior powders upon consumers by the inducement of a lower price and by grossly false representations as to their ingredients and comparative value.

Alum baking powders have been declared by the most competent authorities injurious to health. Therefore every precaution must be taken to keep them out of the food. They are sold under many names, and new brands are continually appearing.

It is safe to avoid the use of any new or doubtful brand until you have had it analyzed. The purity of any powder sold at a lower price than Royal may be suspected.

Royal is a pure cream of tartar baking powder and its exclusive use is the practical and positive safeguard against alum and the various adulterations found in other brands. It has been analyzed and recommended by the U. S. Government chemists, by the health officers of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, London, etc., and by eminent physicians and scientists generally, who give it the greatest praise for its marvelous purity and leavening strength.

The Royal powder costs only a fair price per pound, and is cheaper and better at its price than any similar article in the world.

a drill company for boys, to get them together for good.

Rural union meets every two weeks. They have sixteen members with five departments of work.

Hopkins union is keeping up several lines of work, and is encouraged to keep pegging away.

SEVENTH DISTRICT: Plymouth union has taken all the schools in the township, six in all, under its care as to scientific temperance instruction, and as a result they have recently held an "Original Essay" contest on the subject of narcotics, giving a silver medal to the winner. Different schools were represented. The essays were all surprisingly good. They are now arranging for an L. T. L. silver medal contest. The speakers are all under thirteen years of age.

The L. T. L. of Roads, under the direction of the Roads union, gave a picnic the latter part of June, inviting the Plymouth L. T. L. as guests.

NINTH DISTRICT: Mrs. D. D. Reid, the newly appointed district press superintendent, sends a splendid account of the seventh annual convention held in Hannibal, June 30. Twenty-two delegates were present and the annual address by the president, Mrs. M. A. Buchanan, contained many good points. Miss Lillian Wood, of Maryville, gave an eloquent address in the evening.

A vocal contest was held the last evening and the medal awarded to Mr. Rolla Marshall, of Philadelphia. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. M. A. Buchanan; secretary, Mrs. Gertrude Ford; treasurer, Mrs. J. O. Snyder.

EIGHTEENTH DISTRICT: Arcadia Valley union has paid state dues and state pledge for 1898. Have held gospel temperance meetings, memorial services, and a grand gold medal contest was held April 12. Have racks in station and keep them supplied with good literature and Bibles. Have a column in the two local weekly papers, are not in debt and have money in treasury.

Fredericktown is hustling. Paid state dues, gave a union mass-meeting in the opera house, and over a thousand people were present. It has rented rooms in which it will give suppers, hold socials, etc., and will rent to churches for same purpose. Will serve refreshments whenever a crowd is in town. Keep literature in station.

Mrs. Daisy L. Wamsley, who is president of the eighteenth district, will move to De Sota in September to the regret of all unions in her district. But wherever she goes she will still be found working for humanity.

TWENTY-SIXTH DISTRICT: The annual convention was held June 16 and 17, and Mrs. S. A. E. Herrick, the president, says it was fine, nearly as good as that of the fourth district, she adds. They have ten unions in the district, and have had old folks, young folks, little folks, matrons, musical, suffrage, spelling, cake, cooky and other contests. Twelve sets World's Fair souvenir spoons, medals and various other articles given as prizes. Mrs. Neva Thomas lately spent three weeks in the district and organized two new unions. Mrs. Herrick says it would take several columns each week in THE UNION SIGNAL to tell all that the fourth and twenty-sixth do.

OTHER POINTS.

The Austin union is a live one. They recently sent twenty-five dollars to Miss Dow, two large boxes of flowers to Jefferson City and ordered a case of soap.

Miss Ellen D. Morris, the best state corresponding secretary of the United States, spent the month of July in Savannah with her mother.

Excellent work in contest department is being done in Minneola, Center, Kidder and New London. Republic, Brookline and Arcadia have held gold contests. Pineville, Fairfax and Garden City have held matrons' medal contests. Twenty-one silver medal contests were held, all of this being in the month of May, which is a good record, we think.

Edwards recently gave a contest and entertainment that made them many friends for the work. The program was most excellent. The music and decorations were beautiful, and all was highly appreciated.

Sedalia union has been actively engaged in various branches of work throughout the year. They hold an evangelistic service every month, under the charge of their efficient superintendent of evangelistic work, also gospel temperance meetings are held; have secured temperance secretaries in ten Sabbath-schools, and hundreds of pledge cards are being signed to add to the chain at the state convention. Services are held in the jail, anti-cigaret petitions have been sent to Congress, and now a petition is being circulated, asking that saloons of that city may be closed on Saturday night at the hour stated by the law, and on the Sabbath day. A committee from their union will present the petition to the mayor and board of aldermen. On June 16, Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Golladay visited them. A delightful reception was held during the afternoon, which was attended by many representative women of the city. Mrs. Hoffman gave an interesting talk upon "Woman's Influence," and Mrs. Golladay gave a short talk. At night Mrs. Hoffman lectured in the Cumberland Presbyterian church to a good audience, making a marked impression upon her hearers by her forceful, logical presentation of the subject of her lecture.

Flower Mission day was celebrated at the penitentiary. The state superintendent of that department, Mrs. Isgrigg, being unable to be present, Mrs. Lucy M. Wisker, state superintendent of jail and prison work, conducted the services of the day in her place. Mrs. Hoffman was the principal speaker, and delivered two feeling addresses in the men's department and one in the women's department, which were much appreciated by the prisoners. The exercises throughout were most interesting and helpful to the prisoners, who look forward from year to year to the coming of the "flower ladies," as they call them.

Missouri white-ribboners will regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Ida F. Burr, of Princeton. She was at one time president of the fourth district, and a lecturer of great ability.

OLMSTED county held its ninth annual convention in Stewartville, with an attendance of thirty-one voting delegates besides a large number of visitors. Mrs. Scovell, state president, was present throughout, and to quote the report verbatim,

Take It Up Stairs, Too.

Nearly everybody uses Wool Soap down stairs in the laundry. It's the one soap that won't shrink woolens, and people must use it there. But you need it up stairs more—up in bathroom and bedroom. Don't use on your face what you dare not use on wool!

is simply pure soap. Other soaps are called pure—but they shrink wool. They lack our secret.

Whenever you need a pure soap you need Wool Soap. You need it most for toilet and bath. That's where Wool Soap is important.

"The oftener she comes among us, the stronger grows our attachment for her," while the two evening addresses she gave were very much appreciated. Department work was urged upon the unions, and it was decided to push these more vigorously. The deaths of Mrs. Wm. Bear, of Eyota, and Mrs. S. C. Abbott, of Rochester, two active and influential workers, were a source of sorrow to the convention.

Fillmore county held its convention at Spring Valley, with thirty-one delegates. The reports showed good work done. A paper on Franchise, followed by a talk on the same subject, were both profitable and interesting. Spirited discussions on the W. C. T. U. influence at the polls, and department work brought out varied opinions from different speakers. Prof. G. W. E. Hill was present and conducted a class drill in the afternoon, and in the evening gave an address, taking for his text the words, "For ye have need of patience," certainly a pertinent reminder for reform workers.

Dodge county had Miss Marie C. Brehm with them who won golden opinions for herself and helped the work grandly. Miss Pearl Benham, a gifted young woman, delighted all with her singing. A matrons' contest was held the last evening, the medal being carried off by Mrs. Vrooman.

Wright county convention was held in June, with sixteen delegates present. A convention dinner was served at the church. During the day several excellent papers were read, and in the afternoon memorial services were held for Mrs. Ida C. Bradford, of Monticello, who had been a valued worker. Resolutions were adopted concerning her death, which showed the esteem in which she was held.

Wabasha county convention was entertained by the South Troy union. Miss Hollister was present throughout, and gave very great aid. The last evening she made an appeal for new members for the local union, to which six responded, and more will follow.

The eighth district held its convention in Willmar. Owing to sickness and bad weather the attendance was small, but the interest was excellent and the members earnest and enthusiastic. After a year's trial of district department plan it was decided to abandon that and depend more fully upon the county department superintendents to stimulate and direct the local workers. The reports showed some gains, new unions had been organized, but some old ones had been disbanded, and one Y had been merged with the W. Excellent papers were read on purity, Sunday-school work, unfermented wine and "The New Man."

The tenth district convention was held in St. Paul, with a very good attendance. The secretary's report showed activity in many lines, and the treasurer's report showed a neat balance on the right side. Good reports of department work were given in work for soldiers and sailors, mothers' meetings and scientific temperance instruction. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine gave many encouraging items from the National work of the Sabbath-school department. Mrs. Irvine also gave an address, "News from the War," comparing our struggle with the liquor traffic to the war with Spain. Mrs. C. S. Soule, state treasurer, conducted the memorial services for the loved ones gone on before. Rev. R. L. Barackman, pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church, in which the convention was held, spoke of the relation of the W. C. T. U. to the church.

A president's council, in which thirteen unions were represented, gave fine reports of work done. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry was present, and added much to the enjoyment of the delegates. Mrs. J. B. Foltz directed a model L. T. L., in which a number of boys and girls demonstrated how much can be accomplished with the children. A matrons' contest was conducted in the evening, the medal being awarded to Mrs. R. M. Lawton. The officers elected for the coming year were: Mrs. A. Y. Bordwell, president; Mrs. E. L. Farnsworth, secretary, and Mrs. M. J. Russell, treasurer.

HERE AND THERE.

Preston union has had Prof. G. W. E. Hill with them, who has spoken seven evenings to full houses. The meetings of the union have been very interesting and the attendance good. A half column is maintained in the local paper; scientific temperance is taught in the schools, and—happy Preston—no prisoners have been in the jail for six months.

Kasson union, while not making any great gains, has steadily held its own, continuing to battle against blind pigs, social impurity, fermented wine at communion and other evils. They have at present thirty-two members, and carry on eight departments of work. A barrel of literature was sent to a lumber camp, which was also supplied with late papers, greatly to the pleasure of the men in camp, as testified by their hearty response. Parlor meetings, temperance teas, social purity meetings and a booth at the fair, were a part of the work the union has done.

Richland union has but six paying members and two honoraries, and sickness has interfered somewhat with their work, yet they have meetings, had a social, paid something to the Temperance Hospital and helped swell the state organizer's fund; have also held one mothers' meeting. The L. T. L. which they had through the winter, was given up when the leader moved away.

Hennepin county held a school of methods in the Y. M. C. A. building of this city, July 14 and 15, conducted by Miss M. C. Brehm. The program was a very attractive one, and well carried out. Miss Brehm is a host in herself, and with Rev. Alice Palmer and others, the sessions could not fail to be interesting.

A letter from Miss Palmer gives glimpses of the busy life, going here and there, giving herself constantly to the well-beloved work for humanity. The W. C. T. U. had one day given them at Red Rock, the Methodist state camp-meeting. Several of our "elect ladies" were present and spoke, Miss Palmer preaching a sermon, the first annual sermon by the W. C. T. U. in that place, where it is now hoped to have similar services yearly.

Louisiana.

THE Minutes of the sixteenth annual convention of the state W. C. T. U. are just received. The comprehensive statistical report of the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. M. Zable, presents a subject for serious thought. Truly every friend of the temperance cause, every woman who wears the white ribbon, as well as the careless, thoughtless women of Louisiana, must be aroused to the magnitude of the work in our fair state. All of the reports of the officers and superintendents was a Macedonian cry for help—few laborers and a wide, uncultivated field.

Mrs. M. E. Haughton, National evangelist, came to Louisiana in February and spent eighty-one days in the state. During that time she delivered two hundred and fifteen addresses, sermons, talks to Sunday-schools, public schools and L. T. L's. All who were fortunate enough to hear her were spiritually benefited by her ministrations.

Since the state was redistricted the first district comprises seventeen parishes and it is the largest district in the state W. C. T. U. This wide territory has only nine unions and two of these are not actively at work. Most of the department work of the district is done in New Orleans, of which the motive power is the Central union.

Hammond, in Tangipahoa parish, is favorably located on the Illinois Central railway, and might become the nucleus of the W. C. T. U. for all that section of country. The town ostensibly has prohibition with a local union of thirty members. Let officers and members be alike enthused, have a wide-awake L. T. L. and Y's consecrated to the cause, and what a power Hammond might become for the peace and sobriety of the whole state. The Hammond union has local headquarters, and in this respect is now ahead of many other unions.

The second district, Mrs. H. C. Pharr, president, has just issued the minutes of its sixth annual convention. This is of especial interest, as it contains a fine portrait of Mrs. Pharr. Of the twelve parishes included in this district, only St. Mary parish is organized. The half dozen unions in the remainder of the district are not all active at present.

The new department, the systematic giving of one cent per week for the benefit of the state W. C. T. U., resulted in the sum of twenty-two dollars from the second district, which was two dollars per union. The Monroe union, however, gave an entertainment at the home of Mrs. E. F. Blanks, from which was realized forty-six dollars, and won the banner for the fifth district, for the largest amount donated to the state organization.

The third district, Mrs. K. E. Wilkins, president, secured Mrs. Haughton's services, where she labored most faithfully. She paid all her traveling expenses from the collections taken at her meetings, and had a small balance to turn over to the state treasury besides.

The Fourth district, Mrs. Sallie Horton, has accomplished most in the line of social purity and charity during the year. Three little girls were rescued from the street and placed in the orphan asylum.

The fifth district, Mrs. Annie L. Wilson, president, also won the banner for aggressive effort. Several departments of work had been successfully carried out, four Demorest medal contests, four L. T. L. demonstrations and eight public meetings had been held; eighty-four new members had been secured during the year.

Robeline claims prohibition, but with seventeen reported "blind tigers," the field for temperance evangelization calls loudly for helpers, agitators and public lecturers.

The July report from Morgan City is gratifying; when most of the unions have succumbed to the heat, this union is at work. The medal contest materially benefited the local treasury, and the question of a kindergarten school was discussed at the regular meeting. The Henrietta Pharr Y's had gained eight new members. Flower mission day was celebrated and eighty bouquets were distributed.

Connecticut.

THE state superintendent of Sunday-school department has prepared a circular letter which she is sending out with the report blanks, to be read at the next meeting of the unions. The letter calls attention to some of the important lines of work in this department, and urges the appointment of local superintendents. It is earnestly hoped that the report blanks will be filled out and returned before vacation plans interrupt. It will be remembered that this department in Connecticut received the prize banner at the National Convention. The banner was awarded for the greatest increase in the number of local superintendents. Connecticut made a gain of 450 per cent, and if the unions will do as well this year, we may be able to hold the handsome banner for another year. Let us try for it.

The sixteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Middlesex county was held in Portland, June 2. The addresses of welcome were cordial and inspiring. The response full of grateful appreciation and kindly thoughts. The reports show much faithful effort and good work accomplished. The state president, with her wise counsel and helpful suggestions, added much to the interest of the day. The editor of the White Ribbon Banner was present, and enthusiastically espoused the cause of the bright little paper which is so necessary to the welfare of the state organization, and it should be enlarged and its circulation doubled through her earnest efforts. The L. T. L. of Middletown added to the pleasure of the day and variety of the program by songs and recitations. An original paper on "Heredity and Environment," was convincing and logical and made a pleasant break in the business routine. The report of state L. T. L. work was interesting. The Y Branch was presented by the state secretary. Local pastors, addressing the union, spoke with great reverence of our fallen but beloved leader, Frances Willard, and her work. Election of delegate to the next National Convention, committee on resolutions for state convention, and of officers for the ensuing county year, concluded the business of the day.

At Branford, June 5, a mass-meeting took the place of the regular Sunday evening service, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. J. K. Barney was guest of honor and chief speaker. The meeting was largely attended. Mrs. Barney held her audience enthralled so great was her magnetism and so full of pathos her words.

At the morning service, in another church, she gave a talk that won the heart of every listener. Mrs. Barney's discourse was interspersed with personal experiences of her thirty years' work among prisoners. Her words of wisdom will long remain, as will those of Mrs. Forbes, state president, who lately visited and spoke to the union.

I have received a copy of the new state directory. It is gratifyingly complete, a thing of beauty, typographically, and will be a joy for a year.

Work Among Foreigners.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS AND CO-WORKERS:—No doubt you have all felt some discouragement this summer since the war has so largely diverted interest into other channels. But faith and courage are not exemplified in times of success and prosperity, and we must work when men or women fail us, remembering that God never fails us. The time is drawing near when reports must be sent in. Each of you must have done something, and we want the fragments as well as the loaves gathered up.

I have sent out a good quantity of literature this summer wherever I could hear of workers that could distribute it. These tracts ought to be paid for. That would help the National to keep up the department, and come much lighter on the unions than it does on those of us at the helm. Many seem to think they ought to be furnished free, though I do not know where they think the money comes from to publish them. Our state superintendents understand this, but many of the general workers do not. It takes ten dollars' worth of literature alone to keep the immigrants at Ellis Island supplied. We have a noble corps of women, who are each doing what is possible.

Let the local superintendents report to district and state, and these to me by the middle of September. I have sent my "Plan of Work" to each associate and to the state superintendents, and in addition to this a list of questions to be answered. Please send replies to these in addition to your reports. They give statistics, while the reports give general information, so that from both I may glean a good idea of your work to embody in my report to the National Convention. Let us stimulate each other to good works that this year, this sad year, when we so miss our inspiring leader, we can offer her a noble meed of praise, the most acceptable we can give, by bringing in results accomplished in the work so dear to her heart.

Affectionately yours,
SOPHIE F. GRUBB.

Treasurer's Corner.

It seems a long time since I was permitted to sit in my cozy corner and chat for a moment with the women, but while silent we have not been idle. Many contributions have come in for our "boys in blue," which we have sent on to our superintendent at the front to be transmuted into literature and hospital comforts, ice, jellies and other much needed necessities and luxuries. The colored women of Greensboro, N. C., sent ninety cents for literature and the National was very glad to send it on to the boys. The following sums were sent for the same purpose and have been forwarded to Mrs. Thacher: Tallapoosa, Ga., $1; Mrs. M. H. Dunlap, Williamsport, O., $5; Mrs. Margaret W. Whitaker, North Granville, N. Y., $25; Mrs. Kate M. Gilbert, Chambersburg, Pa., $5; Minnie M. Cox, Milo, Mo., $3.50; Mrs. M. Y. Mahan, Griggsville, Ill., $3; Mrs. Clara E. Meades, Gonic, N. H., $15; Mrs. E. F. Stafford, Fall River, Mass., $5; Mrs. Julie M. Fawcett, Rushsylvania, O., $4; E. A. Sargent, Nebraska City, Neb., $1.25; Mrs. Emma Voris, Marion, Ia., $39. Dues are coming in slowly. Illinois, Vermont, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Northern California, West Washington, West Virginia, Louisiana No. 2, Ohio, Texas No. 2, New Hampshire, New York and North Dakota have sent in dues during July. This has greatly helped us through the mid-year drought. The locals this year have been greatly pressed by outside interests, but we must not forget our own particular work.

I am happy to report that the cash prizes offered by the company for largest number of wrappers returned during May, June and July have been awarded as follows: Central union, Kansas City, Mo., $100; Reiley union, Evanston, Ill., $75; Grand Rapids, Mich., $50, and Pittsford, N. Y., $25. If the women will be energetic for the balance of the year in collecting these wrappers, it will surely save us from a threatened deficit. One good thing about this plan is, it takes no money from our overburdened unions, but helps the state and the National as well.

The $2 pledges are being redeemed quite satisfactorily, yet there are many still standing.

We trust the superintendents will be a little patient during this dry time. We have never failed in the five years of our official duties to send the quarterly installments promptly. We may be a little late this time, but we shall meet them all, we trust, during the month. A letter just received from Mr. and Mrs. Topping, of Tokio, Japan, speaks in words of unqualified praise of the work of our beloved sister, Clara Parrish, and we trust to give to THE UNION SIGNAL extracts of this letter as soon as their pages are a little more free. All will be glad to read this well merited tribute to a faithful worker.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since writing last, my time has been fully taken with work in my own state, and I am just now enjoying a visit at home after a lecturing tour lasting more than three months.

Beginning with March 26, I devoted two weeks to the twenty-eighth district, closing with a convention at Poplar Bluff, where the district was organized and efficient officers put in charge. In another unorganized district, the twenty-ninth, a beginning was made at Morley, where I organized with sixty-eight members. After a journey diagonally across Missouri, I entered upon a six weeks' campaign in the banner district of the state, the fourth. In spite of almost continuous rain and roads that were fearful to contemplate and more fearful to travel, there were many pleasant and successful meetings, most delightful of all being the district convention at King City, which was unusually interesting and profitable.

It was quite like a holiday to take a day off in the midst of my labors and attend the Missouri prohibition convention at Moberly, where I felt quite at home "among the brethren," and was much encouraged by their enthusiasm.

On May 25, I spoke before the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Marshall, Mo., as a fraternal delegate from the National W. C. T. U. The reception accorded me was most flattering, and a resolution was unanimously adopted indorsing the W. C. T. U. in all its departments of work.

After eight days in the twelfth district I went to Jefferson City to assist at the state penitentiary on Flower Mission Day. It was no small task to arrange flowers, text cards and ribbons for 2,300 prisoners, besides fans and oranges for those in the hospital, and speak and sing at four services during the day, but the appreciation of the prisoners made the service a joyful and blessed one.

My three weeks' work in the twenty-first district began with the district convention at Appleton City, which was well attended and very successful. After that I was in unorganized counties, off the railroad, where I found the work very difficult but succeeded in opening the way for the next one who shall go.

The summary of this little "pleasure exertion" is 108 lectures, 60 business meetings, 10 new unions and 2 "made over," 125 members gained, 100 honoraries and 300 pledge signers. Many meetings besides those mentioned above were addressed in the course of the 1,851 miles traveled by rail and the 314 miles by land.

Am enjoying a brief respite now, but with August will come Teachers' Institutes, Chautauquas, Assemblies and conventions with lectures and other meetings galore, and thus from month to month the work goes on. Faithfully yours,

CARRIE LEE CARTER.
Dexter, Mo.

DEAR COMRADES:—I write you from the northwest corner of the United States on Puget Sound, in the beautiful state of Washington. Since last visiting our "cozy corner," we have traveled from the sunny state of Texas all the way to this embarking place for the Klondike, a somewhat circuitous route, surely, as we left the beaten track, and put in nearly a month of earnest work on the plains and rugged mountain slopes of Arizona, visiting some of her mining towns, finding plenty of territory for earnest work for God and home. From Arizona we took the southern route to California, stopping ten days in the "city of angels," and making our way slowly northward over the beautiful "Shasta route" to Portland, Ore. In San Francisco it was our pleasure to see Jessie Ackermann, and later, on the train, the indefatigable Henrietta Skelton. Both gave us words of welcome and encouragement. In Oregon we found the rains making the country beautiful and green, covering the moss fences, roofs and wayside stumps, until we forgot that our constant accompaniments to walk or drive were the umbrella, overshoes and mackintoshes, so charmed were we with everything about us. The rain, however, does not dampen the ardor of our women.

After spending some three weeks in Oregon we took a steamer up the Snake river into Idaho. Our first stop here was at Lewiston, where we were invited to attend the state convention. We found the women thoroughly alive and making good use of their advantages as recognized citizens of the United States. The ballot is giving the whole state a new impetus. It is being felt in the schools. Girls are taking up all studies pertaining to government with an aim and with interest, a marked change the teachers tell us from the old method of studying merely to pass examinations.

We crossed the mountains by stage, finding the same interest and eagerness all along the line. For about a month we have been working in West Washington, beginning with the state convention at Centralia. The question of the hour here is the suffrage amendment which is to be submitted to the people in November. We are now engaged in this campaign, speaking most of the time twice, daily, using "chalk" and voice to aid in bringing about this just measure. We are also doing some organizing.

The women in the new as well as old unions are fully awake on the subject, even the young women and the children are coming bravely to the front, and nothing will be left undone that efficient officers and clear-brained, broad-minded, mother-hearted women and just men can do.

Yours for victory,
MAUDE L. GREENE,
Nat. Chalk-Talker and Organizer.

CONSTIPATION

"I have gone 14 days at a time without a movement of the bowels, not being able to move them except by using hot water injections. Chronic constipation for seven years placed me in this terrible condition; during that time I did everything I heard of but never found any relief; such was my case until I began using CASCARETS. I now have from one to three passages a day, and if I was rich I would give $100.00 for each movement; it is such a relief." AYLMER L. HUNT, 1689 Russell St., Detroit, Mich.

W. C. T. U. News.

AT a late district convention at Lake City, Col., a wagon load of delegates came from Paonia, one hundred miles distant, the entire distance being over mountain roads.

THIRTEEN hundred copies of the White Ribbon (the North Carolina state paper) are mailed each month to the local unions; 21,210 pages of literature were distributed in that state during the past year.

THE W. C. T. U. school of methods at Silver Lake Assembly, New York, is conducted by Mrs. M. J. Bissell, Mrs. L. P. Davies being president. We note that Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin, National lecturer and organizer of the White Cross Societies, speaks on several topics. Other able speakers are on the program.

OF the Bay View Assembly just closed a correspondent writes: "The part of the W. C. T. U. institute conducted by our women was the finest of all. Mrs. Rounds presides magnificently, and with her wisdom and wit and fine ability as a leader, she is the most successful and most admired woman on the grounds. Really, the W. C. T. U. women have made a record for clear, logical thinking and for quickness of repartee and readiness in discussion that tells effectively upon 'outsiders,' and it seems to me the interests of the organization can not be better advanced than by such judiciously conducted institutes."

MAJ. GEORGE A. HILTON has just concluded a series of afternoon and evening evangelistic meetings held in the First Congregational church, under the auspices of the Los Angeles W. C. T. U. The attendance has been large. "The major was at his best and poured hot shot into the ranks of evil, especially giving some shells from his prohibition dynamite gun." Eighty women gave their names for W. C. T. U. membership the first Sabbath afternoon. More than one hundred musicians participated in the meetings. This great treat for the temperance people of Los Angeles is largely due to the energy and perseverance of Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard, the county president of the W. C. T. U.

Form of Bequest.

I give and bequeath to "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" the sum of (———) for the use of said institution absolutely.

The readers of the Hospital column this week will note with satisfaction General Miles' warning against alcohol as a medicinal agent. He says: "The history of other armies has demonstrated that in a hot climate abstinence from the use of intoxicating drinks is essential to continued health and efficiency. Commanding officers of all grades and officers of the medical staff are enjoined to restrict or entirely prohibit the sale of such beverages. In this most important hour of the nation's history it is due the government from all those in its service that they should not only render most earnest efforts for its honor and welfare, but that their full physical and intellectual force should be given to their public duties, uncontaminated by any indulgences that shall dim, stultify, weaken or impair their faculties and strength in any particular. Officers of every grade, by example, as well as by authority, will contribute to the enforcement of the order."

This is only one among many proofs of the fallacy of the cure-all qualities of alcohol. How much has our own Hospital done to arrest the public thought and set the medical world investigating along this line? Let us not rest in our efforts until there is not found a physician of good standing who prescribes it for his patients in any form which can possibly create an appetite in the weakest one of the human family.

This month closes the year, which has been a year of steady growth and encouragement, hard work and close application. It has brought results which we scarcely dared hope for at its beginning, although we regret to say, this year's obligation on our lots as yet has not been paid. However, we feel that we have great reason to be very thankful to the Great Ruler, "whose eye is ever ready to see and His ear to hear."

We hope the sisters will bear in mind that our yearly sale occurs the first week in December. Now is a good time to begin the articles both useful and ornamental which your willing hands can prepare so cleverly. Last year the call of the purchaser seemed more in the line of useful articles, such as baby sacks, aprons, etc. Socks for little feet sold quickly and brought fair prices; pieces of embroidery were also in good demand, while quilts took the eye of many of the good prohibition brothers. A hint on this line is all that will be needed to fill our tables with such things as Christmas shoppers are always glad to secure, and white-ribbon women glad to contribute for the benefit of our hospital. Sisters, let it be said of us as of the people in the days of Nehemiah, the work was done because "The people had a mind to work."

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions offered by those who are interested in the effort being put forward by the National Woman's Christian Temperance union to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it was by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and at the request of Miss Willard that she accepted the foregoing trust.

DAVID MILLER, the aged father of Nebraska's W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. S. M. Walker, passed on to the better world, Friday, July 22. A happy and eminently useful life was his, and during the latter years he was intensely interested in all the work of the W. C. T. U., and greatly encouraged and aided his daughter in her work.

Died, June 23, 1898, at the home of her daughter, in Lincoln, Ill., MRS. LUCY CAMPBELL, aged eighty-eight years. She was a devoted member of the W. C. T. U. for years, and an inspiration to the local workers.

Publisher's Notes.

AUGUST BIBLE READING. "Vines and Branches," by Rev. Frances E. Townsley. Christ took His illustrations chiefly from nature. The interdependent relation of vine and branches is pointed out; also ways in which the vine of our fields or vineyards is both like and unlike Christ. The business of the branches is to bear fruit, not to make it, and there are, we are reminded, different stages of development. Stem, leaf, bud are each necessary to the perfect berry. The value of the pruning process and the importance of abiding in the vine is emphasized.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR AUGUST. "Physical Culture," by Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of that department. The connection of this work with temperance is explained and reasons given why all people—men, women and children—should take systematic physical exercise. Mrs. Leiter also tells how to arouse an interest in this subject among parents and teachers. how to start a gymnasium in a small town, where to obtain helps, and furnishes information about the department generally. The one fact alone that this branch of our work originated with Miss Willard and was often referred to by her as her "child," will kindle a desire in the hearts of W. C. T. U. women to know more about its aims and methods.

The memorial volume of Miss Willard's Life should be obtained from the Publishing House of whom you have purchased your prospectus. If you have not placed your order, it can be filled at regular list prices by sending $2 for cloth edition, $2.75 half morocco, $3.75 full morocco, to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple. We do not carry these books in stock but can place your orders with our general agents, through whom the book is sold by subscription.

We keep the Memorial Number constantly on hand, having had an extra issue for this purpose. Price single copies, ten cents.

THE director of the Siberian railroad announces that the whole line will be opened for use in 1904. Then it will be possible to travel round the earth in thirty days. At present the great bridge over the Yenisei river is being built. It will be a thousand metres long, and will be one of the most noteworthy structures of the kind in the world. Until it is finished trains will be carried across on boats in summer, and rails will be laid on the ice in winter.

THE Woman's National Sabbath Alliance offers a prize of $25 for a short paper on "The Benefits of the Sanctified Sabbath to the Home and Community at Large." A personal experience is preferred. Manuscripts will be received until October 15. MISS EMILIE WAGNER, of Baltimore, formerly a student at the Peabody Conservatory and a graduate of the Woman's College of Baltimore, has established a conservatory of music in a New York tenement house. The idea is to interest the ignorant and degraded in music. A beginning was made with a single room in a crowded tenement district, where lessons were given at a few pennies apiece to little ragamuffins. Now the conservatory has eighty students in violin and piano. Several former pupils are assistants, and some have developed extraordinary talent. The work is carried on from philanthropic motives, but has become self-supporting.

DR. E. C. ELLETT, of Memphis, reported several cases of toxic amblyopia, each having one or more peculiar features, but all being due to the abuse of tobacco, alcohol or quinine. He also exhibited charts showing the changes in the visual fields of these cases.

Dr. L. J. Lautenbach, of Philadelphia, related a number of cases of tobacco amblyopia, in some of which the patients had recovered even though they continued chewing tobacco, and he suggested a method of treatment, absolute cessation of smoking being an essential part of the treatment.

Dr. Hotz reported a case of tobacco alcohol amblyopia with sudden failure of vision. The man had written out a lodge report and two hours later was unable to read it.

Dr. Dudley S. Reynolds and Dr. Connor each reported cases of amblyopia due to the excessive use of tea and coffee.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Notes and Comments.

MANY of our friends who offer manuscript for publication in THE UNION SIGNAL either overlook or forget the rule of the office, stated each week on page 8, that "unavailable manuscript will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request." The large amount of unavailable material which comes into our hands makes it necessary to ask that our friends bear in mind this rule, and act accordingly.

OUR contributed department this week contains two articles which are worth careful reading and earnest thought upon the part of all men and women. That entitled, "Household Cooking and Intemperance," by Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson, well known as a writer on economics, appeals especially to busy wives and mothers who, amid the numerous household duties which prevent active work in a temperance organization, desire to aid in lessening the evils of intemperance. The other, "Alcohol the Cause of Crimes," by Dr. T. D. Crothers, editor of the Quarterly Journal of Inebriety, furnishes abundant thought food to voters and taxpayers.

IN our issue of August 4 it is stated that the city of Chicago spends $70,000 annually for drink. This is a typographical error. It should read $70,000,000. But it seems that even this amount is not a correct estimate. Mr. Alonzo Wilson, secretary of the Illinois prohibition executive committee, calls our attention to the statement of the internal revenue office in this city, which shows that during the month of July the United States government received in revenue and war taxes from the Chicago brewers $619,553; which means that the people of this city spent in one month $7,000,000 for beer alone. During the past year the federal government received from Chicago brewers $3,273,820 tax on four million barrels of beer, which reveals the astounding fact that Chicago people spent $80,000,000 in twelve months for beer alone! How much they spent for other liquors is difficult to estimate, but it is very probable that a total of $100,000,000 is spent annually for intoxicating drinks within the city of Chicago.

"MOTHER passed away peacefully this evening." Such was the sad message received at Headquarters last Friday morning from Miss Alice Demorest. And yet why should we say "sad"? The white ribbon army speaks not of "fallen" but of "promoted" comrades. Like other leaders who, before her, have passed beyond our limited earthly vision, Madam Demorest has but joined the ranks of the hosts invisible, and "who knows but in stress of the battle they haste to the fore?" Madam Demorest was seventy-four years old, and widow of William Jennings Demorest, prohibition leader, originator of the medal contest system and founder of Demorest's Magazine. She was a Temple trustee, and for many years one of the most valued members of the board of directors of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. She was active in philanthropic and literary circles of New York City, a charter member of Sorosis, and at the time of her death its second vice-president. The W. C. T. U. National officers and the W. T. P. A. sent messages of love and sympathy to the bereaved family.

"THE nation's two greatest foes are anarchy and rum." "Both sap the foundations of good citizenship and if allowed to work together unchecked will cause the downfall of the mightiest nation." "Rum is itself the arch anarchist." "Anarchy and alcohol are both alike destructive of ideas and ideals." "The abuse of strong drink is tolerated more than it should be—more than it would be if the people thoroughly understood that it is the twin demon of anarchy and that where the one rules the other will also sit on the throne." Sound temperance doctrine this, and worthy the pages of any prohibition paper! Indeed, the entire article from which these quotations are culled reads like an editorial from the New York Voice. Yet it comes from that staunch supporter of the rum traffic and friend of the saloon, the Chicago Tribune! Concerning army canteens, it says: "They are destructive of the basic principle of patriotism which has driven our army and navy out to do and dare in battle. For the Tribune to speak so plainly and emphatically regarding the rum demon indicates the activity of the temperance leaven. Anti-rum sentiment has risen to such a height in these latter days as to make utterances like these pleasing to the public. The next step for the Tribune to take will be to bring the entire paper into conformity with these expressed editorial opinions and to register these opinions at the ballot box.

THE twelfth annual report of the United States department of labor is devoted to the "Economic Aspects of the Liquor Problem." Under the head of "Experience and practice of employers relative to the use of intoxicants," Commissioner Carroll D. Wright gives the result of inquiries sent to employers of labor in various parts of the country, the industries represented being agriculture, manufactures, mining and transportation. The replies show that the sober workingman is more and more in demand, and that the chances of the drinking man for getting or keeping a job are correspondingly smaller. Of 7,025 establishments, employing 1,745,923 men, 5,363 employers report that they take into consideration the drinking habits of applicants. In some establishments no one using intoxicating liquors is employed; in others the prohibition applies to certain occupations only, and in still others to employés only when on duty. In all more than one-half the establishments reporting make some requirement of their employés regarding abstinence from strong drink. The concluding question of the schedule sent out by the department is as follows: "What means, in your view, better than those now employed, can be taken by employers, communities, organizations, municipalities and states to lessen the consumption of liquor among the people?" Of 4,914 replies received, 1,103 give prohibition as the best method. Of course the liquor dealers (thirty-two of whom filled schedules) favor more liberal excise laws. Their answers ring the changes on the old familiar cry, "Prohibition does not prohibit." But as long as the liquor sellers go on fighting prohibitory laws, just so long shall we go on believing that they believe as we do—that legal prohibition is the most effective means that can be devised for lessening the consumption of liquor among the people.

Current Events.

The Dawn of Peace.

President McKinley Proclaims War With Spain Ended.

THE formal act of signing the peace protocol was performed at Washington on August 12, by Ambassador Cambon for the government of Spain and by Secretary of State Day for the United States.

The provisions of the protocol are as follows:

1. That Spain will relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba.

2. That Porto Rico and other Spanish islands in the West Indies and an island in the Ladrones, to be selected by the United States, shall be ceded to the latter.

3. That the United States will occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines.

4. That Cuba, Porto Rico, and other Spanish islands in the West Indies shall be immediately evacuated, and that commissioners, to be appointed within ten days, shall, within thirty days from the signing of the protocol, meet at Havana and San Juan, respectively, to arrange and execute the details of the evacuation.

5. That the United States and Spain will each appoint not more than five commissioners to negotiate and conclude a treaty of peace. The commissioners are to meet at Paris not later than October 1.

President McKinley immediately issued a proclamation announcing the cessation of hostilities, and dispatches were sent to the commanders of the army and navy, ordering them to cease operations against the enemy. They were also instructed to notify the Spanish officers of their information, and to say that peace negotiations between the two countries are nearing completion. By the terms of the protocol, the President has ten days in which to appoint commissioners to arrange with the Spanish commissioners for the evacuation of Cuba and Porto Rico, and then the commissioners have twenty days more in which to assemble at Havana and San Juan, to arrange and execute the details of the evacuation.

The blockade of Cuba and Porto Rico is raised, and the vessels are ordered to assemble at Key West. Commodore Watson's instructions to remain at Guantanamo are indicative of the intention of the President to maintain an adequate naval force in Cuban waters to protect American interests.

NOTES.

THE President has appointed Judge J. M. Hobson, father of Lieutenant Hobson, of Merrimac fame, postmaster at Greensboro, Ala. Mr. Hobson is a democrat, and the nomination was made at the earnest request of his republican fellow townsmen as a mark of good feeling.

JUDGE WILLIAM R. DAY, Secretary of State, will resign from that office to become the head of the American Peace Commission. Col. John Hay will accept the office of Secretary of State, and Whitelaw Reid, ex-minister to France, will succeed Colonel Hay as Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

UP to the present time, it is estimated at the Treasury Department, the actual amount paid out in war expenses since the conflict with Spain began is $95,000,000. The average daily expense has been about $800,000. During July it was about $1,000,000 a day. It is believed, however, that when a final accounting is made the cost will foot up $1,500,000 a day for the army and navy.

SECRETARY LONG, in his letter to President McKinley, recommends the promotion of both Sampson and Schley to the grade of Rear Admiral, the highest in the naval service. The other officers whose advancement is recommended are, with two exceptions, all captains of vessels of Sampson's fleet who participated in the fight with Cervera's ships. The exceptions are Lieutenant Commander Richard Wainwright, commander of the auxiliary gunboat Gloucester, and Lieutenant Victor Blue of the auxiliary gunboat Suwanee. Both are recommended for gallant conduct.

THE Secretary of War has directed that ministers of the gospel, of whatever faith duly accredited, will be allowed to minister to the members of their respective churches in the military camps. Before this it could not be done without the permission of the regimental chaplain.

MASTERS RANKIN GOOD and Harry J. Price, of Cincinnati, aged respectively seventeen and nineteen years, who are at the head of the movement to create a boys' and girls' fund for the construction of a new battleship to take the place of the Maine, announce that so far about $35,000 have been contributed. The ship will be called the American Boy.

THE firm of Hasties, solicitors, of London, acting on behalf of Senor du Bosc, late Spanish charge d'affaires at Washington, has addressed a letter to Mr. Chamberlain at the colonial office, saying that their client does not claim any compensation, but desires an apology for the illegality of his expulsion from Canada. Failing to receive a satisfactory reply from the Colonial Secretary, the solicitors say that they will advise Senor du Bosc to sail for Canada within a fortnight, and enforce his right of residence there.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE 155th annual conference of Wesleyan Methodists, held recently at Hull, England, voted favorably on the plan known as the twentieth century fund, to be raised by 1,000,000 Methodists, who shall, between January 1, 1899, and January 1, 1901, give or collect a sum of 1,000,000 guineas. Four treasurers and eight honorary secretaries, with a general secretary, who shall be a minister set apart for the work, together with twenty-five other persons, were constituted the executive committee to carry out the scheme.

Rev. Thomas Champness presented a motion that, in the opinion of the conference, it was not desirable that persons directly interested in the sale of intoxicating liquors should in the future be elected to any official positions in the church. The president appealed to his Brother Champness to withdraw the motion in that session, and to bring it forward in the pastoral session, to which it properly belonged. Mr. Champness submitted that he ought not to be asked to withdraw. The president did not think Mr. Champness' motion was technically out of order, but it was quite clear it was a matter of discipline, and should be dealt with by the pastoral session. He said nothing about the merits of the case, but he asked the conference to signify by vote whether it was expedient and politic at that moment to discuss the motion in that session. The conference decided by a very large vote in the negative. The matter is therefore relegated to the pastoral session.

The temperance report showed that the membership in Bands of Hope was 439,525, an increase of 9,921, and in Methodist temperance societies, 87,389, an increase of 2,463. This by no means represents the strength of the temperance sentiment, as many Methodists are allied with undenominational societies. The evils of betting and gambling were emphasized. On the motion of the temperance secretary, Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts, the conference adopted a memorial to Her Majesty's government, urging them to continue their exertions for the protection of the native races of Africa from the ravages of the liquor traffic.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was elected president of the conference.

Temperance.

Two hundred and fifty-three Chicago saloonkeepers have gone out of business since July 1. In the city collector's office it is figured that 300 or 400 more will drop out before the first of next year.

AT the annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union just closed at Boston, a resolution was adopted thanking General Shafter for the stand he had taken on the use and sale of intoxicating liquors in canteens in the army at Santiago, and for his refusal to permit cargoes of beer from the United States to be landed there. It was voted to hold the next national convention at Chicago on the second Wednesday in August, 1899.

AT a meeting of the provisional committee appointed at Prohibition Park to secure an advisory committee of all national temperance and religious organizations, with a view of securing union of effort on all matters of agreement, the following societies were represented: National Temperance Society, Anti-Saloon League, United Society of Christian Endeavor, Prohibition Party, I. O. G. T., Sons of Temperance, National W. C. T. U., Non-partisan W. C. T. U. The committee organized, and the temporary officers were made permanent.

The following resolutions were adopted and recommended to the organizations forming a part of the advisory committee, and to all other organizations which believe in total abstinence and the suppression of the saloon:

1. It is the sense of this committee that all organizations petition the president, as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, to issue an order against the introduction of distilled, fermented, or malt liquors to be sold or given away in the army and navy. That a similar petition be forwarded to each colonel from the neighborhood in which a regiment was recruited, urging that the canteen be closed, if there is one. If the canteen has already been closed, that a vote of thanks be extended for the courageous stand taken.

2. That an appeal be sent to school trustees in city and country districts, asking them to employ only such teachers as are total abstainers from liquor and tobacco. That the W. C. T. U. and the non-partisan W. C. T. U. be requested to push this work through the Department of Scientific Temperance Instruction.

At Home.

BISMARCK, the capital city of North Dakota, was almost entirely destroyed by fire on August 8. The loss will reach a half million of dollars.

A HANDSOME monument erected to the memory of Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner," was unveiled at Frederick, Md., on August 9.

JAMES B. ANGELL, retiring minister of the United States to Turkey, has informed the state department that he has taken his leave of the sultan, and will depart for home at once. Minister Strauss, who relieves him, announces his purpose of sailing immediately for his post at Constantinople.

About Women.

BARONESS DE HIRSCH has contributed 6,000 rubles to the helpless families who were ruined through the late fire in Sluzk, Russia.

AUGUST 2 the Empress Dowager of China openly relieved the Emperor of all real power. The ministers now take their instructions directly from her.

MRS. BLAKE WATKINS ("Kit"), the correspondent of the Toronto Express, who has been sojourning for some time with the troops at Tampa, Fla., went to Santiago on the United States cruiser, Niagara.

My Barley Loaf.

BY DINNIE MC DOLE HAYES.

THIS little barley loaf of mine,
So wet with tears, so stained with sin,
I bring to Thee, oh, Christ Divine!
Take it thy blessed hands within.

The hungry souls about me crowd;
I am too poor to give them bread;
Unless by heavenly wealth endowed
I shall but offer stones instead.

So, Master, take this gift I bring,
This scanty loaf of barley bread,
And multiply mine offering
Till hungry thousands shall be fed.

The Mission of a Dandelion.

BY ROSE WILLIS JOHNSON.

CLIFF MANNERS was a man to whom other men instinctively yielded precedence in passing, at whom children glanced wistfully and turned away disappointed. He possessed a tall, gaunt figure, majestic even with its stoop, clear-cut features, and mouth and eyes indicative of what might have been, but was not, a generous soul. Some early, misplaced confidence, some buried romance, had turned him from the world of men to the world of mind. He was a recluse, and thought himself a misanthrope.

His home stood back from the street, behind two gloomy cedars, and was of stone, green with mold and lichen. The only cheerful thing there was the maligned and persecuted English sparrow, who, plump and secure, lorded it over the domain. Here, in an upper room, among his books, Mr. Manners dreamed away the hours. Below him the tide of life ebbed and flowed unnoticed. The organ-grinder dispensed cheap melody, the street-hawker cried his wares. Students went to and from college, bootblacks hurled confidential remarks to each other across the square, gay and careworn faces replaced each other. The scholar took no interest in such things.

But one day a bomb-shell exploded in that quiet room—a bomb-shell conveyed in a yellow envelope. It was from his lawyer, informing him a forgotten sister had died down in Kentucky, leaving him the guardianship of her child. He had not been so disturbed for years. Duty was duty—this niece had a claim upon him. But then a child—and a girl! He ran his fingers through the thin brown locks and meditated.

After a mental conflict he answered the letter, sending for the orphan. She arrived at the end of the following week—such a mite of a girl, in such a tent of a hat! Mr. Manners knelt down on the flags to look into her face.

"So you are Helen's girl! What is your name, my dear?"

"Snowball!" faltered the child. "Oh—I mean Helen, please! Mamma called me 'Snowball.'" And then, without warning, two tears slipped from the frightened eyes and rolled harmlessly away. Very pretty eyes, Mr. Manners decided, with their baby-blue, looking from a face of waxy fairness. His naturally gentle mouth relaxed its harsh lines.

"Very well—'Snowball' it is! Don't cry! I suppose"—doubtfully—"you are sickly!"

"Oh, no!" gaining confidence, "only stunted! May I call you 'Uncle Cliff'?"

Mr. Manners nodded. "Very curious, after all these years! Yes—certainly, I am Uncle Cliff! Come in, my dear! Here, Andrews, is the child. I presume you have prepared for her?"

Mrs. Andrews, servant, mistress, tossed her head haughtily. "Oh, ay sir, the back room do be fixed—Miss can come in, sir!"

Mr. Manners deprecatingly led the little one into the living room and left her to her bread and milk. The touch of the small fingers had already warmed his heart.

It was early autumn and a fire had been kindled in his room. He sat there pensively, his book forgotten, while the twilight slipped down, and the old cedar tapped against the window.

There was another sound—a frightened sound which repeated itself, and stopped, abashed. The child was at the door in her gown, her bare feet like tiny snowdrifts on the floor.

"Come!" he said, smiling, holding out his hand. "What is it, Snowball?"

She hesitated, then crept wistfully into his arms. "There isn't anybody to hear me say my prayers," she faltered, watching his face for signs of displeasure. "I 'membered you was my uncle."

He lifted her silently to his knees. It had been a long time since he had thought of prayer or of God, save as the Great First Cause.

"I will hear you!" he said, bending till the brown and flaxen mingled. She put up her hands—such little hands for an eight-year-old—and repeated the "Now I lay me." Then the curly head nestled down. "Mamma always rocked me to sleep," she explained, and Uncle Cliff, albeit a bachelor and misanthrope, demurred not. When the restorer had taken charge, he carried her to her room, and folding the blanket about her, kissed her for the mother who could not.

After this, Snowball, in all simplicity, gave him that absent mother's place. She was a quiet little thing—so quiet her presence was almost forgotten. She fell into the ways of the house, taking many steps for Andrews, whose stern visage gradually relaxed. So, although lonely, life promised to be comfortable for the orphan.

At first there were the passersby to interest her. She liked to sit on the gatepost and watch the street scenes. Many turned for a second look at the child whose fairness had won her the fanciful name of "Snowball." When she discovered she, in turn, was noticed, shyness drove her to the cedars, finally to the house.

In the silence there, more and more memory reverted to the farm. She knew by the shade trees her own dear maples were golden, the oaks blood red. Leaves were lying knee deep in the hollows, the wild grapes were purple, the golden-rod climbing the hill! By imperceptible degrees homesickness stole upon her. She could not look at an apple stall without seeing orchards breaking under red fruit. The frosty morning air brought odors of persimmon and paw-paw—dreams of nutting time! She did not understand nor combat the dreadful malady, but loved to creep into secluded corners and sit staring at nothing. More and more worthy of her name she grew. Andrews, watching her, shook her head dolefully.

"It's there," she muttered, "the King's mark! The angel will see and honor it! I've seen it too often—it's there!"

A noisy child forces itself into notice. Not so Snowball. Uncle Cliff relapsed into his books and forgot her. As her guardian, he looked after her property, the Kentucky farm, scrupulously supplied her needs, and never dreamed she was ailing or unhappy.

In the spring new longings reinforced the old. One morning, as Mr. Manners sat at his desk, a white vision, with shining eyes, confronted him. It was his fancy to follow the suggestion of her name—to clothe her in white. This morning, with the sunshine making her hair silvery in its fairness, the total absence of color struck him unpleasantly. How very ethereal—unchildlike—she looked!

"Oh, Uncle Cliff!" she said, taking the book from his hands in her excitement, "do come with me! I've found something—you'll be so glad!"

She danced down the stairs, he following with slower step. Holding to his hand, she got him beyond the cedars, where she dropped down on the walk.

"There!" she cried exultantly. "There!"

He looked about in bewilderment—there was nothing! Only the broken stones, the fence, the street, the blue above and the obstreperous sparrows.

"Where?" he queried. "What?"

"There!" pointing to his feet. "Isn't it glorious?"

There—yes, a stunted, starved weed, a dandelion, lifting its homesick face to a stray sunbeam. She could not mean that. He lifted his foot to crush it, but did not.

She did mean it, however. She had spread her arms about it protectingly. With a sudden cry of desperate longing she laid her face down, her form convulsed.

"Snowball!" he cried, in blank amazement. "Snowball!" But she had forgotten him.

"Mother!" she gasped, struggling. "Mother! home! Oh, the yellow dandelions on the slope—they're there!"

The significance of the scene came to him in a flash. He lifted her forcibly and took her in. After that one outburst she was quiet, and lay submissively in his arms, a stray sunbeam wandering over her hair and dress.

"Snowball," he said, at last, "why didn't you tell me you were unhappy? Should you like to go home? We can board."

She raised her face. "Can we?" she asked. "Did you say we could go home?"

That night he wrote to the tenant in possession, and began preparation for departure. He would rather face a cannon than that look in her eyes again! Then they were there. The hush of the forest was about them. Truly the dandelions were there, with all wild things in lavish plenty, a world of flowers!

Snowball was happy. Mother was gone—but it is easy to cheat reality—to make believe! Even when they went to the graves all was so peaceful she had no tears to shed. Her parents had but gone home, and the "sweet fields beyond the swelling flood" seemed not very far away.

They spent whole days in the fields and woods. Snowball taught him to distinguish the bird-calls, to know the haunts of the squirrel. They fished, and rowed on the river, and at twilight he heard the trustful "Now I lay me," and rocked his girl to sleep. It was a summer of dreams, which marked an epoch in the soul that had loved books more than men.

The last afternoon of their stay they climbed the slope of Cemetery Hill, and sat down between the graves. It was a peaceful spot, lying in afternoon shadow. No costly marbles were there. Most of the graves were marked by wooden crosses, many were decorated with shells, mutilated toys, broken tumblers holding shriveled offerings. There were gracious quantities of blossoming plants, and butterflies flitted everywhere, while the drone of bees made the warmth somnolent. Uncle Cliff stretched himself at Snowball's feet, watching her weave her clover-garlands.

"And to-morrow we must give it up!" she said, with a sigh. "We have had a happy time, have we not, Uncle Cliff? It has had but one sadness. I have thought so much of the folks that can't ever have good times! There are hundreds of children, like me, longing to be in the glorious woods — and they can't!"

Her little face was wistful, her eyes fixed on the horizon, as if she saw beyond it the crowded quarters of the poor, where the "hundreds of children" languished. The blue eyes came back to him.

"It's a pity, isn't it?" she questioned.

"Yes," he nodded. "It can't be helped, though."

"No," she sighed, "it can't be helped! But I wish—oh, Uncle Cliff, I wish it could!"

They went back next day to town, and the beloved volumes once more claimed him. Not to the exclusion of Snowball, however. He fell to watching her narrowly. He had said "Nonsense!" to Andrews' warning long ago, but before the spring winds blew he saw there was no nonsense in the hectic flush, the failing strength. Ere he was fully aware of danger, the little white hearse went glimmering through the streets to his door, and Snowball went—home.

After that the house was intolerable. He had not known how much space a child occupies in a life! Outside, the sky was blue, and the obstreperous sparrow darted about. He took his hat, intending to seek the street. But half-way down the path something arrested him. A gleam of yellow—Snowball's dandelion, stunted and homesick as ever, its life half crushed out by the pitiful steps of yesterday.

Tears came to the man's eyes. Like Snowball he put a protecting hand about it. It was a magician's wand, resurrecting the past. He pried up the stones to give it room, pruned the cedar's twigs and returned to the house.

The next day he went forth, resolution in his face. The dandelion had accomplished its mission—even a weed may have part in the divine economy—and was sending up silver balls, preparatory to departure.

The farm was his now. He would make of it a monument to the gentle disciple who had mourned because there were "hundreds of children" shut away from nature's largess. It was not long before a tall, stooping man, in somewhat shabby black, was a familiar figure in the squalid quarters of the poor.

The tall, stooping figure goes about unostentatiously, doing such simple deeds of love and charity as "smell sweet, and blossom in the dust." Scarcely a week passes but some work-worn woman, some drooping child, goes to taste the goodness of God without money and without price, to revel in the sunshine of Snowball's home.

They find there a little mound, seemingly a neglected spot, for in its season it is overrun by a rank growth of dandelion. But they know who sleeps there so peacefully, and give her a gentle thought as they pluck the blossoms, or blow the airy seed-balls to see what time it is, or which way the cows went.

Household Cooking and Intemperance.

BY CHARLOTTE PERKINS STETSON.

HUMAN beings are too closely interrelated for any heavy blame ever to fall on one alone, or on one class alone. The forces of heredity and environment make it impossible for it ever to be found that a generation of bad men coexist with a generation of good women, or vice versa. Specific forms of evil vary with sex, social condition, opportunity in general; but the defective character that allows the evil will be found under all the varied expression.

The external expression of this weakness of character with which we are most familiar is that of overindulgence in strong drink. This vice is far more common among men than among women, especially in this country, and therefore it is quite natural to see the women of our land array themselves against it. It is also natural that, without analysis or study, they should attack the evil at the nearest point, and then slowly learn to recognize one step behind in the chain of forces and attack that.

The first effort of temperance reform is to make men stop drinking. The next is to make men stop selling drink. This is quite the attitude of the average mother, whose general line of discipline is to tell the child to stop what he is doing, rather than to ascertain why he does it and induce him to do other things instead. The unusual mother studies character and condition, and seeks to modify behavior constructively instead of by opposition.

Without pretending to make an exhaustive study of the causes of intemperance, or all the proper lines of attack, one particular factor in the problem is suggested here. On previous lines of work women have tried to stop men from drinking and to stop men from selling. In both cases the effort was preventive, and directed against men. The suggestions offered here are constructive and in the line of woman's own work. This will leave out all the heaviest obstacles to previous efforts—the opposition of the drinker and the seller, personally and legally, and give free play to all the moral superiority of our women.

Intemperance in the individual rests mainly on two immediate causes—the desire for stimulants and lack of self-control. This is not excluding other contributory causes—the varied pressure brought to bear by the dealer, the instinct of good fellowship, the need of amusement and society—but merely to instance two undoubted causes which are well within range of woman's power. One branch of this subject has been treated before now, the connection between poor and insufficient food and the desire for stimulus, but very little impression has been made. The other side is less familiar and will perhaps seem at first quite cruel in its implications, but it is well worth studying; namely, the connection between what is called the "unselfish devotion" of the household cook and our general lack of control over our appetites.

The beneficent labor of feeding the world has been a function of motherhood from the beginning, and in all the details of modern development is still mainly in the hands of women. The lady, the "loaf-giver," is still the last authority as to what her household shall eat, and the vast majority of our wives and mothers not only choose but prepare the family food. As purchaser and preparer she is mainly responsible for what the world eats. Some will say here that the man is responsible in the first instance, that she has to provide what he demands. This is true only where women are ignorant of or indifferent to their high office, for surely if a woman knew that such and such food was injurious to her family, no power could compel her to give it them. No, the responsibility for the feeding of mankind rests mainly upon women, and in two ways they err in this duty.

One is negatively in failing to study their business. Few, indeed, are the women who know the nutritive values of foods, the needs of the human system, or the methods of cooking best adapted to bring out the full value of different materials. The "practical housewife" will probably scorn this position. She will point with pride to the irrefutable fact that people have always lived on what their women cooked for them, and when you suggest in return that sickness has always been common among us and that an enormous proportion of that sickness is traceble to the stomach, the practical housewife vaguely intimates that people ought to have better stomachs—the cooking is all right. The more intelligent but also practical woman of today will answer, "I grant your premises; we don't know much of physiology and hygiene, food values and nutritive needs, but, bless you! if I knew it all and made everything scientifically correct, John wouldn't eat it, nor the children. John will have his meat done to suit him; he will drink strong coffee; he will eat too much pudding, says it's so good he can't help it, and the children, too; why, if I don't have buckwheat cakes every other day in winter, there is an outcry. It is all very well for you to theorize about nutrition, but I have to cater to individual tastes and appetites." Exactly. The wife and mother of the world, the feeder of the world, she who should strengthen, purify and upbuild, devotes her energies to the constant study and service of individual tastes and appetites, and then grieves in vain when those tastes and appetites get beyond control and lure their helpless servants to destruction.

The woman, as caterer to personal desires, constantly strengthens those desires, and weakens the self-control which should rule over them. The man who "will have" things to eat that are not good for him will also be likely to take things to drink that are not good for him. For John and Fannie and Susie and Bob and Kate to eat too much pudding because it is so good is simply intemperance. The flattered mother smiles when they praise her cooking and has no thought of her deeper responsibility. Here speaks again some conscientious mother: "But we are not all like that. I never allow my children to eat a mouthful more than I think is good for them, and we never have rich puddings." Restriction and denial do not develop self-control. The power to know what is good and choose it of one's own will, the power to know what is bad and refuse it of one's own will; this is what the world needs, and this is what our home cooks do not cultivate in those they so love and long to serve. We need a thorough revision of our system of feeding mankind. A more important work can hardly be attempted than this body building which is so largely soul-building as well. We need years of study and practice from those who are to undertake it, and the intelligent coöperation of all of us to help toward a better state.

First, it must be recognized that the improvement cannot come through the private home. It is absurd to expect our thirty million women to become highly specialized trained cooks, and more absurd to expect them as individual housewives to force their superior views on those "tastes and appetites" they are set to serve. What we need is a new development in the art and science of cooking, its careful study and conscientious practice by those best fitted to follow the profession, and the appreciative patronage of the others. That is our line of advance.

To give a concrete instance let us suppose that one woman in a small country town becomes impressed with the fact that the standard of bread-making in her neighborhood is very low. She does not console and satisfy herself with the fact that her bread is good, she admits calmly that "our bread" is bad. And recognizing the making of good bread as a thoroughly womanly occupation, she determines to become as good a bread-maker as it is possible to be. She studies, she practices, she secures the patronage of her friends and neighbors, she works up a bakery which becomes a model to the surrounding country and provides all the households in her vicinity with healthgiving, perfect bread. With such bread in every household the individual tastes and appetites of John and the children might waver among varieties of excellence, but could not choose what was bad for them. And from daily contact with what was good they would develop a correct taste in foods, as we do in art and music. Our ignorant and perverted tastes, our gormandizing habits, have no check in the household except the personal authority of the housewife, but a whole town provided with right and proper food would learn what was good by unconscious association.

The point especially offered for consideration here is this: That one cause of intemperance is insufficient and improper food, and another is highly-developed personal appetites, often beyond self-control. The first evil may be somewhat alleviated by private effort, but not to any high degree. With all the training possible the individual housewife is often unable to procure or prepare such food as her family needs. The second can not be successfully opposed privately. It is the very fact of the devoted service of the wife and mother to the feeding of her family which more than anything else concentrates their attention on all their petty likes and dislikes and makes them long for "mother's cooking" as a drunkard for his dram. Not because it is any better cooking or any more good for them, but because "they like it," because it caters to their special personal desires.

The stomach of any animal is modified to its food supply, developed in accordance with necessity. Provide for the human stomach only good food—nothing else from birth—and the whole organism would respond to it. It is not a question of feeding "my family," it is a question of feeding the world. It is an obligation that lies in the hands of women, and that calls for all the noblest efforts of the reformer and philanthropist. To labor that the world may be rightly fed, made pure and wholesome and sound and strong—such labor will go far to promote temperance.

Alcoholic Stupor the Cause of Crimes.

BY DR. T. D. CROTHERS.

RECENT studies make clear the fact that crime in all persons who drink comes largely from the numbing or anæsthetic effects of alcohol. Thus alcohol prepares the ground for crime and makes it possible for the man or woman to do wrong. This comes from the dulling and stupefying action on the higher brain. The man or woman using alcohol is less honest, less moral, less truthful and altogether lowered in every way. The senses are dulled with every glass of spirits. They can not see, hear, feel or think as quickly or accurately.

This may not be apparent at first, yet it can be measured by instruments of precision, and later it will appear in slight changes which grow as silently as the twilight until it finally deepens into the full night. This is a literal tearing down of all the brain and body, making it unfit and incapable of living a natural, normal life, destroying the power and capacity to deal justly and honestly with others. The ethical brain, or that part which deals and decides on questions of right and wrong, and duty and obligation to others, is depressed, dulled and made stupid. The coarser animal brain may go on with but little apparent change and yet the damage to the higher brain be very severe.

Recently a popular clergyman was disgraced and turned out of the pulpit for using church funds in speculation. It appeared that he was a moderate drinker, using wine and spirits every day, never to intoxication, or to be noticed in his public duties. Yet he was constantly numbing his higher moral brain, destroying his sense of duty and obligation to others. His crime was due to alcohol alone, and had he been an abstainer he would have realized the nature of such acts, and shrunk from them.

A man occupying a very prominent place in society, with wealth and a family and church connections, began to use spirits in moderation. He claimed it was essential for his health and required in his business. Ten years later he still drank in moderation daily; his business relations were broken up, and he kept a mistress and his reputation was seriously impaired. From the time he began to use spirits daily his downfall began. It was the anæsthesia from alcohol on his higher brain that destroyed his power to correctly judge of duty and right. This came on so gradually as to be unobserved at the time. This man is prepared for crime, he only needs special temptation to become almost any kind of a low criminal.

Few people realize that the poison of alcohol in moderation or excess falls most heavily on the higher moral brain. A fit of intoxication is like a blow, a concussion from which it is very doubtful if full recovery follows. The fine sense of honor and high ethical moral conceptions are injured, a change has taken place, which is increased by every glass of spirits.

The continuous use of spirits permits no recovery to follow, the anæsthesia and depressing effects grow and deepen and all power to judge of higher claims of life becomes feebler. Criminality may not appear, but the conditions are favorable; the soil is prepared and only awaits a favorable opportunity to break out into criminal acts. This fact is recognized in part by many great corporations, who refuse to trust moderate drinkers in places of trust, thus acknowledging their moral weakness and inability to bear temptations. Thus in many ways the stupor, or rather the numbing action of alcohol leads up to crime with absolute certainty. Crime not noted always in the court rooms, but crime in the family, in society, in business, criminal acts in the every day's association of men and women, in the church, and school and everywhere. Every reader will recall instances, and every year's experience brings out the fact with greater prominence.

A very prominent case which has disturbed a wide circle of friends and agitated public opinion is now on trial. A man of great repute and wealth has become a forger, a thief, and committed arson. For years he has used spirits moderately at home, and has gradually become more miserly, dishonest and untruthful. His social relations are doubtful, and finally he is detected in many flagrant crimes, which he denies. His previous good character and the date of his evil conduct from the time of using spirits is a complete chain of cause and effect. This is another illustration of the action of alcohol on the higher brain, predisposing to crime.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

IT is impossible to describe the spiritual uplift which comes to tired, restless hearts in Willard Hall. Nor can we tell at length of the strong, earnest words of the speakers. Mrs. Frances Joseph, president of the Frances E. Willard union, of Louisiana (colored), in a tender, womanly way, told of prison work in her native city. Mrs. Barrett, of Washington, D. C., made a powerful appeal for four thousand erring girls, of whom more than sixty per cent are reclaimed, and for the vast number of boys and girls sent out into the world unprotected.

. . . . . .

The lesson of the houses built on rock and sand brought out with force the question, Brother, what are you building on? Of the thirty-five thousand young men going down every year in Chicago, will you be one? A father, an old man, says, "Pray for my boy, he is now under conviction." A mother says, "Pray for my fatherless boy, I am so frail." Prayer is asked for one on the verge of the grave. And a wife begs that we remember her husband who was a good father but is ruined by drink. "I can not find my four boys," cried an aged mother; "they stood at the grave of their father and promised not to drink; ask God to help me find them." "My daughter is hiding in this great city; ask God to show us where she is," writes another broken-hearted mother.

. . . . . .

When President McKinley called on the nation to offer thanks to God for naval and military victories, it seemed fitting that such prayer should be offered in Willard Hall which is dedicated to the memory of her whose dying words thrilled through our hearts, "Tell the women that our religion is a religion of patriotism!" The grand "Battle Hymn of the Republic" was rendered by a thrilling bass voice, while the audience made the hall ring with the chorus, after which prayer was offered. "O Lord of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee."

The National executive committee, led by our acting president, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, joined us one day in a blessed service. The words of encouragement from states east and west, north and south, voiced by these their representatives, showed that the white ribbon binds our heart in a close and tender tie.

More Good News From Japan.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—With an unbroken journey of 250 miles before us to-day, we are slowly wending our way toward the capital city on our return from the pilgrimage upon which we started in April. It is the longest and most successful trip we have yet made. Full houses have greeted us everywhere, sometimes the aisles being completely filled with men who stood through the whole service and applauded every patriotic utterance. At Osaka, the second city in the Empire, where we held five meetings, we were invited to return and hold five more. As a result, three societies were formed, and "still there's more to follow," we hear.

Two of these were in the Presbyterian and Congregational girls' schools. One hundred and four Y's put on the white ribbon the last day we were there, and we telegraphed Mrs. Yajima the good news. There was great rejoicing. The foreign teachers, Misses Case and Colby, Haworth and Settlemeyer, warmly seconded the movement. Societies were also organized in the Kyoto and Kanazawa girls' schools, the latter place forming an L. T. L., too. Mrs. Naylor and Misses Porter and Shaw gave most cordial cooperation here. At Kyoto, the needed help was given by Miss Hayashi, a clever Japanese teacher. Altogether, twelve societies have been formed since the convention, Miss Russell, of Nagasaki, reporting two. This means between three and four hundred "new women."

During the trip we visited all the unions previously organized along the line, finding them more earnest than ever and with a much larger membership list which was still augmented by the recent meetings. In the schools we found the girls all wearing their white ribbons and singing songs from the Y song book, a copy of which, through the kindness of Mrs. J. E. C. Higbee of Marquette, Mich., I had been able to send them. Kobe College girls had the Y pin, also. You will remember that this was the first Y. The sympathy that was given me a year and a half ago by Miss Susan A. Searle, who is at the head of this school, has been one of my greatest inspirations for work in Japan. In Nagoya we visited a regular meeting of the society in Misses Houston and Moore's school, where all the exercises were in English. It seemed so much like home. How I did wish Mrs. Barnes and all the rest of you could have been there! In the school in charge of Misses Bender and Russell in this same city, every girl "belongs." Miss Mitani now has nine hundred loyal helpers! Shall we not have the thousand for which we have asked? My faith is very great. Indeed, as I review to-day the work and victories of the past few weeks, I stand upon the mountain tops of joy and hope. There is such an unmistakable increase of interest in the International temperance movement.

Not long ago, a most scholarly missionary gentleman, more than twenty years on the field, said: "I am thoroughly converted to a belief in organized temperance effort for Japan. Anything that will set the Japanese to work as the W. C. T. U. has done." This is the sequel to an unwritten story. Many of our finest men thought the time had not come for organized work.

Another gentleman, twenty-five years on the field, in speaking of the favorable turn toward Christianity, said: "And there is nothing that has done more to bring this about than the general agitation of the temperance question." Perhaps I could give you no better proof, in verification of the last statement, than this: The foreign W. C. T. U. issued a call for several hundred dollars for the Rescue Home two months ago, and to-day have in hand the amount for which they asked.

How she will rejoice, is always my first thought when I hear these things! Oh, isn't it blessed to believe that Miss Willard does know and understand?

"To live in hearts we leave behind
Is not to die."

The Japanese "Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard" appeared almost simultaneously with the English edition. The leaders here thought it wise to get it out at once instead of waiting for Miss Gordon's book, so we selected from her autobiography, making up the last chapters from our knowledge of her later achievements and from the world's estimate of her as outlined in THE UNION SIGNAL and countless other periodicals. It contains a full page half-tone. All Christian magazines and some non-Christian, contained pictures, too, and I was besieged for material for sketches. Those who have read the book are much pleased with it, I am told.

"Do Everything" will appear in August. This I have tried to adapt to Japan. It will include a history of the work in this country, written by Mrs. Yajima.

This cheering message comes just at this moment from Miss Hewitt, of Hirosaki: "We have organized our Y and have thirty members which we hope to make fifty." Isn't it splendid? This is the seventeenth Y. Last autumn we organized a large W. C. T. U. at Hirosaki, and now the girls want to help make Japan free. I have also just heard that Miss Belle Allen, of Tokio, has organized her tenth L. T. L., which puts more than a thousand children under this instruction in her district alone. It is a marvelous work for Japan.

So many more things my pen would tell, but I must leave them for another time. The editors have made me very happy by saying that you want to hear from Japan oftener, so I will write again soon.

In the same beautiful service, even the service of Christ,

I am yours faithfully,
CLARA PARRISH.

Bay View Assembly.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Bay View is crowded this summer with those who joyfully flock to this charming resort. Its location is on a horseshoe-shaped peninsula, and around this the cottages cluster, five hundred in number, and cling to the terraces above.

The university buildings in the park are fine, and always before one is the panorama of water, blue and foam crested, with shores rising in undulating ascent across the bay into the shadow of pine scented forests.

The W. C. T. U. Institute has been a great success, and has had its usual inspiration in its breezy leader, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds.

There have been sallies of wit and wisdom and intellectual exchange of thought, which will be very helpful to the country woman who goes back to her discouraging local union with a new outlook and an uplift in her work.

The worker in the city unions has little conception of the moral force it takes to stand unflinchingly by the small local union, and when Mrs. Barnes, of Petoskey, said that in some places the union was unpopular, she spoke a fact well known to the unions who struggle against the powers that be in the outlying country districts.

Mrs Leonora M. Lake, vice-president Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, gave a strong address in the auditorium, on the "Worth of the Wage Worker."

Mrs. Eldridge conducted her Bible lessons each morning as a spiritual force to set the day on a high pedestal of consecration.

The programme was carried out conscientiously. Mrs. Rounds wanted to detach all personal inferences from the discussions, and give the broader tone of the woman who works not for herself and her family only, but for all homes and all families. "I haven't any young children," a woman remarked to Mrs. Treat, the leader in the kindergarten class for mothers, the other morning. "If I had, I should attend your lectures."

"But," said Mrs. Treat, "there are so many other women's children to learn something for."

"Oh, yes," she responded, "I may have grandchildren some day."

She could not get beyond the outlook for herself and her own. She did not wear a white ribbon.

"Temperance Education in the Schools," the "Cigarette Laws," "Hygiene in the Home," 'Social Science," "The Psychology of Crime," "Who is My Neighbor," "Evangelistic and Police Matron Work in Prisons," "The Economy and Humanity of Prevention," show the breadth and scope of the subjects discussed.

Nothing aroused more interest than the lectures by Mrs. Jane M. Kinney, who has charge of the prison reform work in Michigan, and who, like Mrs. Maude Ballington Booth, who has been here speaking to an audience of thousands, is thoroughly alive to her work and its significance.

The discussions after the papers were the most interesting features of the meetings, and when everybody wanted to talk, only a presiding officer like ours could have controlled the meeting, effervescing with thoughts that were resolved on utterance.

"I have had many states represented in our meetings," said Mrs. Rounds, "Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Missouri, Texas, and I have had the brainiest women at Bay View. This has been one of our most successful meetings, and I am more in love with Bay View than ever."

Mrs. Caroline Grow, business manager of THE UNION SIGNAL, a woman of unquestionable ability, represented the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

From the first reception when the W. C. T. U. graciously greeted guests in Evelyn Hall, to the consecration meeting at its close, there was uninterrupted interest and crowded meetings.

Mrs. Rounds received a vote of thanks and a unanimous vote for re-election to the same position next year, to which she responded most feelingly and fittingly.

Dr. Winship, editor of the Journal of Education, Boston, has been here telling us so many good things on educational and child culture work that parents and teachers are delighted.

Dr. Parks Cadman, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, New York, has been telling us of his church work at Seventh avenue and Fourteenth street. He represents the forward movement and applied Christianity and scores the sleepy, apathetic churches, and the exclusive, fashionable churches with empty seats, for their lazy methods, for not keeping their doors open every day and night in the week, and not getting down and out to the people—Christ's people. His congregation is seventy-five per cent men—a change in the usual order of things. Mr. Jacob A. Riis, of New York, has delivered a series of lectures on the slums of New York, their threat to society, and the record of the battle for Christ and humanity there. He has a most striking personality, and believes that the kindergarten and the improved tenement are the solution of the problem.

Dr. George L. Robinson, of M'Cormick Theological Seminary, has charge of the Bible classes which are free to all. He lived in Palestine for years, and illustrates everything from this standpoint.

Prof. M. Louise Jones, of Emporia, Kas., state normal school, gives the lectures on English, and they are crowded. Her criticisms are most original and thoroughly psychological, and from the standpoint of the idealist, the poetic and artistic, she evolves her lessons and presents them in a striking manner to her audiences.

Madame Alberti, of New York, has charge of the physical culture classes, a most charming exponent of her theories of grace and beauty, with a strong, personal magnetism that reveals the underlying beauty of character.

The Bay View Reading Circle is replete with interesting programs; the Woman's Council, also, and the only danger is satiety of good things.

Mr. John M. Hall, who originated the assembly, and stands at the head of it, may well feel proud of what he has accomplished. He is most cordial and kind to every one, most painstaking for the pleasure of every one, and Bay View is not only idyllic in beauty as a summer resort, where the weary brain worker may rest and row and fish, but is an intellectual and spiritual stimulant and inspiration to the man or woman who believes with Bishop Vincent, that a change of work is rest.

EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

Bay View, Mich., August 4.

From the Pacific Slope.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The government is responding generously to the pleas of the suffering Cubans, but is it as graciously acceding to the pleas of the women of America, who have given their sons to its support?

The question is as readily answered as asked and unfortunately it must be answered in the negative since the government allows saloons to be erected close upon and even within the borders of the encamped armies and permits people of evil design to pass among the camps.

If there is a law by which these young soldier men and boys can be regulated to certain lines, there should also be a law by which saloon men and evil people in general should be regulated to certain positions, very far distant from the encampments.

The soldiers are comparatively in care of the government and the government should not only provide rules regarding proper outfits of clothing for them, but should also give orders regarding offering soldiers intoxicating drinks, as has often been done, with a false show of patriotism, and opening saloons close about them. The touching records furnished by the United States post-office and the express office erected at Camp Merritt, San Francisco, prove of what admirable material the soldier body is composed.

Since the erection of these offices eleven thousand dollars have been paid out to the soldiers and of this amount more than one-half has been sent to their distant homes. Upon receiving their pay, the soldiers spent but little more time than necessary for composing letters before appearing at these offices for money orders and notes. These were, in nearly every instance, made out to the mothers and sisters of the soldiers. Such young men are an honor and safeguard to the country and the country should return them to their homes as honorable and unsullied as they are received.

What havoc drink can bring about among the soldiers was sadly illustrated a few days ago by the death of Private Joseph Phelps, a very intelligent and willing volunteer. While out on leave of absence, he became drunk, and on his reckless way back to camp fired among the horses of the Utah company, causing considerable consternation. The young man was arrested, and sentenced to be court-martialed. When he realized his disgrace, he became morose, brooding continually upon the position he had suddenly been placed in, and when alone, he fired a shot from his revolver through his heart.

Faithful as ever to their duty are the women of this state. Nothing is forgotten or overlooked, one woman in particular remaining to serve from early dawn till dark. This woman is Captain Sarah Fry, the beloved and efficient worker of the Salvation Army, in whose peaceful tent, pitched among the tents of the other army, religious services are almost continually held, and from which fervent invocations arise for the soldiers.

To her many mothers may well be thankful, for no soldier is forgotten in her prayers or in the many ministrations directed by her.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them, for the Lord, thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee nor forsake thee. He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.—Deut. 31:6; Heb. 13:6.

LETTERS keep pouring in from all parts of the country, both from men and women, urging us to go steadily forward to raise the $300,000 to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds. The following extract is from a letter written by the president of a union in Connecticut. She says: "I am sure the dear Lord will help us to go on. . . . May the white-ribboners throughout the world be aroused as never before to work for the House Beautiful."

Another from Wisconsin says: "We cannot believe God will let the cause of temperance sustain such a defeat as the loss of the Temple would be. Oh, it must not be! We are all praying God will interpose and save it." Another from Illinois writes: "After Miss Willard consecrated herself so unreservedly to the great moral obligation of paying off the Temple Trust Bonds, we must not take a backward step."

The president of the Temple Trustees was invited by the four local unions of Evanston, Ill., to speak on the Temple at the residence of Mrs. E. A. Hatfield, on August 4. At the close of her address the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That a vote of thanks be tendered Mrs. Carse, and that we, the members of the Evanston Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, express our confidence in the Temple enterprise, and that we will aid Mrs. Carse in securing the ownership of the Temple. Be it also

Resolved, That in accordance with the request of the Temple Trustees, each member of the W. C. T. U. contribute $1 toward the payment of the debt.

The following resolution was unanimously passed, August 1, by the W. C. T. U. of Milwaukee, Wis.:

Resolved, That we cannot endure the thought of losing our beloved Temperance Temple, and in the words of our dear Miss Willard, pledge ourselves to stand by the Temple.

At a regular meeting of the South New York W. C. T. U., New York city, the following resolution was adopted:

We extend to Mrs. Carse the love and sympathy of the South New York W. C. T. U. in the great work she has so nobly championed amid such an aggregation of obstacles and discouragements. . . . The spirit of the Crusade should now be revived, and the rank and file do and dare as of old.

We have received a letter from a union in a western state, asking that the money they sent to the Temple be returned to them. We say to all as we have said to the above union, the Temple trustees are going right on with the work for which they were incorporated and they can not return any money that has been sent to them for the purpose of the Temple.

✠

On July 15, Mrs. Emily H. Billingsley, of Statesville, N. C., called at the office and presented the Temple with a $100 Temple Trust Bond, the second one she has given. She wrote: "I have unswerving faith in your noble efforts for the 'House Beautiful,' feeling sure God will bless all efforts to this end. We must never weary in well doing till the last dollar is paid and our departed Chieftain's last earthly labors for the Temple are crowned with success."

✠

The Chicago Young People's Christian Temperance Union, of which Miss Eva M. Shontz is president, is deserving of the gratitude of all white-ribboners for their championship of the Temple, and their efforts to raise a fund of $100,000 for it. They are getting up all kinds of plans for the accomplishment of this end. Their chain letter is doubling itself each succeeding day and promises to bring in a goodly sum. We hope each union will start a chain; we have sent a copy to each.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw.

Our Children.

At School and at Home.

MY teacher doesn't think I read
So very special well.
She's always saying: "What was that
Last word?" and makes me spell
And then pronounce it after her,
As slow as slow can be.
"You'd better take a little care,"—
That's what she says to me,—
"Or else I'm really 'fraid you'll find,
Some one of these bright days,
You're way behind the primer class."
That's what my teacher says.

But when I'm at my grandpa's house,
He hands me out a book,
And lets me choose a place to read;
And then he'll sit and look
At me, and listen, just as pleased!
I know it from his face.
And when I read a great, long word,
He'll say, "Why, little Grace,
You'll have to teach our deestrict school,
Some one o' these bright days!
Mother, you come and hear this child."
That's what my grandpa says.

"Dem Girl" Debaters.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

IF any of our readers think that the defeat of "Willie's Amendment," seeking to prove "that tobacco does good," was a damper on the children in their effort to prove the benefit of liquor, he is greatly mistaken.

"They can't answer this, my boy," said Mr. Swenson, as he gave Willie some incidents intended to establish the value of liquor as a medicine.

"Oh, you don't know them girls, fader; they can 'splain away everything you can tell about liquor curing 'zease. You orter hear 'em. It's hard to study when they's recitin', it's so interestin'."

"Why, what do they say?" asked the father, with a show of genuine interest, while the hired man and mother also wanted to know.

"Oh, I can't say it, but"—"no, nor they either," interrupted Mr. Swenson, a little doggedly.

"Yes, they can, too," replied Willie, quite as stubbornly, "and if you's there to-morrow morning, when we're going to tell, you'd see. You bet I don't stand up for liquor 'fore them girls, and get knocked all to pieces the way I did on tobacco."

The next morning, to the surprise of every one, Mr. Swenson was present at the school. It happened thus: Mr. S— was the director, and had suddenly bethought himself of "some repairs" Miss Reed had written about more than a week ago, but in his heart he knew he was there because he wanted to hear "them girls" lay out the liquor question. But, fortunately for the timid little debaters, he had slipped in unawares during the opening song, and in a back seat, listened to the discussion, all unobserved.

As on the previous morning the "incidents telling the evil"—that liquor had done—were first and foremost, and Miss Reed had to call for opposite facts.

Mr. Swenson noted this in some surprise and could but feel that the prevailing sentiment of the schoolroom was very different from that of the neighborhood outside.

"I know of lots of times where liquor has done lots of good," came at last from Mina Skovlin, who had not spoken before. She was one of the "young ladies" of the school and the family having but recently moved into the neighborhood, Mina and her brother Fred were not very well posted with Miss Reed's arguments against liquor and tobacco.

"Uncle John, pa's brother, always takes some when he goes across the prairie on a cold day—he'd freeze if he didn't, and he's given it to men who were dying and they got well, and it's good in the harvest field and keeps the men from feeling the heat and getting sick, and it never does no harm where you don't take too much."

A dozen hands were up for "an answer," as soon as Mina had finished, but Iva Larson was the first to speak:

"I guess Mr. Nansen found it colder going to the North pole than riding across the prairie, and he wouldn't take any liquor along 'cause his men couldn't stand it and the cold, too. It don't give no real heat, but makes the heart beat faster and get tired so we can't stand the cold."

"And lemonade or iced coffee is better 'n liquor in harvest and hot weather," spoke up Willie Swenson, glad that he knew some arguments on the "right side," "cause teacher said liquor drinks up all the water in our stomachs right off and burns up the pink velvet linings and so we get awful hot and thirsty."

Poor Mr. Swenson, he was so proud of his boy's "speech," he could hardly keep from clapping his hands and thus making known his presence, but he did, and listened with the deepest interest.

"Well, I'd rather die 'n take liquor if I's sick, cause then I wouldn't grow up a drunkard, and folks do as uses it fer med'cine—lots on 'em."

It was young Claus Oleson who gave this strong argument.

"And men can't stop when they've taken a little," added Laura Roline, coming to the last part of Mina's statement. "Liquor makes an appetite for itself more'n anything we can take, and even a little does harm—physiology says so—it hurts the brain, nerves, muscles and all of us."

Of course, Mina was now carefully answered, but she was still very sure that liquor was sometimes useful and good, and told of a mother with a terribly cross baby (of five months), who gave it a few drops of alcohol in water and sugar, "and it kept just as quiet as could be," she said, "and soon wanted more and more, it liked it so, and sometimes it cried for it in the night, and it got as fat and good as could be."

But you should have seen the hands go up and clamor to answer at this. It was an inspiring sight, and proved that Miss Reed had fortified her children at every possible approach of this enemy.

"Oh, it was awful wicked to do so; that baby would surely become a drunkard."

"It was a drunkard—just drunk enough to be stupid."

"I don't believe it could live long, taking liquor so young, 'twould spoil its stomach and stop its heart."

These were some of the replies given to this true tale of a mother's shocking ignorance.

After singing the bright song, "Never Drink Whisky or Brandy," Miss Reed smiled and asked their "visitor" for some remarks upon the question.

What a turning of heads and flushing of faces there was!

But Mr. Swenson only replied: "I cannot say anyting, for dese schildern day say it all, but I do some dinking."

Where Uncle Sam's Flags Are Made.

BEFORE a man-of-war is completely equipped, she must be supplied with a varied assortment of the flags of all nations. The flag-lockers of a cruiser like the New York will contain more than two hundred different designs.

All the flags of our navy are made in the equipment building at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The floor of the flag room is covered with lines representing the exact measurements of the various ensigns, and it is no easy matter to turn out a flag which will be exactly according to pattern, both as to design and measurement. There are eight colors used in flags—red, white, blue, yellow, green, brown, black, and canary-yellow. The canary-yellow is used instead of white in flags for signaling. This is because it is found that when signaling at a distance a white ground blends with the horizon, and becomes almost invisible. The largest American flag made is called No. 1. It measures 34.86 feet in length, and 13.12 feet in breadth, and is very rarely used. The size called No. 2, which is considerably smaller, is the one generally used by warships. Cruisers carry the stars and stripes in seven different sizes, but only the Minneapolis and the Detroit fly the gigantic No. 1.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I give you the letter this week from the "Cozy Corner Class" of South Bend, Wash., and their plan is such a nice one that I would like to see it extended. Why can't we have a "Cozy Corner Club" in every city or village where there are a half-dozen of the cousins? By looking over the files of THE UNION SIGNAL you can get the address of those who have written to me, exchange calls, and organize a club. You could take up an L. T. L. or some other course of reading, and report your plans and progress through the Cozy Corner.

A letter from two or three clubs every week, signed by the secretary, would be more helpful than so many individual letters. You could crack the "Soft-Shelled Nuts," and perhaps your combined efforts would result in some startling original puzzles to pass around. Who will organize the first "Cozy Corner club"?

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—Our class in the L. T. L. is called Cozy Corner class because we have a corner of the hall behind a curtain. Our teacher reads to us from the Children's Page of THE UNION SIGNAL and we always enjoy the letters from the boys and girls. Our L. T. L. has over fifty members and a baby which we call the Legion's baby. Her name is Marie Adele Reeves. She is eight months old and belongs to our superintendent.

Lovingly yours,
THE COZY CORNER CLASS.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am twelve years old. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. and is president of this district. We take THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the Children's Page. The stories are very interesting to me. I would like to join the Cozy Corner.

Your loving niece,

DEAR AUNT MARY:—This is my first letter to the Cozy Corner. I am a little girl eight years old. I have four cats; two of them are at our house at the beach, and the other two at our home at Aberdeen. We take THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the Children's Page.

Your loving niece,
Aberdeen, Wash. FRANCES LACKEY.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I would like to join the Cozy Corner very much. We have an L. T. L. here. There are fifty or sixty members. I am a temperance girl, ten years old. We have two saloons here. My mother is president of the W. C. T. U. I like to read THE UNION SIGNAL, especially the Children's Page.

The Lord gave the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host.—Psa. 68:11.

Women at the Fair.

PERHAPS nothing shows the advance of the world's civilization more clearly than the history of its fairs. From being only marts of trade and barter they have become in these later years, institutions of improvement in all products of the farm, and in all lines of industry and are recognized as agents for the wonderful advance of knowledge in the arts and sciences.

The feature that we wish to particularly emphasize is the part that women have recently taken, not only in our county and state fairs, but in our great international fairs. The Columbian Exposition furnished the best exhibition of the work of women of any fair ever held. A board of women appointed by Congress to look after the interests of women marked in itself a new era in the history of expositions. Women were not only recognized as exhibitors but were welcomed as associate managers and judges.

Instead of a little building off by itself, where woman's work, largely made up of bedquilts, counterpanes, crocheted work, a few pictures, specimens of carving and fancy work, was to be found, as at the Centennial in 1876, the fair of 1893 found woman's work exhibited side by side with man's in almost every department.

The architectural beauties of the Woman's Building, designed by a woman and decorated by women, the mural paintings, the colossal caryatides that upheld the roof garden, the statuary that surmounted the roof, the carved panels, all made by women, and the unlimited riches that it contained, were only a small part of the magnificent exhibit made of woman's work. In the Agricultural department were found the butter, cheese, wheat and other grains exhibited by the women farmers of the west. Heretofore the tub of butter made by her hand was entered in the name of her husband, and he took the prize. Mines and Mining showed building stones and slates from quarries owned and worked by women, and gold, silver, iron, copper and lead from mines owned and carried on by women, who were their own assayers. The Horticultural building was rich in exhibits of women, sent from fruit farms in California, Florida and many other states, and some of the most scientifically arranged exhibits of the flora and fauna of this country were furnished by women. The Electrical, Transportation, Live Stock and Machinery buildings also showed exhibits of woman's work, but it was in the Liberal Arts and Manufactures that we found the most astonishing evidences of the intelligence and handiwork of our sisters.

It had been decreed that every manufacturer should state with his exhibit what percentage of the work of that exhibit was done by women. The story told by this record in Chief Allison's books was surprising, to say the least. We quote a few items copied from the books in this department, showing the percentages of work done by the women: Mattings, rugs and carpets, 90 per cent; sheetings, 40 to 50 per cent; water proof goods, 75 per cent; rubber belting and straps, 60 per cent; metallic ammunition, 50 per cent. Heretofore, woman's work had never been mentioned in connection with these manufactured goods. Men who owned the factories entered the exhibits in their own names and took all the premiums and all the glory.

Gratifying as were these testimonies to woman's efficiency in all the industrial departments, this was not all. In the Fine Arts were found the splendid works of Harriet Hosmer, Anna Whitney, Blanche Nevins, Minnie Ream and a host of others, but to our mind, all these did not reflect the glory of the womanhood of to-day as did the intellectual exhibit made by her in the congresses held in connection with this wonderful Exposition.

The papers, the addresses, and the manner in which they were given, were acknowledged by all to be fully equal to the very best given by her brothers. Perhaps nothing done by the women has attracted more attention or will, in the years to come bring more of commendation, than their unique plan of giving diplomas of honorable mention to expert workmen and women whose skilled hands and cultured brains had in silence, and out of sight, made the exhibits that won for the employer the coveted medals of merit. Heretofore these faithful employés had been unknown, and their work unrecognized. It was left to the women of the Columbian year to conceive the beneficent plan to give to these hidden workmen the recognition of which they had never dreamed, and the reward for which they had never asked. Congress honored itself by passing a joint resolution, empowering the Board of Lady Managers to bestow diplomas upon designers, inventors and expert artisans, through whose skill these exhibits were brought to such perfection that a medal had been awarded. Exhibitors who had received medals were asked to indicate who of their employés were entitled to this honorable recognition, and in sending their certificates they spoke in the highest terms of appreciation of the forethought, energy and wisdom of the women who had inaugurated and carried out this extraordinary and eminently just plan. The material exhibits of the women of the world showed the skill of their hands, the congresses showed the power and culture of their brains, but this plan more than anything else showed the grandeur of their womanhood, as it brought to light a keen sense of justice, a generous recognition of human rights, and revealed not only brain power, but the eternal riches of cultivated hearts. Twenty-five thousand of these diplomas were sent out to cheer the hearts of these faithful workers.

What a contrast was the great Columbian Exposition in its aims and its results to the fairs of a century ago. Look at the millions spent by Chicago to make the Columbian Exposition the grandest of history, and without hope of money return. Fairs to-day not only seek to improve the exhibits, but to bring permanent benefit to the exhibitor, not only in a financial way, but intellectually and morally.

A Lesson from the War.

"WAR is Hell!" yet even hell has its lesson. The canteen emphasizes the need of prohibition more forcefully than a regiment of lecturers could do.

All eyes are fastened upon the camps where our "boys" are under drill, waiting to be hurled into the crater of battle. The heartstrings of the home folks are tangled about their restless feet. All good souls give thanks when evangelists, temperance women and the others pour their testaments, hymn books, tracts and housewives into the camps. Prayers are going to God for them from thousands of family altars.

Then comes a bugle shriek of alarm. The canteen is eating up the soldiers' pay, while families at home are starving. Much effort is made to conceal and deny the facts, but brave ubiquitous correspondents corroborate them. They tell us that at Chickamauga alone five thousand dollars a day of soldiers' money go into the canteen till. Men are paid in beer checks; scant water supply drives them to the canteen; so that they are guzzling and fighting like a drunken mob. We can not afford this grewsome waste of money and muscle, manhood and morals, for canteens are eating up the men as well as their money.

What can we do about it? One thing: we can talk. Satan sneers at a woman's tongue with good reason, for women talk where talk tells. They talk to God and the little children.

Every woman teacher ought to emphasize our noble Mary Hunt's temperance lessons in a way to show that the canteen men get the money that ought to buy bread for the babies at home. The father who went to the war with a promise to do better on his kind, weak lips, hoping that military discipline would straighten him up, has been knocked to bits in a canteen fight. Every mother can serve up these wretched facts in a wise and savory style at her breakfast table. The word may be passed from neighbor to neighbor, that, in spite of General Miles' gently prohibitory order, the officers in command of some of the camps give the canteen full play.

God be thanked there are other places where women can speak. In prayer-rooms, on platforms and in pulpits they can remind the sovereign people that its war costs $1,000,000 a day, and that it can illy afford to have its armies deteriorated and demoralized to enrich beer sellers. This puissant people ought to know that while the war costs $1,000,000 a day, the country's loss from strong drink is nearly ten times as much, and that, not for a few months in thirty or forty years, but right on, year in and year out.

When our quaint, wise, old Uncle Sam, whom the cartoonist touches up so smartly, gets these facts into his head, he will arise in his great, slow wrath and make an end of them. Then our dull logic will discover that sumptuary laws are right and possible. The weak must be protected by legal enactments, which the government must enforce ever for its own salvation. Women and men too may make these wartime facts count mightily for prohibition.

Against the Army Canteen.

DRINK rations in the army were abolished in 1832, and in the navy in 1862. Later on the Sutler system was banished from army camps, and then came the introduction of the army post canteen system, which has developed, since the war with Spain began, into the regimental canteen system. The two last mentioned find their authority in "General Order No. 46," by the Secretary of War, and dated, Headquarters of the Army, Washington, July 25, 1895, which reads as follows:

Section 10, of Post Exchange (Canteen) Regulations. The sale or use of ardent spirits in any branch of the exchange is strictly prohibited, but on the recommendation of the Exchange Council, the commanding officer may permit beer and light wines to be sold at the canteen by the drink, whenever he is satisfied that giving to the troops the opportunity of obtaining such beverages within the post limits will prevent them from resorting for strong intoxicants to places without such limits, and tend to promote temperance and discipline among them. Should the commanding officer not approve the recommendation of the Exchange Council, it will be submitted for final decision to the department commander.

The canteen must be in a room used for no other purpose, and, when practicable, a building apart from that in which the recreation and reading-rooms are located; the sale of beer must be limited to week days, and the beer consumed upon the premises. The practice known as "treating" will not be permitted.

We have only to be a reader of the daily news to have testimony piled on testimony, right from the field, as to the drunkenness, disorderly conduct, violation of civil and military law, murderous attacks, non-commissioned officers reduced to the ranks, full guard-houses, insubordination, assault upon places where comrades are confined, and even upon civil and military officers, murders,—all because of drunkenness largely, in most cases entirely, attributable to the army canteen. We could fill many columns with instances of arrest for drunkenness as they appear every day in the public print. The nation is awakening to the startling condition of affairs. Petitions are rolling in to the chief executive of the nation asking him to stop the accursed business of making drunkards of our soldiers. He can do it with a stroke of the pen. What he does will largely depend on what you do. You have an opportunity to speak your mind. Cut out the petition found on one of our back pages, or write one of your own, sign and send at once with as many more names as you can get quickly. Then start another petition for the same purpose, and keep it up until something is done.

A Word to Parents and Teachers.

UNDER this head and in an accompanying letter, Dr. Josiah Strong, ex-secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, makes some revelations in regard to vice among children and youth which are too shocking to put into public print. He instances one town in Pennsylvania where it became necessary to organize a vigilance committee to patrol the streets at night to put a stop to the vice practiced by mere children as well as by older youth. In a large city in the west the authorities seriously considered the closing of the public schools temporarily in order to stamp out the moral contagion. Dr. Strong says:

"So far as I can learn the active cause of this condition of things would seem to be the extensive distribution of obscene literature, both through the mails and by hand. Men fill their grips and pockets, step onto the platform when the train stops, with a quick eye pick out the young fellows of the right sort, put into their hands specimen pages which give information how to get more, tell them to pass it around, jump onto the train and are gone. Sometimes they distribute the poison to the school children on the playgrounds."

In one town a teacher found fifty-eight out of her sixty pupils had been reading certain vile literature. Of this literature Dr. Strong says: "A Christian imagination simply can not conceive of it. It might have come from the cesspool of perdition." As aids to a better condition the doctor suggests two things:

First, let parents and teachers break the conspiracy of silence into which they seem to have entered. Rare are the parents who do not leave their children to learn from vicious companions the most sacred facts of their physical life. I do not believe one father in twenty does his duty by his boy, in this particular. If he does not know how to speak on so delicate and difficult a subject, let him put into his boy's hand a judicious book adapted to meet the needs of parents and teachers.

Secondly, the curfew ordinance which has been adopted in many western cities with admirable results would throw a shield around the children during the hours of greatest temptation.

This is right in line with W. C. T. U. teaching and the especial work of one of our departments. We are glad to be reinforced from the father side and by one whose words will carry such weight as will Dr. Strong's.

Striking Figures About Women's Work.

IN our leading editorial reference is made to the per cent of work done by women on the articles exhibited at the Columbian Exposition. Manufacturers taking premiums were asked to report this, and the facts as recorded by Mr. Allison, chief of the manufactures department, were copied by our national treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, who was one of the Board of Lady Managers. The per cent of work done by women is most surprising, and we are led to wonder what the showing will be at Paris in 1900. If she did so much without recognition what will she do after the splendid tributes to her work as shown by the following facts. The per cent of work done by women was:

Mosaics, 66; matting, rugs, and carpets, 90; towels (linen), 40, 51; sheetings, 50; garments, 80; muff beds, 90; paper 50; water-proof, 75; rubber beltings and straps, 60; eider-down blankets, 66; toilet soaps, etc., 70; perfumery, cosmetics, 66; hosiery and knit goods, 75; designing illustrations for overgaiters, 50; children's muslin aprons, 100; millinery and trimmed hats, 100; corsets, 99; gloves and mittens, 90; paper bags, 75; dress goods, shirting, 66⅔; toilet preparations, 100; silver plated ware, 75; stationer's goods, 100; corsets, 100; bark and celluloid, 90; carbonated waters, 75; ceramics, 10; silk women, Cal., 100; paper, 50; pens, 65; crayons, 66; sewing silks, 90; silk and cotton elastics, 100; gentlemen's furnishing goods, 90; shoe blacking, 75; rubber boots and shoes, 50; book binding, 50; writing paper, 66; stove polish, 50; cloaks, 100; fancy articles of rope, 100; wire cloth, 95; fancy linen, 100; artificial fruits, 75; toys, 30; upholstery, 70; manicure, 80; perfume, 90; plated jewelry, 66; Catholic church goods, 90; dress reform, 100; dusters, 95; wax work, 100; metallic ammunition, 50; chewing gum, 95; toilet soap, 95; cotton thread, 70; watch cases, 20; fur garments, 40; umbrellas, 20; papier mache, 50.

Archaeology and the Bible.

THE importance of archæology as evidence of the truth of the Bible can not well be overestimated. The researches of antiquarians, which infidels had hoped would disprove the Old Testament narrative, have vindicated the Scriptural records, and discomfited the enemies of Christianity. The secession, not long ago, of Halevy, of Paris, from the ranks of the destructive critics, is a fact which well exhibits the overwhelming character of the evidence for the Bible afforded by archæology. This eminent Assyriologist at the meeting of the Oriental Congress at Paris, some months ago, defended the Mosaic history, maintaining its essential truth and thereby repudiating his former stand as a follower of Wellhausen.

The learned Dr. Brogsch declared that "any one must certainly be blind who refuses to see the flood of light which the papyri and the other Egyptian monuments are throwing on the venerable records of Scripture." The very bricks that the Israelites made in Egypt have come to light, and the mummies of the Pharaohs have been brought out from the rock-hewn sepulchres of Thebes.

In nothing, perhaps, has infidelity been more discomfited than by the discoveries on the monuments, of evidence refuting the claims of unbelievers that no such people as the Hittites ever existed and that there never was a country called Edom. The Biblical reference to the Hittites as a powerful nation has been vindicated, and Professor Sayce's discovery of the name of Edom on one of the cuneiform tablets in 1881, forces infidels to admit that there was a land of Edom as the Old Testament declares.

The Wrong Flag.

AFTER all that can be said about the possible patriotism of saloonkeepers, there is a grim humor of incongruity in the display of the stars and stripes in the saloon window, on the beer wagon and in the cigar stores of our land. Is not this fling to the free air of heaven but a glozing of that which is seeking to destroy the flower of our country with more merciless intent, and more deadly aim, than Spanish gun or tropic fever? What is patriotism? Love of country is love of the individual and the preservation and welfare of the noblest institutions of his creation. Perfidy and treachery lurk within those powers which debase our brother and accomplish his destruction. One turns away, sickening at the spectacle of that which seeks, with the glorious ensign of freedom, to flaunt in our faces a representation of loyalty, which in the end results in the destruction of the individual and the weakening of our institutions. A more appropriate sight would be the red flag of danger, that all might see and understand.

A FRIEND writing of the soldiers at Jacksonville, Fla., says: "Colonel Montgomery of the Second Mississippi is a devoted Christian, and he said to his men: 'We are from a prohibition state and I am not going to lower the standard. Let us remember we are not only Mississippians, but we are Christian young gentlemen. Don't let the banner of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ trail in the dust while we are holding up the banner of our country. Let us be better men when we return home to our wives and mothers. I am so glad we can trust One who controls the destinies of men, armies and nations, and who can lead us to victory. Let this be the Christian regiment of this army.' Colonel Montgomery attends all their services and helps by his rousing talks and earnest prayers. Maj. John P. Mayo is also a very devout Christian and does all in his power to influence the boys for good. Some of the companies have prayer night and morning. My oldest son has enlisted in this regiment and it does my soul good to know that the commanding officer is a God fearing man." It will be remembered that the Second Mississippi has no canteen. Given such colonels as Colonel Montgomery and the canteen would not exist in the army.

BISHOP Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church, is moving in the matter of petitions against the army canteen in Chicago. The petition sent out by him carries such names as Luther Laflin Mills, John V. Farwell, William R. Harper (president University of Chicago), H. P. Judson (dean of University of Chicago), Josiah Strong, John Wanamaker, etc. In connection with the petition Bishop Fallows says:

General Miles himself has issued a note of warning, but it seems to have fallen on deaf ears. By a stroke of the pen the President can revoke the order permitting the army "canteen," and we believe he will do so, when assured that the army's welfare requires it and public sentiment demands it.

Y's at Work.

Paper Read at Washington Grove W. C. T. U. Camp Meeting "Y Day," July 22.

THE department of work among soldiers, sailors and marines resumed activities last winter, with Miss L. S. Chase as superintendent, an able and energetic woman whose heart is given to this work. Under her direction the work was planned so that each local superintendent was at once assigned to definite work in some one of the various branches. In this way literature, flower mission and evangelistic work was carried on at the navy yard, the arsenal, Fort Myer, and among the veterans at the National Soldiers' Home, some of whom are honorary members of the W. C. T. U. The Y's were very useful in providing music for these meetings.

A soldiers' and sailors' temperance union was organized and held monthly meetings at W. C. T. U. headquarters. At these meetings the Y's assisted materially in providing refreshments and programs.

The literature superintendent visited the marine hospital and navy yard and left literature bags containing religious and story papers, books, magazines, Bible, C. E. hymn book and stationery. Some were also left on the vessels at the navy yard, and others at the soldiers' home. Evangelistic meetings were held every Sunday morning at the navy yard and many Y's attended and assisted. When the war with Spain began this department was well organized and systematized, having a superintendent, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer and superintendents of literature, flower mission, evangelistic work and comfort bags, so that when special activity was needed all were at their posts and ready to help.

At first we devoted ourselves to filling "comfort bags." In this many of the Y's were specially interested, and numerous "comforts" were made and filled by the girls. We also filled several boxes with delicacies for the sick, sending them to different hospitals, and letters from surgeons have since told how much they were appreciated. As camps were established about Washington, and our streets were frequented by soldiers out "sight-seeing" we began to realize that we must do something more to help them. Here were many boys who were away from home influence and in the midst of unusual temptations. It is rarely easy for the average youth to say "no" to temptation, even under favorable circumstances, but when under a broiling sun, tired, homesick, a stranger in a strange city, among companions whose influence is not of the best, and with no place near, save a saloon, where he can go for refreshment, it is extremely difficult for him to be true to principle even when he has been well taught. The members of our department began to realize this, and became anxious to do something for the "boys in blue" who were here exposed to enemies more malignant than the Spaniards. So we opened W. C. T. U. headquarters from 9 A. M. until 5 P. M. each day, and served a free lunch to all soldiers who called. Here, while they rested and refreshed the physical man they were under influences which would surely help them to resist evil and cause them to feel that they had friends who were ready to help them in every possible way. They soon began to frequent our cozy, home-like rooms; were met at the door by the ladies, who gave them a cordial welcome; then after registering name and regiment they were given a chance to wash and, as some said, "slick up" before eating their luncheon, which is always substantial and satisfying.

On the Fourth of July Headquarters Y was in charge and furnished an elaborate luncheon to one hundred and thirty-four soldiers. Our room is plentifully supplied with magazines and papers, palm leaf fans and writing material, all at the service of the "boys." The new organ loaned by the Kimball Co. is often surrounded by a group singing gospel and patriotic songs. Many love to come, and say it reminds them of home and home-folks. A goodly number have signed the pledge, and none but God, in whose name we work, can know how much good is being done among these soldiers by the personal interest taken in them by members of the W. C. T. U.

When we began the free lunch June 21 we had nothing on hand but unlimited faith. Everything needed has been donated by a generous and patriotic public. Table linen, dishes, extension tables, cooking utensils, refrigerator, gas range, Japanese napkins, stationery, food and money. From day to day the needs have been supplied. Remembering the "Inasmuch" of our Saviour let us each one do what we can for these men who are exposed to manifold temptations and dangers, and while we work cheerfully, each in our appointed place, let us all pray earnestly that God will hasten the day when there shall be no more war, but the "swords shall be beaten into plow shares and the spears into pruning hooks."

Since June 21 (six weeks) we have fed 2,700 soldiers.

New Zealand.

SINCE my letter to you four months ago, our work has been marching steadily on in this colony. Two new branches have been organized in the Auckland district and a movement has been set on foot for planting our work in the suburbs of that city and for reviving the Y's which died out in consequence of the introduction of the Christian Endeavor movement absorbing the time and attention of our girls. There is in our midst a growing interest in the white-ribbon work and the country seems ripe for it. Our great need is a leader in each locality. There are willing workers anxious to be led and where suitable officers can be obtained even small, scattered communities do excellent work. One small union has collapsed owing to the removal of its president, and another is hibernating during the winter months, but the older unions are reporting a steadily increasing membership and increased interest. Our L. T. L. methods have been adopted by one or two Bands of Hope who felt the need of a course of scientific teaching.

With regard to temperance matters in general, there is every indication that our cause is steadily advancing throughout the colony. The Auckland (Provincial) Band of Hope union is a very live body. In connection with the Jubilee, they set on foot a movement to secure 1,000 new pledges, and so energetically was the project taken up, that over 2,000 were secured. In Auckland City, Mrs. Davies, who is also a white-ribboner, gave a course of scientific temperance lessons in several of the state schools, the examination papers proving the excellent results of her work. In this city, too, a combination of temperance bodies has been formed for the purpose of employing a woman in house-to-house visitation—a method of propagating temperance sentiment which reaches those who will not come to meetings. The New Zealand Alliance is formulating a scheme for working all the country districts, no matter how remote. Mr. Vale, secretary of the Victorian Alliance, and honorary member of the W. C. T. U., has just completed a three-months' lecturing tour through the colony, which must be productive of excellent results. On the day of his departure he addressed a meeting of women, under the auspices of the Auckland union, when he was the recipient of a table, inlaid with specimens of New Zealand woods, from the temperance friends, and from the W. C. T. U. a large portrait of Miss Willard, handsomely framed.

The police commission which has been sitting for the last five months has elicited facts which will be of great service to our cause. A number of members of the force in different parts of the country gave expression to the opinion that an idea was prevalent that those who wished for promotion must leave the liquor traffic alone. Mr. T. E. Taylor, M. H. R., conducted the inquiry with great ability until the opening of Parliament when his place was most ably taken by Rev. F. W. Isitt.

We have lent our champion, Rev. Leonard Isitt, to the old country for awhile, where he is doing yeoman service.

Proof is furnished, if any were needed, that the temperance cause is not declining, by a statement which has just been published. According to the provisions of the present licensing act no local option poll can be taken until the expiration of two years from the last one. It is stated that a compact has been entered into between the liquor ring and the premier to secure a dissolution before the end of next month. Should this take place they (the liquor ring) will undertake to support the present government, providing fighting funds for the election on a liberal scale. As the last local option poll took place on December 4, 1896, and that poll can only be taken on the day of a general election, this might secure to them an interval of five years between the two polls. We shall see; we can afford to work steadily and hopefully on, knowing that we have God on our side and the right must triumph in the end.

Yours in the fight for God and home and humanity,

MARY S. POWELL,
New Zealand Cor. Sec.

Tasmanian Notes.

DURING the last month many of our members have been busily engaged in obtaining signatures to a petition which asks for the extension of the franchise to the women of Tasmania. This petition, which bears nearly 3,000 signatures, is now lying before Parliament, and what its fate may be remains to be seen. The Constitution Amendment Bill is now in committee, and Mr. McWilliams, M. H. A., one of our most earnest and persistent supporters, has seized the opportunity to propose amendments in various clauses, amendments, which, if carried through both houses, will secure the suffrage to women. We can but hope and pray that this may be the case, and that the vote of women shall stand for temperance, purity and righteousness.

A Prohibition League has been formed in Launceston, and already forty names have been enrolled as members. This League, which has for its object the ultimate legislative prohibition of the liquor traffic, will greatly strengthen the temperance cause in Tasmania, and help to hasten the day when the homes of the people shall be protected from the evils of a traffic so degrading.

Innovations to grant licenses at reduced rates for the sale of Tasmanian fruit wines by single bottle have lately been discussed by the Council of Agriculture. To this we have sent a strong protest, because we believe that the permittance of such a trade would be most pernicious to the welfare of the people of our island, and is an evil to which our sex would be the most exposed.

The Hobart union has suggested to the municipal council the adoption of the curfew bell ordinance, which has proved so successful in several parts of the United States. The increase of evils which may be traced to the presence of so many young children in our streets at night calls for some action, and this most reasonable one has been placed before the city authorities.

News from the Field.

Kansas.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that nothing has been heard for a long time from Kansas by the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, much temperance work is being done, not only by the W. C. T. U., but by other temperance organizations as well. There has been a general awakening of the people along the line of law enforcement, and our organization as usual has lent a hand to the work.

Mrs. Harford, National organizer, has been in the field for months, working in the first, second, fourth and fifth districts. Wherever she goes an increased membership, and, better still, renewed activity and earnestness in the work are the results of her labor. In 116 days' work in these districts, she held 219 meetings, securing for our membership 741 active and 358 honorary members, beside 372 pledged workers.

At the two Chautauqua assemblies, held at Ottawa and Winfield, our state W. C. T. U. had a regular place on the program, holding a daily meeting at each place.

The Winfield work was in charge of Mrs. Hutchinson, state treasurer, assisted as helpers by Mrs. Haines, president of fourth district, and three state superintendents, one of whom, the state superintendent of press work, furnished daily reports of meetings for local papers. Aside from our home workers, Mrs. Harford was present for some days, giving two excellent addresses. Dr. DeMotte spoke at one of our meetings to a large audience in the tabernacle, delivering one of his unequaled purity addresses, and Hon. J. W. Gleed, president of the Kansas State Temperance Union, a Kansan of whom all W. C. T. U. women are proud, spoke one day concerning our prohibitory law and his reasons for wishing to aid in its enforcement. These meetings did not satisfy the workers on the grounds, so two additional meetings were held for informal discussion of various plans of the work.

At Ottawa, the work was in charge of Mrs. Brown, state president, who had for her assistants among state workers, Mrs. J M. Kemp, Mrs. A. C. Zehner and Mrs. E. M. Adams. Mrs. Harford was present several days and spoke to good audiences, also Mrs. Cranmer, National lecturer, who made many friends for the cause and herself at this, her first visit among the Kansas women.

On "patriotic day," a paper on "The Patriotism of Women" was read by Miss Bray, and officers of the W. R. C. occupied seats on the platform and spoke briefly.

The Tabernacle was decorated in the national colors for a "soldiers' meeting," held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., opened with prayer by the newly elected president of the Assembly, and participated in by Kansas women and Dr. De Motte. Letters were read from Kansas regiments without canteens, and for the first time in the history of this Assembly, a collection was taken in the Tabernacle, to be applied to a fund for the Kansas soldiers.

Record of work at this Assembly would be incomplete without mention of the new departure here, in the form of a dining tent, at which our own workers boarded, and many others on the grounds as well. This work was very successful, thanks to the tireless efforts of Mrs. Jean Tucker, its able superintendent.

Especial activity is observable in the department of work among soldiers throughout the state. Parlor meetings are being held in its interest, and much work done by busy fingers for the comfort of the boys at the front Juvenile work is also being brought to the front by its faithful state superintendent.

The season of county and district conventions approaches, and from these your state reporter hopes to be able to report general advance along all lines of the work.

Pennsylvania.

OUR state president promptly responded to the call to meet the National Convention committee, and in loyal harmony the workers will rally to the support of our leaders in every effort to advance the cause. The corresponding secretary and others have been helping in counties needing assistance. We found the sisters in Lehigh county without a county president, Mrs. Yeager resigning on account of ill health, but Mrs. Cowan and her corps of helpers zealous to keep the work in good condition. A week of conferences, meetings, etc., resulted in new members enrolled, better plans adopted and encouragement to all. We expect to hear good news from the bright Y's and L. T. L's as well as extra reports from the W's.

It was a pleasure to receive recently a card and picture from our brave Clara Parrish. We hope to have a ready response from the Y's and W s towards the fund that will enable her to continue her grand work in foreign lands.

STATE L. T. L. CONVENTION.

It was with no small degree of gratitude and thankfulness that our practical state L. T. L. secretary, Mrs. Elma Preston, went with her bright young people to Lebanon for the seventh annual convention, June 28–30. The report sent to the Newtown Enterprise by the retiring corresponding secretary, Miss Lydretta Rice, will show why we are so happy in our L. T. L's.:

"The first meeting was held on the evening of June 28, when two contests were held, viz., an oratorical contest for the Burns' prize and musical contest for a state song. The first oratorical prize was won by Miss Lillian Aldred, of Philadelphia. The second prize was captured by Mr. Clyde Black, who spoke with rare ability on 'The Menace of the Enemy.' In the state song contest, the song from Gettysburg was judged the best, while Newtown came in second.

"Lebanon county leads in number of graduates, with Cumberland and Bucks next. An excellent program of papers, orations, etc., was carried out, and an interesting feature was the introduction of five county presidents, young men from sixteen to twenty-five years of age, representing Cumberland, Lebanon, Bucks, Columbia and Lycoming.

"On Thursday morning the enrollment committee reported that there were 194 delegates present entitled to vote. The following officers were elected: President, C. W. Burns; vice-president, M. Hoke Gottschall; second vice-president, Julian Bailey; corresponding secretary, Margaret McMillan; recording secretary, Boyd L. Spahr; treasurer, Ira S. Allison.

"Invitations for the next convention were received from Butler county, Williamsport and Newtown. It was almost unanimously voted to Newtown.

"Miss S. Emma Becker, of Lebanon, and Lydretta Rice, of Newtown, were appointed delegates to the state W. C. T. U. convention at Reading in October.

"On Thursday evening 196 graduates received the L. T. L. diploma.

"The whole convention was marked by order, earnestness and activity, and the kindness of our Lebanon friends was deeply appreciated. We came home with stronger resolutions and new inspiration, resolved to go ahead and work, work, work for temperance and prohibition."

The energetic press superintendent of Mercer county keeps the folk in her locality and elsewhere "posted" by having up-to-date clippings in the local papers each week. She writes: "I know that our devotion has been to a principle as well as to our leader, and that all the unions have held earnest and impressive memorial services, which not only referred to Miss Willard's good life but were made an opportunity to gather new interest and members into the work. Newspapers are becoming more courteous to our appeals for space, and we cannot find superintendents willing to fill all the space offered to us. Mrs. J. W. Stevenson ably fills a column in Western Press, which is a new arrangement of this year. Mrs. Borles lectured on scientific temperance before the Mercer county annual Public School Teachers' Institute. We hope other counties may make the same arrangement for the present year, and may be as fortunate in choice of a lecturer.

Although a dark shadow is resting upon the McKean county W. C. T. U. on account of the illness of its president, Mrs. H. E. Chambers, of Bradford, it still holds its own in regard to membership and work accomplished. Under the supervision of Mrs. Alice M. Hirsch, county Y superintendent, the Y's held a very pleasant and profitable reunion in Port Alleghany, on June 14, 15. Ten unions in the county have well organized and well conducted L. T. L's. A prohibition paper, The Kane Leader, is published by one of the honorary members of the county. All of the county papers publish W. C. T. U. reports and items, courteously and willingly, and two of them have W. C. T. U. columns, which are edited weekly by a local superintendent of press work.

Three new unions have been organized by the county president, Mrs. A. M. Rice, during the last year in Butler county. One of these forms No. 3 in the town of Butler. All are carrying on L. T. L. work. This department is being pushed with vigor by Mrs. A. G. Otterman, of Zelienople, acting superintendent, who has completed arrangements for having Mrs. Elma M. Preston, state superintendent, in the county, in September, at the annual convention. The midyear convention was held in Bruin, and was well attended. Mrs. W. R. Forquer, president of Clarion county, was present and addressed the convention. Departments were presented by the superintendents, those of most interest being prison and jail, L. T. L. and scientific temperance instruction. The latter under the able management of Mrs. Anna English, of Petrolia. Through her efforts Mrs. Ella A. Boole has been engaged as an instructor at the county institute of public school teachers, from which the best results are anticipated.

The energetic workers in Tioga county have been aided in their labors by Mrs Mabel Conklin, who spent two weeks with them. A White Cross Society was formed among the business men at Elkland. Their membership is increasing, have a column in one paper regularly once a week, and are pressing forward with zeal in all lines of work. Words of cheer come from Susquehanna county: "In June we held our midyear conference; all but one of the unions were represented, and the account of work given by superintendents showed continued interest and efficiency. Mrs. Edholm has recently visited several unions, and good results followed her coming."

OVERSHADOWED by this western edge of the war cloud which spreads onward to the east, the hearts of women have responded to the nation's call for help, as have their brothers. As the "boys" bade farewell and passed through Los Angeles, they found the white-ribboners ready with their flowers and gospel texts for soul food, while others supplied the delicacies, and the enemy the wine and tobacco. Hundreds of bouquets have been prepared at our temple for the passing troops and many pleasant returns received from the soldiers. Mrs. Hester T. Griffith officiated on the train from Pomona to the city and secured a large number of signatures to the temperance pledge as did also our sisters who visited the depots when the soldiers left.

Temperance Temple has responded to the patriotic wave, and "old glory" in many sizes decorates the interior with one large specimen—the gift of Los Angeles Central union, while donations at the state convention furnished a beautiful flag which floats in front of the building.

Some of the National workers who were present at the state convention have remained and labored in this field. Mrs. Isabel Wing-Lake and Dr. Carolyn Geisel have been much in demand. They spent a week at Pasadena, where one result was the doubling of Lake avenue union at one afternoon meeting, and much interest aroused in rescue and preventive work. They are wanted there again. Pomona called them next and profited by their few days' work there. Los Angeles and vicinity have heard them with pleasure. Many have united with the unions in response to their earnest appeals, but so far your reporter has been unsuccessful in getting the number. Failing strength and the Lord's "open door" sent them into hiding, for a little rest, whence they frequently emerge to address some meeting.

Miss Mary Barbour has also spoken at Pasadena, Los Angeles, Azusa and other points, winning friends for the cause.

Major Hilton's lectures at Pomona before the state convention were so successful in securing new members that Los Angeles union called him for a week's work, and the meetings were held afternoons and evenings in the First Congregational church. A special feature of the series was the music—the best choirs and soloists of sacred music being secured. The result which counted most plainly at first was the income to meet the expenses and names for eighty active and two honorary members secured.

Another meeting at Boyle Heights on Sunday, when Major Hilton spoke, promised some forty additional members for the Boyle Heights union.

The last meeting of the Union of Los Angeles W. C. T. Unions was held with its youngest member, the union at Vernon. The meetings were held at the Congregational church, and the pastor showed his genuine sympathy by penning in fancy lettering the Chinese napkins with "W. C. T. U., Vernon, July 7, 1898," and the picture of a white-ribbon bow. Mrs. Lake, Dr. Geisel and Miss Mary Barbour were the chief speakers, and the singing by the local talent was excellent and appropriate.

We were advertised to have a day at Chautauqua at Long Beach July 21, but it simmered down to one hour, other temperance organizations being also represented. Our speakers were Mrs. Wing-Lake and state president, Mrs. Kenney, who addressed an audience that was largely composed of white-ribboners. No doubt the services would have been better attended had the date not been so near to that of the annual School of Methods, which was held at Long Beach August 16–18, when most of the sisters and their friends spend their vacation at the coast. At the close of the School of Methods the quarterly state executive meeting was held. Santa Barbara county, at its convention, re-elected for its president Mrs. Jennie Carden, who had served them faithfully for some years, but a change of residence to Los Angeles county compelled her resignation, and at the county executive Miss Una Moore, of Goleta, was elected to fill the place. Miss Moore is state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, and a comrade of much experience in W. C. T. U. work. She was formerly an active temperance worker in Nebraska, where she was also a public school teacher, and has lost none of her interest in either cause. Los Angeles county gladly welcomes faithful Mrs. Carden.

At a recent meeting of the Los Angeles Y's, the decision was given regarding a membership competition, which showed that the ladies had secured fifteen new members, while the gentlemen had but four. The membership numbers twenty-four active and fifty-one honorary members. They have a paper named The War Cry, of which Mr. Gaylor is the editor. Resolutions of sympathy were given Miss Leishman (a member) in the loss of her sister at Emporia, Kas.

Norwalk union took advantage of a flag-raising and served refreshments, which netted them $16 to pay toward our temple needs.

Los Angeles Central union has rented the basement of the temple, and will open a sewing class in August.

Mrs. Laura T. Carter, president of the Los Angeles union of unions, will, with her husband, spend the summer at Ocean Grove, N. J., and other eastern points, where they will help on the Master's work.

Texas.

THE special line of endeavor that has taken strong hold of our women is work for the soldiers. Our state president, Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, has sent to every union in the state a circular letter, urging upon them the immediate necessity of "sewing bees" for the purpose of making "comfort bags" and "housewives" for their use. We are particularly pleased that the first installment of these useful articles should have come from the W. C. T. U. "Camp Tom Ball" is located at Houston Heights, a suburb of Houston, where pure water and the best sanitary conditions are obtained. At this camp the Fourth Texas Regiment is stationed, and the Cisco union was the first in the field with a supply of comfort bags.

I was assured by Major Harrison of the Fourth Texas Regiment and other officers, that there had been but one intoxicated man on the grounds since they had been in camp, and notwithstanding they are surrounded by saloons—temporarily provided—there is very little, if any, patronage of these places. This fact compelled two of these "gates to perdition" to tear down the shanty and move back to town. There is very little profanity among "our boys." The Y. M. C. A. have a large tent, where gospel services are constantly held and temperance addresses given, some of these by the officers themselves. Many of these volunteers are professed Christians.

Mrs. Stoddard has requested of the unions that barrels of good literature with the comfort bags enclosed be sent to our Texas boys now at the front. This is meeting with ready response. Also calls attention to Mrs. Thacher's letter in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 30. Asks that we take immediate steps to have the indorsed series of text books on physiology adopted in all grades for use in the public schools. She is now at Bay View, Mich. Before leaving the state, since the convention in May, she organized a union at Ladonia, and one at Rockwall in June. She appointed Mrs. Ella Atkins press superintendent of the latter. Mrs. Stoddard spoke in the four churches at this place by invitation of their respective pastors, during her stay.

Our new state superintendent of press work, Miss Fannie L. Armstrong, has entered upon her work with the zeal and "Greek" enthusiasm characteristic of her. From her I learn that the Fort Worth union came out of the convention with money in the treasury—an unusual state of affairs, I am told—and are so elated over the good times we had that they are "half a mind to invite us for next year." I wonder if other state reporters can give as good or a better record?

Those Fort Worth women have given an "experience party" since convention, to increase the Temple fund, and "experienced" $29.60, which has been sent forward. Prizes were offered for the best and worst experience poems. The first was a year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, which the winner presented to her pastor, as she is already a subscriber.

Mrs. Ella Mow, state L. T. L. superintendent, and Mrs. J. A. S. Curtis, state treasurer, organized a union at Port Arthur, July 10, with Mrs. Little, president, and Mrs. Crawley, corresponding secretary. An interesting Fourth of July celebration was held at Beaumont by the L. T. L. and Burden Bearers. An object lesson was the marching of the children through the principal streets with flags and banners, singing temperance and patriotic songs. Mrs. Mow, Mrs. W. W. Watts and Miss Grace Martin were leaders in the movement. We have a new editor for our state paper, Mrs. Pennel, as I said in my last letter, and a business manager, Mrs. Vredenberg. It is now located at Austin, and has come to us each month since convention, full of interesting matter, and welcome as a letter from home.

THE Richmond District Woman's Christian Temperance Union began its fourth year's work at the convention held in Trinity Methodist Church, Wednesday, June 1. Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson presided, and in the absence of the secretary, Miss Bettie Pace, Mrs. Thos. P. Bagby recorded. Mrs. M. B. Lee, state superintendent of evangelistic work, opened the meeting with devotional exercises. Mrs. A. E. Wait extended a brief but cordial welcome on behalf of East End, the entertaining union, and Mrs. Jobson responded for the convention.

The reports of the unions, read by the district corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. B. Clement, showed increasing activity. The Wynn union of Hanover county deserves special mention for its increase in membership, from nine to thirty-three within three months. The president, Miss Jennie Bates, and treasurer, Miss Nannie Bates, were introduced to the convention. Mrs. Alice McPhail was present as fraternal delegate from the Trinity Aid Society, and Mrs. Sarah Pleasants from the Woman's Home Mission Society. Mrs. J. T. Mastin, the pastor's wife, was also introduced as one of the two ministers' wives of Richmond that wear the white ribbon.

There were present at the convention three general officers, seven district superintendents of departments and three state superintendents, also representatives from thirteen of the fifteen unions of the district. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson; vice-president, Mrs. A. E. Wait; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. B. Clement; recording secretary, Miss Julia Hudgins; treasurer, Mrs. C. O. Alley.

Resolutions of thanks for the use of the church and to East End union for hospitality were passed, also a resolution of sympathy for Mrs. Thos. Whitehead, occasioned by the serious illness of her husband, Colonel

WE are to have Mrs. Marion B. Baxter with us this month, and are anticipating much inspiration from her visit.

The little mountain town of Wenatchee, a two days' stage ride from the railroad, has a union of twenty-nine members, and is preparing to entertain the state convention in September. The union is three years old, and has succeeded in enforcing the Sunday law, suppressing gambling, making the one saloon in town keep within the outward observance of law and order, preventing the opening of a second saloon, purchased a building and lot in which it maintains a public reading room, and carries five departments of work. Its way of enforcing law is to be commended for its effectiveness. A petition for the closing of business houses on Sunday was circulated, and when it had a sufficient number of responsible signers it was taken to the constable and he was bidden to see that the request of the petition was granted, or the union would see what could be done with him. He enforced it.

Centerville union has held a very successful Demorest medal contest. One-third of Centerville's members are honoraries.

Harford union sends a report compiled by Mrs. F. Dantzscher that is a model of painstaking. That union of fifteen members has accomplished a large amount of work during the past year, and are planning more for the future. They carry on regular charity work and press work, besides doing every thing that they can see that is for the general good.

School Savings Banks.

Economic education is claiming each year the more thoughtful attention of learned and philanthropic people. School banking, the simplest way of inculcating self-denial and thrift, has full approval wherever instituted, and as the news goes abroad, its sphere is broadening. Statistics of the savings in some of the public schools in the United States have just been printed by Mr. J. H. Thiry, who founded the system. They show that the school children's savings deposited in savings institutions through this system have amounted to $530,319.58. These savings are in 349 schools, and the depositors number 41,863. There are half as many more schools using this system, of which we have no statistical report, and many others using the Penny Provident and stamp plan of saving.

All systems and means of the systematic saving of money for the self-responsible development of the child and to apply to uses apart from frivolous waste are of value, as it is the principle involved rather than specific method we aim to instill, the independence, individuality and equality of means that will make thrift general. But the simple system of school savings, where we credit the pennies direct, and not stamps, is more educative and helpful, because it gives our boys and our girls regular banking business habits, and they carry their accounts right over into manhood and womanhood. If every boy and girl who has graduated or come out of our public schools for the past ten years had left school with one or two hundred dollars of a bank account to his or her credit, as do our boys and girls to-day where they have school savings banks, we would be much nearer the equality, the sobriety and the single standard of morality for which we labor than we now are. We need to understand how to handle and appropriate money, that it may give to us and to others the greatest degree of comfort. Poverty and extravagance are the result of the lack of systematic training in thrift. Intemperance is largely attributable to the same lack.

In order to spread the news of school savings advantages and methods we need a helper in every local union, in every school district. It is the local workers after all who reach the heart of the people and make forward movement effective. Many interested members of single unions in different states have sent to me for literature and letters of instruction in regard to school savings banks during the past year who, for lack of a superintendent of this department in their county or state, will have little representation in the work of the year without they report to me personally. Please, dear local workers thus situated, write me what you have done to forward this great cause and I will gladly count it in. It is the virtue of what we do and not our office that counts all the time. And if I have missed sending blanks for report to any county superintendents of school savings banks where there is not yet a state superintendent kindly report your existence and work to me. Among the larger cities and towns that have taken up the school savings in their public schools during the year are Pittsburg, Scranton and Shenandoah, Pa., and Tacoma, Wash. The newspapers of these towns are almost daily commending the results.

Sample literature including "How to Institute School Savings Banks," "How to Institute," and fourteen other leaflets on economic topics are carried in stock by the National superintendent, to whom please write for prices. She will never be found with empty closet or unwilling hand.

Evangelistic.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS:—The time again approaches when we should gather results of the spiritual seed-sowing of the year. While we shrink from statistical reports of a spiritual harvest, yet this becomes a manifest duty, that others may be encouraged, and that this department, which underlies all our work, may not seem to languish because we hesitate to report the work of God through us as glad instruments. Most encouraging reports are daily received of the increased evangelistic effort during this year of sad bereavement and National crisis.

Will all evangelists and evangelistic superintendents who hope to attend the National Convention at St. Paul please notify me as soon as possible? Send reports and letters to me, care of my secretary, Miss Ida Craft, 294 Stuyvesant Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

As the following questions best cover the needs of unions, new and old, they are reproduced here, that those who have not our "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers" may thus secure the list. Will state and county superintendents duplicate them and send to each local union?

Has your union an evangelistic superintendent?

How many unions in your county or district have evangelistic superintendents?

Have you received a copy of the National superintendent's Hints and Helps?

How many copies have been sent out in the state?

Are you and your union growing in spirituality, and using the helps thereto?

Have any communion circles been formed?

How many observe the trysting time?

Do you hold, in your union, a weekly meeting for conference prayer and temperance enthusiasm, and is this separate from the business meeting?

How many are pursuing the course of Bible study, of the American Institute of Sacred Literature?

Has there been in your union a revival of interests in evangelistic work, and a renewed consecration and Bible study?

Have you held Bible readings as suggested by the National superintendent? With what result?

Did your last district or county convention observe the hour from 11 to 12 A. M. as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?

Did your last state convention observe the hour from 11 to 12 A. M. as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?

Have you continued the campaign in the churches?

How many church services have been held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.?

How many sermons preached by pastors? How many meetings were addressed by women? In how many were collections taken for the union?

How many pages of gospel temperance literature have been distributed during the year?

How many unions have inaugurated the system of co-operative evangelistic work, outlined in our "Hints and Helps"?

How many visits have been made by each union? Mention results, incidents, etc.

Have gospel missions or district conferences been held? How many, and with what results?

Have Crusade bands been formed, and with what results?

How many gospel temperance meetings have been held? How many in prisons, jails and penitentiaries? How many in almshouses? How many in halls? How many in cottages? How many mothers' meetings? How many in schoolhouses? How many on ships and in forts? How many outdoor services?

How many visits made by union?

Number of conversions? Number of Bible readings? Number of pages of literature distributed?

How many signatures to the pledge?

Has your union held or participated in evangelistic conferences, days of prayer, schools of methods or similar services? Give report of such.

Please report any evangelistic work done by your union not included in the above questions.

Please do not in any case give an indefinite answer to a question. For instance, it will not do to answer a question in such words as "some," "not many," "a few," etc. We must have figures. If you are not able to be exact, please give approximate figures. We are sure you will do all in your power to make these reports a success.

Will each state superintendent secure answers to the questions from every local union, and send the SUMMARY ONLY to the National superintendent? Will she also add a brief letter, giving her own outlook over her state and report of her personal work during the year?

Cordially,

Form of Bequest.

I give and bequeath to "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" the sum of (———) for the use of said institution absolutely.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBONERS:—While the Board of Trustees of the National Temperance Hospital are directly responsible for its management, it must not be forgotten that they stand simply as representatives of a great philanthropic host, the members of the W. C. T. U., scattered over this broad land. No advantage comes to any one of them, no compensation for service except that which attends any member of the organization who gives of time and strength and money for the uplift of humanity. As, however, all assistance relieves the heavy pressure of official responsibility which cannot be shirked so long as this trust is imposed, such assistance is fully appreciated, and many are the individuals and unions deserving of special thanks for kindly helpfulness.

It may be that the mention of some of the ways in which unions have helped to carry the burdens which must rest somewhere may be suggestive to others who would gladly follow their example, learning by it how, without much money, a benevolent spirit can be manifested. Only a few can be named as samples.

One of the Chicago unions, having learned that carpets were needed, contributed carpets, and had a handsome rug woven for a room sadly in need of it, raising the money for paying for weaving.

The Ladies' Aid Society of one of the Lake View Presbyterian churches, of Chicago, volunteered to do sewing, and spent five days in making physicians' aprons and garments for the nurses.

A new union, not yet a month old, was led by this to complete the necessary sewing to equip the nurses with a full supply of surgical aprons. Five members of this new union donated each an individual set of dishes for the diet kitchen.

That not only individuals and local unions, but conventions can help, is manifested by the resolution passed June 10, at the meeting of the Orange county, Vt., Convention, as follows:

"That we realize the great importance of the work of the Temperance Hospital, and that we will work for its support and the spread of its principles; also the importance of the spread of the knowledge of non-alcoholic remedies among the members of the W. C. T. U. and the community at large."

We know the hospital is deserving, but it encourages wonderfully to hear others say these kind words and see others lend a hand. The hospital year closes this month. Have you, reader, done or said anything to help this year? If so, accept heartiest appreciation. If not, will you not do or say something before this month of August shall close, that will increase its influence or add to the sentiment in favor of the principles it represents?

Treasurer's Corner.

During these vacation days the treasurer is the only general officer at Headquarters, and upon her devoles the duty of holding the fort. Mrs. Stevenson is holding up the banner at Chautauqua, Mrs. Stevens is overlooking the field, and with great faithfulness planning the general work and arranging for our coming Convention at St. Paul. The letters received at Headquarters during the last few weeks have been very cheering, and the loyalty shown to the General Officers and the love for our great organization has indeed been most gratifying. A letter just at hand from Mrs. Stevens says: "Since the executive meeting I have heard from nineteen different states—Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee No. 2, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and each one of the presidents indorse our action on the Temple. Tennessee No. 1 regretfully agrees that we are right."

While these matters are engaging so much attention and everyone is studying facts and figures, and like Christian women, "with charity for all and malice toward none," are seeking to act in such a way as shall be for the best interests of our great national society, we must not forget the legitimate objects for which we were organized. The treasurer would be glad to have the treasury replenished, so that the superintendents that are hard at work on many lines could have their appropriations promptly, that the organizers should be sent here and there to lengthen our lines and strengthen our stakes, and make the great society that Miss Willard loved better than her life, in the years to come, reflect great honor upon her precious name. If every state would bring a doubled membership up to St. Paul she would indeed be honored. We are greatly pleased with the responses that are being made for our soldiers' and sailors' department.

Columbus, Ga., writes: "We have sent to the Georgia regiments in Camp Northern, Ga., $185, and our committees are still at work." When an emergency arises that has the welfare of men at stake, our good women can always be depended upon. The $10,000 given to the suffering Armenians, the help sent for starving India, and now Cuba and our boys in blue show how earnest our women are to save the perishing, lift up the fallen, and relieve the oppressed. Truly this is Christly work.

The Home

To Endure Hot Weather.

"When early hours give warning of a day of great heat, the most sensible thing to do is to plan forthwith some really absorbing occupation to fill the hours of trial," advises Ella Morris Kretschmar in her practical talks to housekeepers in the August Woman's Home Companion.

"While in the main it is well to regard summer-time as the proper season for pleasant idling, when temperature conditions become intolerable, the surest refuge is congenial and absorbing occupation. The antidote that stands next is a deeply interesting book. Who has not forgotten entirely the without when immersed in pages which for a time make us a part of scenes and a life not our own? When we would escape ourselves a book is indeed an ally.

"Good company is another beguiler of dragging hours and adverse conditions, and 'the hottest day of the season' may leave in its train the pleasantest memories of a summer, if spent with congenial friend or friends. Do not, because the weather is 'unbearably hot,' hesitate to invite a friend for the day, or to give a luncheon to a number of friends. It is just the time for agreeable diversion; and if your luncheon menu is appropriate, the toilets suitable, and your own spirits good, your guests will leave you grateful for a day of pleasure and surprised that temperature and discomfort have been largely forgotten. Be it remarked in passing that it is not in conventional entertaining that the greatest social success is achieved or the true social faculty displayed.

"It is never wise to dispute right of way with forces absolutely superior to ourselves. When we find ourselves in mental collision with such forces, the only sensible thing to do is to face about and try to go in the same direction with them with what graciousness we can command. If, instead of grumbling about the heat and frequently consulting thermometers with a view to justifying our groanings, etc., we keep in mind the fact that on such heat our health, happiness and material well-being depend—as it does—we must be unreasonable indeed if we fail to be reconciled to the passing discomfort it entails."

Recipe For Blackberry Cordial.

THE UNION SIGNAL of August 4 contained a request for a recipe for blackberry cordial without brandy or any form of alcohol in it. Mrs. C. E. Gaskill, of Chicago, sends the one appended, with the assurance that it is reliable and will keep indefinitely:

1 gal. blackberry juice,
4 lbs. sugar,
1 ounce whole cloves,
1 " " cinnamon bark,
1 " " mace.

Put spices in bags. Boil down one-half, or until a thick syrup. Cook berries before squeezing out the juice.

Another correspondent sends a recipe for unfermented grape wine, with the statement that blackberry juice can be preserved in the same way:

Boil the juice until a thin jelly is obtained. If the grapes are sour, such as the Isabella, add one-half cup of sugar to a quart of liquid; if the grapes are sweet no sugar is necessary. Can the jelly while hot. When used dilute with cold water to suit the taste.

STORIES OF STARLAND, by Mary Proctor. Published by Potter & Putnam Company, New York. Cloth, 186 pp. Price 50 cents.

The great truths of astronomy about which the average child and even the adult knows so little, are so clothed and interwoven in story that the reader is led entranced as through a fairy land, by this delightful author. The style is conversational in character and the story is developed and guided by the inquisition and natural questions of her brother Harry and his little cousin Nellie. The story of the Giant Sun, the Family of Giant Sun; A Ramble on the Moon, The Planet Mars and the Baby Planets, Story of Jupiter and his Moons, The Giant Planets, Comets and Meteors, Stories of the Summer Stars, God Bless the Star, are the main chapter headings. Nearly forty legends are told, most of them appearing in print for the first time.

THE SPANIARD IN HISTORY, by James C. Fernald, 12mo, cloth, 144 pages. With colored maps of Spain and Cuba. Price 75 cents. New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls Company.

To review within the space of one hundred and forty-four pages the eventful history of Spain for two thousand years is no slight undertaking. The author has accomplished it by a series of flashlights, bringing out the salient features of Spanish character as exhibited at critical epochs of Spanish history, according to the purpose stated in the preface. The book will be found thoroughly readable, and many portions are of thrilling interest. Among the most striking chapters are: "The Conquest of Granada," "The Inquisition," "The Expulsion of Jews and Moors," "The Spaniard on the Throne," "The Spaniard in the Netherlands," and "The Spaniard on the Sea."

DIVINE HEALING AND DOCTORS; WHAT SAYS THE BIBLE? An examination of the attitude of the Biblical writers toward the use of medicines and the employment of physicians. By Rev. John Wesley Conley, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church, Oak Park, Ill. The author makes a very clear, impartial statement as to the authority given by the Bible for the rational use of material remedies for bodily ills, quoting references which the reader may examine for himself. There is no violent arraignment of the doctrine of faith cure, but an able argument, brought to a logical conclusion on the line that Christ used and recommended certain medicines, that He recognized the province of the physician, and that we can do no less so long as human ills endure than accept understandingly the remedies provided by nature, with gratitude to and faith in the Creator who has provided them.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SUGGESTION. A research into the subconscious nature of man and society, by Dr. Boris Sidis, of the New York state hospitals, with introduction by Prof. William James, of Harvard University. The subject is handled in three divisions, viz., Suggestibility; the Self; Society—the importance to the sociologist of the study of the subconscious being emphasized. While much of the book is too technical to be readily understood by the ordinary reader, and while we do not accept all the inferences drawn by Dr. Sidis, the book to the Christian philosopher—he who regards science as a revelator of religion—is of deep interest, affording food for thought along lines perhaps unsuspected by the author. It is to be commended to all thinking people as treating of a branch of research whose importance, as Professor James points out, is daily growing greater.

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

AMPHARITA, AN AMERICAN IDYLL, by the Countess de Brazza, is on the one hand, a charming story of Indian life, on the other a profound study of human nature. The hero of this true story is a famous European scientist, who, on an exploring tour through Arizona, spent several months among the Pima Bagas, an Indian tribe believed to be closely akin to the famous Aztec race. Ampharita, a sweet, shy, silent maiden, became his guide and servitor, and through her knowledge of the flora and fauna of the neighborhood rendered him invaluable assistance. The scientists' stories of life beyond the sea won her childish heart, and she begged to be allowed to accompany him thither. He lightly promised, little thinking of the depth of devotion he had aroused in her young heart. The story of her rude awakening to the fact that he was gone, of her following him, her subsequent return to her tribe, and her tragic death is most graphically told, as is also the scientists' awakening to the fact that in turning from her he had been turning from his better self and from the truer voice of his soul. The book is illustrated by the Countess de Brazza, and is said by those conversant with the region to be true to life, both in its word and picture coloring. It can not fail to interest and to elevate. It is published by the Peace Bureau of New York city.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions offered by those who are interested in the effort being put forward by the National Woman's Christian Temperance union to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it was by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and at the request of Miss Willard that she accepted the foregoing trust.

Publisher's Notes.

AUGUST BIBLE READING. "Vines and Branches," by Rev. Frances E. Townsley. Christ took His illustrations chiefly from nature. The interdependent relation of vine and branches is pointed out; also ways in which the vine of our fields or vineyards is both like and unlike Christ. The business of the branches is to bear fruit, not to make it, and there are, we are reminded, different stages of development. Stem, leaf, bud are each necessary to the perfect berry. The value of the pruning process and the importance of abiding in the vine is emphasized.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR AUGUST. "Physical Culture," by Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of that department. The connection of this work with temperance is explained and reasons given why all people—men, women and children—should take systematic physical exercise. Mrs. Leiter also tells how to arouse an interest in this subject among parents and teachers; how to start a gymnasium in a small town, where to obtain helps, and furnishes information about the department generally. The one fact alone that this branch of our work originated with Miss Willard and was often referred to by her as her "child," will kindle a desire in the hearts of W. C. T. U. women to know more about its aims and methods.

Signal Notes.

THE Total Abstinence Society of the Presbyterian church of England is engaged in drawing up a list of abstaining elders, the ministers having been classified already.

A COOKING school has been started in the reformatory at Jeffersonville, Ind. When proficient the men are paroled for six months or a year if an opportunity in a hotel is offered.

OUT of the 84 women admitted to the St. Louis insane asylum last year, 68 were from domestic service. The rest of the list comprised one clerk, one factory hand, one music teacher, one saleswoman, two seamstresses, one tobacco stemmer, six without occupation, and three unknown.

THE new private Canadian postal card is now being distributed. The design shows the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack between them. "One aim, one goal," is the inscription over the clasped hands. Columbia and Britannia sit in peace side by side—Gloria Mundi, the glory of the world, being the underline.

AGAIN, the history of wars, as well as the concurrent testimony of such officers as Generals McClellan, Dix, Gaines and Howard, go to show that the great majority of cases (Gen. Gaines says five-sixths and Gen. Dix says nine-tenths) of the crimes which are proved before courts-martial have resulted from strong drink.

THE work of salvation still goes on among Pundita Ramabai's young famine widows, at Mukti Kedgaum. Thirty-five were recently baptized in the Bhima river on the confession of their faith, by Rev. W. W. Bruere: and a son of one of the elder widows was also baptized at the same time. These baptisms make up nearly three hundred from among the widows under Pundita Ramabai's care at Mukti and Poona, within the past ten months.—The Bombay Guardian.

ONE of the most important branches of the Church of England Temperance Society is that dealing with the work annually carried on among the fruit-gatherers and hop-pickers, who leave the large towns and migrate to the country districts during the months of August and September. In addition to the missionaries who are preparing to work among these people, a small body of lady missionaries is also about to visit the Kentish districts, this being an innovation, so far as a private band of feminine workers is concerned.

THE Royal Licensing Commission, of England, the proceedings of which have been steadily made public since May, 1896, came to an end of its sittings last week. After examining as many as 260 witnesses and meeting on 123 occasions, it now remains for Lord Peel, the distinguished chairman of the commission, to submit his draft report, which it is expected, will be ready some time in November. From the trend of opinion among the members, says a London correspondent in The Christian Commonwealth, it is pretty safe to conclude that there will be some important recommendations made with regard to the reform of the licensing system. In particular, the question of grocers' and off-licenses is likely to be dealt with in a somewhat thorough-going fashion, the evidence having shown that these are a fruitful cause of inebriety among women.

Notes and Comments.

"THERE is not a rose on the bonnet of a liquor seller's wife," says Colonel Bain, "that did not cost the rose out of some other wife's cheek."

IT is stated on good authority that there are no colored saloonkeepers. If this be a fact, such record is highly creditable to the black man, for we believe there is no law, written or unwritten, which abridges his rights and privileges as a citizen in this respect.

THE strength and enthusiasm of the twenty-eighth national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union seems to have taken Boston rather by surprise. The organization has had a marked growth during the year, and, judging from its representatives at the convention, its membership is largely composed of young, energetic men and women. A leading religious paper, published in Boston, refers to the Union as "a moral force with which, as with the Christian Endeavor societies, the politicians will shortly have to reckon. And since," it points out, "so large a proportion of owners and keepers of liquor saloons are nominally Roman Catholics, the strength of this total abstinence society affords encouragement for the growth of temperance, which is not given by any other similar organization."

THE American abroad, so his critics across the water assert, loves to brag about his country and its institutions, and some of them fear that recent events will make him more boastful than ever. No one will dispute our right to be proud of our country and our countrymen, but perhaps it would do us no harm, when feeling unduly puffed up, to remember that we owe something to older civilizations—to the mother and fatherlands of Europe. As a noted divine aptly phrased it, "The men who stood before Santiago are not the product of a day or of a century; they are the rich, consummate flower of ages."

THAT the signing of the peace protocol between the United States and Spain is a matter of profound thanksgiving to all white-ribboners, it is hardly necessary to state. The people of Cuba are willing, even eager, to become "Americanos," while Spain sorrowfully resigns herself to the inevitable. The only persons who have expressed disappointment at the early termination of active hostilities are the soldiers who have had no opportunity to participate in the horrors and barbarities of war at the front. The words of President McKinley to these men are worthy of preservation as a classic utterance: "The highest tribute that can be paid to the soldier is to say that he performed his full duty. The field of duty is determined by his government, and wherever that chances to be is the field of honor. All have helped in the great cause, whether in camp or battle, and when peace comes all will be alike entitled to the nation's gratitude."

TWO important W. C. T. U. Red-Letter days occur during the month of September—World's Day and Membership Crusade Day, the latter being also celebrated as Children's Day. We urge a wide observance of these days among local unions. As a help in securing such, THE UNION SIGNAL will publish in an early issue three different programs as suggestions for public meetings., viz., a World's program, one for a children's meeting (to be held on the afternoon of September 28), and one commemorating the anniversary of our sainted leader's birth. The days intervening between September 22 and September 28, and inclusive of those dates, are, we would remind our readers, the week during which white-ribboners—W's and Y's—and Loyal Legioners make concentrated effort to secure new members. We trust that, besides increase in W. C. T. U. membership, the result of that week's work will be also a marked increase in the subscription list of THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE Chicago cigaret dealers and their friends are trying to have the one hundred dollar license fee reduced to ten dollars. The anti-cigaret forces, including the W. C. T. U., the public school teachers and all who are desirous of putting a stop, as far as possible, to the slaughter of the innocents, are as vigorously protesting against such reduction. Speaking for the Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association, the secretary of that organization says that the ordinance requiring the license was the outcome of failure on the part of a certain alderman to "hold up" the tobacco trust. The tobacco men, he declares, should be as well taken care of by the nation, state and municipality as are the liquor men, and, to that end, the association will look well after Chicago aldermen next spring, and after the political parties this fall. This is fair warning, and the anti-cigaret forces may now prepare to meet the tobacco men on their own ground. Doubtless they will themselves look well after the political candidates. Every voter among them should be sure that "his man" stands right and immovable upon this question.

THE Rev. Frank Bristol, pastor of the First M. E. church of Washington, D. C., said in a recent sermon that, comparing the twelve per cent illiteracy of the United States with the seventy-five per cent illiteracy of Spain, we may boldly declare that the victories of the war just closed were won by the schoolmaster. And this does not mean that God is to be counted out. "The more science the more God in the world's history," he truly says. And apropos of modern history he asks: "Is this a less providential age than the age of Moses? Is the electric light less providential than the pillar of fire? Is a Dakota wheat harvest less providential than a shower of manna? Is a South Carolina cotton crop less providential than the quails in the wilderness? Was the discovery of America less providential than the finding of Canaan? Was the Declaration of Independence less providential than the Decalogue of Sinai? Were the guns of Dewey and Sampson less providential than the rams' horns of Joshua, the lamps and pitchers of Gideon or the rod of Moses? Were Manila and Santiago less providential in the history of human freedom than Jericho and Ai? Is Christian civilization less providential than was Jewish barbarism?" Pertinent questions these and suggestive of the future responsibilities of this nation.

Current Events.

Our Flag Floats over Manila.

Capital of the Philippines Surrenders to Dewey and Merritt.

BEFORE the arrival of the cable dispatch proclaiming the signing of the peace protocol, Manila had fallen before a combined attack of the naval forces under Admiral Dewey and the troops commanded by General Wesley Merritt. The American loss was eight killed and forty wounded, while the Spanish loss was about three hundred. The surrender of Manila is likely to have an important bearing on the final disposition of the Philippines by the peace commission.

Hostilities have entirely ceased in Cuba and Porto Rico, and the fever-stricken troops are being brought north as rapidly as possible. Those who are able to travel have been given a thirty day furlough, that they may go home to recuperate. Gen. Joseph Wheeler is in command of Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, which is being put in perfect condition as fast as possible, and the comforts provided necessary for the welfare of the troops. The arriving soldiers are kept in quarantine for five days, to guard against the spread of yellow fever.

Sampson's fleet has arrived in northern waters, and participated in a grand naval review in New York harbor on August 20. A salute was fired at the tomb of General Grant.

Captain General Blanco has sent his resignation to the Spanish government, stating as his reason therefor that he does not wish to superintend the evacuation of Cuba. His resignation was not accepted. Provisions are now being shipped into Havana, the first since the blockade was established, four months ago. President McKinley has appointed as military commissioners for Cuba: Major General James F. Wade, Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, Major General Matthew C. Butler. For Porto Rico: Major General John R. Brooke, Rear Admiral Winfield S. Schley, Brigadier General William W. Gordon. The Madrid correspondent of the London Daily News says that Generals Blanco, Castellanos and Leon and Admiral Manterola have been appointed commissioners for Cuba and Generals Macias and Otega and Admiral Vallarino for Porto Rico. It is probable, the correspondent says, that Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador to France, will preside at the sessions of the Paris commission.

The peace commissioners for the United States have not been named as yet.

NOTES.

FIFTY years ago this summer President Polk offered to buy Cuba from Spain for $100,000,000. Queen Isabella refused the offer.

THOUSANDS of signatures to petitions are coming in to the headquarters of the national anti-canteen committee in Chicago. People in every state are anxious to petition the President to abolish the whole canteen system and keep it out of the regular army. The petitions are being put in shape to forward to Washington.

An attempt to assassinate John Hill, Jr., chairman of the anti-gambling committee of the Civic Federation of Chicago was made on August 17. A dynamite bomb was exploded in the window of Mr. Hill's sleeping-room a few minutes after two o'clock in the morning, wrecking the window casing and the interior of the room, but inflicting no injury upon Mr. Hill and his family. The perpetrators of the outrage will be brought to justice if possible.

THE successful termination of the war is to be commemorated by a magnificent peace jubilee to be held in Chicago at an early date. It will be national in character, President McKinley and his cabinet to be in attendance. A popular subscription fund of $250,000 will be raised to cover the expenses of the carnival, which will cover a week of continuous festivities. It will include a naval parade, civic parade and an industrial and historical pageant, the latter being the only concession to the advocates of a carnival. Arches are to be erected and made brilliant with electric glory. One of these will be known as the "peace arch." It is to be permanently preserved and maintained by popular subscription.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union.

THE annual convention of the C. T. A. U., at Boston, to which brief reference was made last week, was a remarkable one in many respects. About 1,800 members turned out in parade, in spite of a pouring rain, a demonstration of enthusiasm and loyalty not often excelled.

Rev. Father Thomas Scully was chairman of the meetings, and Governor Wolcott, of Massachusetts, Mayor Quincy, and many prominent clergymen occupied seats on the platform. Keen disappointment was felt at the absence of Archbishop Ireland, who sent word that it would be impossible for him to be present. The speakers included Rev. Father Scully, Governor Wolcott, President Cleary, of the National Union, First Vice-President Logue, Rev. Patrick O'Brien, of Ohio, Vicar-General Byrne and Mrs. Leonora M. Lake, third vice-president.

Rev. James M. Cleary, of Minneapolis, president of the National Union, was warmly received, and said in part:

I wish to emphasize that it is upon harmonious organization that we depend very largely for ability to cope with the powerful liquor traffic of the country.

There are two factors that we have to deal with principally, the appetite of the drinker, which often comes to be a disease, and the avarice of the liquor seller. The appetites and passions of men cannot be controlled by law; they require higher and holier influences than any legislative body can enact; they must receive the influence of conscience, religious teachings and supernatural motives. The avarice of the dealer, however, seldom yields to appeals to the conscience; it seldom yields to the appeals of religion; it requires the strong arm of the law to make it yield.

The kingdom of heaven even has no place for the drunkard, says sacred, inspired Scripture, and certainly the church of Christ on earth has no more place for him. Our union seeks no opposition to any good movement or rightful occupation, but it seeks the good, the upliftment of mankind. (Applause.)

Mrs. L. M. Lake, the third vice-president of the union, was given a grand reception as she arose in response to the splendid introduction given her by the reverend chairman. She made quite an extended address, from which we quote as follows:

Come back, please, just a moment, from Spain and its difficulties. Before we go there to take the lives of others or to have our own taken, let us give very careful consideration to the battles we have to fight at home.

We are here as total abstainers. We are here engaged in a war which, with God's blessing, shall be a peaceful war and shall have in the end a victory crowned with greater glory than that which comes over the field of battle strewn with the mangled remains of humanity. (Applause.)

I said in my report to the convention to-day that if I were asked what factor was most needed to bring about the success of the temperance movement, I should unhesitatingly reply, "Women." (Applause.) I stand by that assertion, and I know that I am right. A nation, as a river, can not rise above its source; neither can a nation rise above the virtue, intelligence, strength and character of its womanhood (applause) for women are the mothers of men. They it is who shall give to manhood and to womanhood that character which is evidenced in the after life of the young.

Woman has power to refuse her society to places which dishonor womankind by the presence of intoxicating drink. (Applause.) Woman has power, thank God, to refuse to link her life for association with a man who loves immorality and wine cups better than virtue and honor. (Applause.)

Rev. Father McMahon, national treasurer, in his report stated that the expenses for the year were $1,719 and the amount now in the treasury $1,290, which is a large increase over that of last year.

Rev. A. P. Doyle in his printed report, deals with the history of the organization since the session at St. Paul in 1894. At that time there were sixty-eight societies, with a membership of 2,663. There has been added to the national union, in five years, 473 societies and a membership of 25,901.

Temperance.

THE Congo Free State has prohibited the transport by railways of liquors to be sold to natives. The Congo railway, extending into the interior, has just been opened. The liquor business is now practically limited to coast towns.

THE annual temperance reunion at Mountain Park, Luzerne county, Pa., will take place on Tuesday, August 30. The speakers will be Dr. S. C. Swallow, candidate for governor; E. D. Nichols, candidate for lieutenant-governor; William R. Irvin, of Williamsport, and Pennsylvania's favorite W. C. T. U. speaker, Mrs. Annabel M. Holvey, of West Pittston.

GENERAL WOOD, military governor of Santiago, has caused the arrest and imprisonment of the proprietors of four cafés, for having sold liquor to soldiers.

THE United States government has just divided an order between the American Spirits and Manufacturing Company and the Standard Distilling and Distributing Company for 5,000 barrels of high-proof spirits (amounting to 250,000 gallons), to be used for army purposes.

I HAVE always strongly opposed the canteen system or the sale of intoxicating drinks of any kind on military grounds, and have opposed it until absolutely overruled and required to establish a canteen at my post. I regard it as demoralizing to the men, besides impairing seriously their efficiency.—Gen. W. R. Shafter in his letter to The Voice.

THE ideal plan of Mayor Perry, of Grand Rapids, Mich., concerning the government of saloons, is to have them under direct control of the mayor. He would not fine those who violated the laws, but revoke their licenses and close up their places of business. He would confine the liquor traffic to the business quarter of the city, give saloons the same rights as clubs and grant no license for a place with stalls or rooms set apart for women.

A MEMORANDUM, dated April 28, 1898, issued by the British war department, starts off with these words: "It will be the duty of company officers to point out to the men under their control, and particularly to young soldiers, the disastrous effects of giving way to habits of intemperance and immorality; the excessive use of intoxicating liquors unfits the soldier for active work, blunts his intelligence, and is a fruitful source of military crime."

About Women.

MRS. R. N. BUCKNER is a candidate for state superintendent of public instruction of Kansas, on the Law and Order ticket.

A RED CROSS organization has been formed in Honolulu, dating from the brief stop of the troops on their way to Manila. Mrs. Sewall, wife of the American minister, is president, and Mrs. Dole, wife of President Dole, is vice-president.

THE noted nurse of the Seneca, Miss Jennings, in speaking of her experiences and Miss Clara Barton, says: "Clara Barton made trips to the front over ten miles of hard road. Her endurance is marvelous. She never complains of fatigue, and never wants anybody to tell her that she looks tired or ask her if she feels tired. The real heroism of the war was in the hospitals."

MARGHARITA ARLINA HAMM, of New York, has just been appointed supervisor and inspector of supplies and head nurses' staff in the Red Cross department of the national guard. She will go direct to Tampa and from there to Santiago. There are about twenty auxiliaries of the national guard, under the supervision of women, and they have sent in the neighborhood of $20,000 worth of supplies to the front from different states. They now propose to make this national movement stronger and more effective in all its departments. It is in view of this proposed extension of the work that they have engaged Miss Hamm as chief superintendent.

MISS HELEN GOULD is devoting her entire time to the work of the Woman's National Relief Association, of which she is the president. Miss Gould left her beautiful home on the Hudson early in July, shortly after the battle of Santiago, and went to New York city, where, during the unprecedented heat she has been working night and day, collecting money, buying supplies, distributing them among the hospitals, etc. She has sent three shiploads of ice to Santiago at her own expense and is now having two more loaded with cargoes of 3,000 tons each. She has fitted out one relief ship at her own expense, has personally visited and inspected all of the hospitals within the limits of Greater New York at which soldiers or sailors are lying, and if they have not been furnished with every comfort that money can buy it is not her fault.

What Shall the Song Be?

BY SARAH E. SPRAGUE.

SING no song of grief and sorrow,
Breathe no tale of woe;
Gather in the sunshine tender,
Let the shadows go.

Listen to the skylark's matin,
As he wakes the day;
Soaring higher, joyous carols
Glorify the way.

Upward soar, like him, to heaven!
Ask for help and cheer;
Hold this thought as triple armor,
God is ever near—

Near with comfort, aid, and guidance,
Near to those who seek;
And His blessed angels linger
Close beside the weak,

Feeble hands to make more steady,
Timid souls more strong;
Weep not, then, nor cower dumbly,
Lift thy voice in song!

Bravely sing! If sorrows threaten,
They shall flee away,
As do shadows 'mid the sunshine
Of a perfect day.

Levi.

In Three Chapters.

BY ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS.

CHAPTER I.

"I RECKON you can't quite sense it, Levi, just how I feel about your paw's getting the mining fever. If your maw would be content to let him go off there by himself 't wouldn't be so bad—bad as 'tis, anyway; but for her and you to foller him out there—'pears like I can't stan' it, noways."

"Sho! Now granny, don't take on that-a-way; mebbe paw'll strike it rich, an' then we'll send fer you an' gran'paw, an' we'll live in a fine house an' hev ice-cream an' bananers fer dinner every day. How'd thet strike ye?"

The old lady shook her head. "No, no, Levi, yer paw won't never strike nothin' thar but the whisky saloons an' a heap o' debts, an' yer maw'll work 'er finger ends off to get you all somethin' to eat. She'll be in 'er grave, likely, in a year or so, an' I'll never set eyes on 'er agin, once she turns 'er back on old Missouri."

A dull red crept beneath the tan of the boy's face, as he answered in the slow monotone which was his habit of speech.

"Ye don't seem to take no 'count ot me, granny. Do ye 'low I'm jest goin' to set 'roun' an' whittle while maw does all the work? I ain't a little shaver no more—I'm e'en-a-most as tall as paw. Speakin' of paw—don't ye reckon maw'd think ye was a leetle mite hard on him if she'd heerd ye jest now?"

"There now, sonny, I didn't go fer to hurt yer feelin's, an' mebbe I hadn't ought to 'ave spoke jest as I did, but I'm that worried about yer maw 'pears like I can't stan' it no longer. She's growin' punier every day, an' she can't stan' up much longer agin such hard work as she's always done. It's hard enough gettin' a livin' here with her cow an' pigs an' chickens, an' a bit of a garding to help; but out there, where everything's to buy, an' robber prices at that, she's plum sure to give out."

"But, granny, wages is high out thar's well as prices, an' I tell you I'm goin' to work in place of her."

"I know ye'll do all ye kin, Levi; ye've always been right good to yer maw, but thar's things you can't shelter 'er from, an' work may not be so easy to find as ye think. You haven't no trade, you know. Did I ever tell ye how you come to be called Levi?"

"No, granny."

"Well, I've always meant to, an' now 's a good time, seein' yer goin' away from me so soon. Ye mind the story of Joseph, I've read ye so often from the good Book?"

"Yes, granny."

"Do you mind who his father was, an' how many sons he had?"

"Yes, granny, 'twas Jacob, an' he hed twelve sons."

"You've a right peart memory, an' you'll make a scholar some day, sonny. Well Levi was one of them twelve sons. You mind how Jacob wanted Rachel fer his wife, and her father made him take the oldest sister first and then work seven years more for Rachel?"

"Yes, granny—seven years fer Leah an' seven years fer Rachel— sho! thet was hard on 'im!"

"So 'twas. Well, Leah she knew he just married her 'cause he had to, but that he loved Rachel best. Well, in them days it was counted a great honor for a woman to raise a large family of boys, and Rachel didn't have no children for a long time, but Leah she had four sons pretty middlin' quick. Levi was the fourth one, and when he was born she said, 'Now my husband will be joined to me because I have borne him four sons.' So she named him Levi, which means 'joined to.' Well, when your maw was first married your paw was as likely a young man as the average in these parts, but 'twant long till he took to drink an' then her hard times begun. Her babies was all puny from the start, an' died one after another nigh as soon as they was born, until you come. You was the seventh one, and seemed heartier an' pearter than the rest. Your maw had grieved so over the others, an' seein' seven was the lucky number anyway, I jest made up my mind you'd got to live. So I got down on my knees an' wrestled in prayer all night for you to live an' be a comfort to her in her old age—fer I see yer paw was gettin' of less account every day, an' I knew there was but one end to it when a man lets drink get the better of him in place of him gettin' the better of drink—as I was sayin'—I prayed all night; an' jest as the east was gettin' red I got an answer of peace, an' knowed you was goin' to live. So I went right over to your maw's, afore my breakfast dishes was washed, and told her, an' she heartened right up and got well fast; and so I asked her to name you Levi, because the Lord had told me ye was goin' to be joined to her for a help an' comfort all her life. It's a wicked place you're goin' to, Levi, an' the temptations laid in the way of boys like you to make 'em go wrong, is awful thick an' strong, but if ye can jest keep in mind thet ye're all yer maw's got to depend on, I 'low you'll be kep' from takin' to yer paw's ways."

After a few moments of sober silence, the boy arose from the splint-bottom chair and held out his hand awkwardly, saying:

"I reckon I must be goin' now, granny; we aim to be on the road agin daylight, and there's a right smart packin' to do yet. I'm glad you told me that about my name, an' don't you never worry 'bout my goin' back on maw; here's my hand on it. Good-by, granny; be good to yourself; I wish you was goin' along."

"That can't never be, I reckon, sonny. Gran'paw's rheumatiz is too bad fer 'im ever to take sech a journey; ye'll find him out to the barn as ye go by. Here's them sorghum cakes I promised fer yer lunch. Good-by, honey; ye can't sense how it hurts yer old granny to see ye go."

The boy returned his grandmother's kiss sheepishly, wiping his mouth with the back of his hand when the ceremony was over; but there was a queer feeling in his throat and a mist before his eyes as he looked back at the bent, gray-haired figure, with face hidden in her blue check apron.

The old lady's prophecy about Levi's father proved too true. Bravely as the boy tried to support his mother, he found it by no means so easy a task as he had hoped. Work was indeed plenty and wages good, but men looking for employment far outnumbered the "jobs," especially in such things as Levi could do, for, though strong and willing, he was, as his grandmother had said, skilled in no trade. For women's work, however, there was good demand, and the mother toiled early and late at her washtubs. When the boy remonstrated, she gave him uncompromising figures to show how necessary to their daily bread was the income from the tubs. Then he would shake his head dubiously, shoulder a bundle of freshly ironed clothes ready for delivery, and remark, as he shuffled from the door,

"Don't look fer me early; I'm goin' to try to hunt up another job."

Oftener than not, however, he would return discouraged and tired with fruitless tramping over the town and "prospect"-riddled hills.

"They ain't no use, maw. I'll have to help with the wash agin to-morrow; hit's the best I kin do for ye; nobody wants no hands."

And the brave mother would answer cheerily, "There, now, honey, don't ye worry no more. Ye're a real comfort an' help if ye don't git no jobs."

But finally a job came. It was of an unexpected nature but proved the best paying one the boy had found. A man who had platted an "addition" to the town and was going to build several log houses to rent, offered him a lease of a cheap lot with material to build himself a house, the whole amount to be payable in work. The lease was to cover a period of five years with the privilege of paying for the lot in small installments in the meantime. Levi's feet scarcely touched the ground as he ran home to tell his mother the good news.

"Why it's jest the same as cash, you see, fer it'll save the rent!" he said eagerly. "An' then if work's dull or you git sick, we've got a home anyway!"

"But I misdoubt if ye can build a house all by yerself, honey. If ye could persuade your paw to leave them prospect holes a spell and lend a hand, it might be done. 'Twould be an awful comfort to hev a home of our own—no mistake."

"An we'll have it too!" said Levi decisively. "If paw won't help, I'll trade works with some other feller to help put up the logs. I kin do the rest after I've had practice on the other houses. The contract is, I'm to help him build two houses an' then stop long enough to build ours."

The boy was as good as his word and in two months' time they were settled in their new home, which proved much more comfortable than the loose board shanty, for which eight hard earned dollars must be paid each month.

Colorado Springs, Col.

Address Presenting the Bust of Miss Willard to the Northwestern University, by Albert J. Beveridge, of Indianapolis.

[We regret that the publication of this address should have been so long delayed, but the copy did not reach us until just before vacation. We are sure, however, that our readers will be glad to have it even at this late day.]

FRANCES E. WILLARD was the conscience of the nineteenth century incarnate. She proved that the most practical age of the world can produce the most effective idealist of history. She was like no other character, and yet like all the mighty ones of earth. She was Savonarola or Lincoln or Gladstone or even Disraeli in her practical sense, or any of a hundred of history's elect as situation revealed the numberless phases of her character. No other type is historically large. Greatness in a single quality is littleness after all. The eternal analogy holds, and only that character is satisfying which resembles nature in its infinity and variety. And Frances E. Willard was a consummate blending of courage and tenderness, of poetic idealism and of practical efficiency, of humor and pathos, of pity and resolve, of laughter and tears, of audacity and tact, of heroism and craft—child, woman, warrior, comforter, general, sage, and seer—and the single motive of this peerless soul was the present salvation of the world. Her life was a poem, whose purpose was to prove that heaven exists hereafter by making human life angelic here. She was the spirit of the times working along the lines of righteousness. She was the spirit of salvation in harmony with the business spirit of the age. No matter how great, he who is not in tune with the life and methods of his time is merely wasted force.

This highest product of American life devoted her powers to morals. But she was a Napoleon of morals. She was an Edison of human character. She was a dreamer who achieved, a thinker who got things done. She knew that a thought is only an abstraction, only a possibility at best, and that nothing is effectual but a fact. She understood that execution is the final and only real test. Our age is creative. He who to-day is not a builder belongs to another time and race. This is the period of organization.

The higher human intelligence, the more perfect human confidence, the more comprehensive and complete is organization.

Bismarck is the type of our time, the apostle of our age. Frances E. Willard was the Bismarck of the forces of righteousness in modern society. She was the greatest organizer of sweetness and light that ever blessed mankind. A single day of her effort was worth all the essays Matthew Arnold ever wrote. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the world is one of the marvels of the creations of constructive genius. Other great organizers have had something to begin with—a party, a government, an army, a treasury. But this queen of organization had nothing but her cause, her ability and her imperial will. Deeds alone are crowned by history, and so the life of Frances E. Willard will be counted royal to the end of time. She was the typical American character. She did not live one hundred years ago nor one hundred years hence; she lived to-day; she wrought to-day; she made the world better at the present hour.

What are the elements of the typical American character? A courage which rises to daring, a keenness which penetrates like a sunbeam, an ingenuity and fertility of resource which have rendered the word "impossible" obsolete, the glorious optimism of faith, hope and charity acting in the human heart—are not these the significant qualities of Freedom's chosen people, and are they not precisely the distinguishing and world recognized characteristics of her we honor to-day? It is an ultimate utterance, I know, but to me Frances E. Willard is the typical American character. The poise of Washington, the creative mind of Hamilton, the political sagacity of Jefferson, the unyielding will of Jackson, the tenderness and human quality of Lincoln, and the purity of soul and thought and speech of the American home—is not this the superb sum of qualities whom we knew and loved as Frances E. Willard? I can think of no quality distinctively characteristic of our people which she had not. She was a composite photograph of her countrymen. She was the nation in miniature. That is the divine secret of her matchless power.

Men say that we are a people of peace. It is a saying profoundly false. At heart we are the most militant people that ever bore a flag to victory. The American child asks for a uniform with the first words he utters. A sword is his favorite plaything, and the banner of the republic is his chiefest joy. Aggression is our inheritance. Combat is the command of our blood. Conquest of some kind—of business, of the forces of nature, of old abuses, but still conquest—is the note to which our hearts beat like drums. There is enough heroism in America to-day panting for opportunity to make history for a hundred worlds during a hundred ages. Part of this is due to liberty. Liberty is the opportunity and command for every individual to assert his cause. Assertion means combat. Frances E. Willard was all of this. Her entire life was one long campaign. Her warfare was as real as Gettysburg. The incident of bloodshed is not essential. Who that knew Frances E. Willard doubts that she was capable even of the physical daring of Admiral Dewey or the immortal young hero of Santiago, had circumstances so willed? And who that knew her, who that has studied her life and work, doubts the genius of generalship, of martial comprehensiveness and command coiled up in her woman's brain? Nothing proves her so true a type of American character as this; her life was a truceless warfare, a conflict of extermination even, and never a day did she know that, for her, the bugles of heaven sounded not the charge. And she died as history would have had her die, leading a forlorn hope to discharge a duty which only an angel's conscience could perceive to be a duty. Miss Willard was a universal character, a world force, an instrument of eternity. She was a cosmopolitan Puritan.

It is a maxim of practical politics that a permanent party can not be builded on a single issue. This is a truth as broad as human thought and character. The Master illustrated it by teaching, not one but all the virtues. It is illustrated too, by the catholic life of this favorite daughter of liberty. She stood, not for a single phase of truth, but for all the truth. She was the advocate of the universally true and good. She was as comprehensive as the skies. If she gave especial effort to a particular subject it was because she felt that it lay nearest to her hand and that God called her to do it first. What the hour and situation made a duty, that she did. But she was the teacher of all righteousness, the organizer of all purity, and the lover of all the world. The only lives whose memories will survive the destroying years, are the lives of those who have blessed the world—those who have brought healing and solace to their fellow men. "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," are the sweetest words that ever fell on human ears.

Life is too full of pain to linger over the deeds of history's monsters and fiends. Mankind will at last remember only those who have shed sweetness and beauty and joy on the weary world. Scan the list of these and tell me who stands nearer the ineffable One than this gentle lady, who, in an age of iron and steel, founded an imperishable empire of affection.

And it is for these reasons, deep as fate and enduring as time, that Mr. Shaffer begs this University to accept this work of art that permanently reproduces the features of the glorious woman that America and Illinois and Evanston and this noble institution gave to the world, humanity and history. The lesson these voiceless lips shall teach to countless generations yet unborn will be the lesson of the age: "The doing of good is the highest good; being good is not enough."

Spain and Civil Service Reform.

BY JOSEPHINE SHAW LOWELL.

THE "dying" of a nation is a tragic sight. The dying of Spain, the discoverer and once the owner of the greater part of the western hemisphere, her death throes upon the very spot where Columbus landed and where he lies buried, is a tragedy which this nation could not watch unmoved, even were it not the instrument used to give the death blow. But Spain presents not merely a tragic spectacle to the people of the United States, it furnishes also a lesson and a warning.

This country is called upon to end the long agony, but Spain has been wounded unto death by her own sons. She is a dying nation because of internal corruption and dishonesty, and the description of the causes of her ruin has an ominously familiar sound to American ears. We have in Spain the spectacle of a nation which conducts its government upon the principles which control Tammany Hall and the Republican and Democratic machines. Not only its civil service, but its army and its navy have for generations been treated as "spoils," and the result is before us. We know well what incompetency, what weak inefficiency are the necessary outcome of such principles, and it is not to be wondered at that Spain has failed in every direction. The whole sad story is summed up in the words spoken by Don Carlos, at Brussels, on the 9th of May:

"The incidents in Cuba and Manila have revealed neglected defenses, venal administration, a prevalent substitution of personal for national interests, corruption fostered by party government, generously voted millions diverted from the fulfillment of their patriotic purpose to the pockets of fraudulent contractors and dishonest state employés, and disorder, peculation and mendacity in every department of the public service."

But the corruption of Spain is not a new growth. Mr. Charles Bonaparte told only the facts when he said at a civil service reform meeting in New York, on May 4:

"No experience could be more instructive as to the evils of the 'spoils system' than our enemy's. For the past four hundred years Spain has systematically treated appointments in her colonial civil service as 'spoils'—that is to say, as rewards for success in palace intrigues or political struggles—bestowed upon the protégés of court favorites and party leaders, with little, if any, regard for the appointees' fitness or the interests of the people they should serve. Through the persistent application of this policy she retains, of the vast possessions which were once hers by right of discovery, only the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico, all three seething with discontent, and the first two in chronic rebellion. By treating public office in her dependencies as a 'private snap' she has irretrievably forfeited the affection and loyalty of their people; nor has she proved any better able to enforce their permanent submission. Her military impotency is due in a large measure to the fact that for the past eighty years the Spanish army has 'gone into politics'; in its barracks have been hatched numberless plots against successive governments, and nearly all its more prominent officers have figured in changes (actual or attempted) of administration or dynasty. The corruption of her public service, civil and military, has cost Spain a world."

At the same meeting Mr. Carl Schurz confirmed from his own knowledge Mr. Bonaparte's statement: "The battle that has just been won off Manila," he said, "was a battle between a 'civil service reform' navy and a 'spoils' navy. I hope that whatever may result from this war, undesirable as it is, it will at least convey this lesson to the American people."

The testimony of another American Minister to Spain is to the same effect. Mr. James Russell wrote from Madrid on May 4, 1879:

"One thing I have remarked here, not without serious foreboding. I mean the analogy between the Spanish civil service, with its inevitable results, and our own. Politics here is a scramble for office. Leaders, therefore, represent not a principle, but simply a chance. A government once in power cooks the elections to its fancy, and there is absolutely no way to change except through a pronunciamento." And again, later, Mr. Lowell wrote from London: "Spain shows us to what a civil service precisely like our own will bring a country that ought to be powerful and prosperous. It was not the Inquisition, nor the expulsion of the Jews and Moriscos, but simply the boss system that has landed Spain where she is."

The following extract from "Europe's New Invalid," by John Foreman, reprinted in Littell's Living Age, from the National Review in September, 1897, only emphasizes the preceding statements:

"Any one is eligible to civil service if he can only 'catch the eye' of the man in power with the right 'influences,' or the consideration of a discount on the salary. Hundreds go out to Cuba and the Philippine Islands on this last condition, against which they can not demur, for, if they did, the same influence which virtually appointed would cause the cesantia (cessation of office) to be cabled out. No civil service examinations are held, and no special personal qualification is necessary for a colonial appointment in the far East or the far West. Of the hundreds of officials whom I have known, not one had the most elementary notion of Tagalog or Visaya (the native languages of the Philippine Islands) at the time of their appointment, and not one in fifty took the trouble to learn either language afterwards. Why should they? They are here to-day, in another colony next year, and finally sunning themselves in the puerta del Sol in Madrid waiting for the new favorites who have superseded them to be, in turn, shifted by their 'protectors.' . . . . Spaniards are patriotic insomuch as relates to love of country as an abstract theory. But their patriotism is very much subordinated to personal interest, and is no check to peculation. . . . Where is the true devotion to the welfare of the fatherland in those friars who stubbornly hold the Philippines, knowing full well that their presence is an obstruction to the colony's progress?"

As I have said, the "dying" of Spain is a tragedy, but to the people of the United States it is more than a tragedy. The lesson is "writ large" that all may see. The destruction of two fleets because of incompetence and dishonesty—because of moral rottenness producing physical ruin—is a demonstration which none can fail to understand. But we have also the corollary, far more welcome and more glorious. The American people see in their own navy the result of a careful selection of men for a special service, the result of the long and arduous training of these men for the work they have to do, and the result of the assurance given them by their country that the service they enter on in youth, and to which they devote their manhood, is an honorable service. In the United States army we find the same results from the same system. The people have heard but little of either army or navy for a generation, and yet now, when they are needed, heroic men start forth ready to do heroic deeds, and the American people reap the glory. There is no question that, had the American people so willed it, they could have had just such men to fill their civil service and their diplomatic service.

The question now is, will the people take to heart the lesson and join England in her advance in civilization, humanity, and honor, or will they follow Spain? Shall we have all our public work, naval, military, civil, and diplomatic, done by our Deweys, our Hobsons and our Merritts, or by the henchmen of our Hannas, Quays, and Hills?

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

THANK God that He hears prayer and souls are being converted from day to day in Willard Hall. Fifty-one testimonies in five minutes expressed the gladness which comes to a life consecrated to the service of the Lord. A workingman who had prayed for two years for the conversion of a fellow workman came in to rejoice that the man had found remission of sins. A foreign lady, in the home where she was visiting, found the Bible open on a little table in the sitting-room, where every member of the family could, and did, go to get their daily helps. She thinks that all Christian homes in America should do that way. Suppose we housekeepers try this plan!

A wayward son and his brokenhearted mother was brought to our notice during the prayer hour. A boy without a friend in this country asked for work and encouragement.

A sister asked prayer for a saloonkeeper that he might be convicted of sin. He does not fear churches or missions, but does fear those women with the white ribbon, for "when they begin to push they go clear through things." This brought an ex-saloonkeeper to his feet who said, "God convicted him and had saved him, even though he had engaged in that nefarious business. Blessed be the God of all mercies."

A boy said, "It is grand to stand for Christ." A mother from Michigan testified that the Holy Spirit takes all the yelling and snarling out of the home, and makes husband, wife and boys tender and helpful.

Another brother expressed his sentiments in the words of the old woman who was so happy when converted that she said, "The Lord shall never hear the end of this." A dear old man sang one verse of the hymn, "Saviour, lead me lest I stray," and brought tears to many eyes. A white-headed old man, who the day before was graciously converted, knelt by the side of a young man who was weeping and praying for God's blessing. He just put the withered old hand on the lad's head and stroked it. Peace and comfort came. Oh, this human touch which softens hearts and is akin to the divine touch of Christ!

After the meeting a young man from the country came to sign the pledge. He said he came to Chicago with three hundred dollars in his pocket, went into a saloon just for a moment, with a man, and joined a group playing cards. They quarreled and the young man's money was taken. Some one said, "Did you not know better than to be in such company?" "Yes, but I thought I was so wise I could not be overcome. It was an expensive lesson." Will the boys never learn that they are only safe when in good company which respects God and His laws! Let us educate our children more thoroughly in this line.

Our School of Methods at Chautauqua, New York.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Beautiful Chautauqua never before seemed quite so beautiful, and never were there so many devout pilgrims worshiping at its shrines. Every available room is occupied, and the management, on Saturday evening, was obliged to appeal, from the platform, to the cottage holders for the accommodation of those who had arrived by the late boats. It is said to be the first time this has happened since the day of small things. It is estimated that there are from fifteen to twenty thousand people upon the grounds, and the streets, at the close of a lecture in the amphitheater, are like a crowded city thoroughfare, save that, instead of the jostling push and selfish hurry of the city, one sees only beaming good temper and sweet, wholesome kindliness. Indeed, a Chautauqua audience before, during, and after a lecture is a model in more ways than one. There is a sense in which to speak before it is a "liberal education." If the education came along no other line one would be able henceforth to gauge with a tolerable degree of accuracy the interest or lack of interest inherent in a particular address. A Chautauqua audience is very easily "moved," and the moving power seems sometimes to lead in the direction of the various exits of the amphitheater. If one holds his audience through an entire address he may count himself among the favored of fortune, and may be assured that one of the most difficult of oratorical fields has been won.

There has been a great variety of talent upon the Chautauqua platform this season. Wit has sparkled and eloquence has charmed. Music has held the senses enthralled, and logic has wrought its perfect work in convincing the questioning mind. There have been concerts galore, with recitations and entertainments of various kinds interspersed between the more solid pabulum. There are few, if any, spots on earth where "many men of many minds" may each find something fitted for his individual need so fully as he finds it at Chautauqua. Here the grave and the gay, the studious and the indolent, the housewife and the artist, the musician and the athlete, the reformer and the conservative, may each find his "portion of meat in due season." A series of "Chautauqua Sketches" from the various standpoints of a dozen or more guests would be a most interesting study. It is to be questioned if the Chautauquan of the hotel, or the gymnasium would recognize the Chautauquan of the cottage and the Normal Hall. Doubtless there are as many distinct Chautauquas as there are people who resort hither, since just what one person sees, anywhere, no other can ever hope to see.

White-ribboners have seen wonderful things here this season, and we could at times almost persuade ourselves that we were in attendance upon one of our own conventions or summer schools. One need not even visit our cozy parlor in Kellogg Memorial Building, where Mrs. Addie Northam Fields is the presiding genius, in order to be made to realize that the tie between the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Chautauqua is one of closest kinship. If one goes into the woman's club, its president, Mrs. B. T. Vincent, wears the white ribbon; if into the cooking school, Mrs. Emma C. Ewing, a member of the union, greets him; if to the hotel, Miss Emily C. Martin may be seen flitting about among the guests, the silent witness of our badge always supplementing her words; if to the cottages, he may enter the homes of Mrs. Alden ("Pansy"), Mrs. Irwin, Mrs. Barrett, or countless others I cannot enumerate, in each one of which he will find our badge of purity and of power.

The daily program, too, is not without its testimony to this close relationship. Our seven o'clock vesper service holds always its place among the announcements, as have the five temperance conferences which I have conducted in the Hall of Philosophy, under the auspices of the Woman's Club. Nothing could exceed the kindness and courtesy which since the beginning we have received from the management. We are constantly made to feel that "we all belong," and that the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is one of the many Christian and reform forces which find at Chautauqua a congenial climate and luxuriant soil. May it be more and more a gathering place for the clans as the years go on!

Our distinctive temperance work began on August 3. At 9 A. M. we held a conference in the Hall of Philosophy on "The Relation of Temperance Work to Foreign Missions." As this immediately followed the missionary institute it was most timely and was made especially interesting by the presence of several missionaries from the foreign field, who all bore unflinching testimony to the fact that the greatest foes the missionary contends with are the liquor traffic and the drink curse.

In the afternoon Colonel Bain delivered, to a fine audience, his magnificent lecture on "The New Woman and the Old Man." Fully two hundred white-ribboners were present and seats were reserved for them in the center of the house. A heavy shower detracted somewhat from the impressiveness of our procession from Kellogg Hall, but rather enhanced the impressiveness of Colonel Bain's words. The audience listened in an almost breathless attention, and its sympathy was expressed by the way in which they crowded about the Colonel at the close, and followed him to the informal reception tendered him in our room.

On Thursday morning Dr. Crafts opened our conference on "The Rationale of the Do-Everything Policy," and gave a most inspiring address. On Friday we discussed the subject of Purity at our morning conference; at our seven o'clock meeting Dr. Beardsley, of Connecticut, gave an admirable address on "The Tobacco Slave," and in the evening we felt that the climax of the day's work had been reached in the amphitheatre address by Prof. J. B. De Motte, on "The Harp of the Senses." To hear the truths which the W. C. T. U. is giving itself to promulgate, set forth from the clear standpoint of science, and with a burning eloquence which held the vast audience spellbound long past the ordinary limits of an address, was, to some of us weary white-ribboners, a revelation and an inspiration. I felt as if I had grown ten years younger just through the knowledge that such truths are being presented throughout the length and breadth of our land by this knight of the new chivalry. Surely in Professor De Motte the W. C. T. U. has a most powerful ally, of whom many of us had not known. I believe we shall all know and appreciate his work hereafter.

No conferences are held on Saturday, but on Monday morning Mrs. Alden opened the subject of "Mothers' Meetings in the W. C. T. U.," and Professor De Motte followed with a powerful plea for the proper training of our boys and girls. Our last conference was held this morning (Tuesday) in the form of a "Question Drawer," though I am to address the Woman's Club to-morrow morning on "Life in a Crowded City Center."

On Thursday morning I speak before the Boys' Club on "Child Life in Our Crowded Cities," and though I had intended to leave after to-morrow's meeting, I shall remain until after Sunday, that I may speak of Miss Willard at the memorial service on Sunday afternoon.

The daily meetings in our room are well attended, and are centers of a very genuine interest. They comprise prayer-meetings, department conferences, and once each week a social. Mrs. Wittenmeyer led one of the meetings since I have been here. Last night Miss Rhena Mosher led, and to-night Mrs. Crafts will speak on "Temperance Work in the Sunday-school." On Thursday a reception is to be tendered to the women of the Woman's Club. Free literature is constantly upon our tables; ice-water wooes our friends who may be athirst; pictures, easy chairs and a couch all combine to make our own one of the most attractive rooms upon the grounds, while Mrs. Fields is an ideal hostess.

Our gratitude should rise anew each year for the generosity which gave Kellogg Hall to Chautauqua and to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. More and more, too, should white-ribboners the country over determine that our annual conferences on this historic spot, so closely associated with the birth of our organization, shall be second only in importance to our National Convention itself.

Yours to help make them so,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

The World's Sunday-school Convention.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—This notable occasion in London from July 12 to 16, was one long to be remembered by those who were privileged to attend the meetings. The United States delegates nearly all took passage on the Catalonia, sailing from Boston, June 29.

Devotional meetings and Sunday-school conferences were held daily. It was my privilege to request the leader of one of the devotional meetings to ask all members of the W. C. T. U. to rise. A number did so, and white ribbons were furnished to some who, with others, wore them during the convention.

In traveling from Liverpool to Chester in the cars, my white ribbon was the means of a very helpful conversation with two ladies who also wore the same badge.

On Wednesday evening, July 6, a fire was discovered in the hold of the Catalonia, in the cotton. So admirable was the discipline among the sailors and officers, so quietly and firmly did the captain give his orders, that there was no excitement and no outcry. The calm demeanor and self-control among nearly all of the two hundred and fifty passengers, were what might be expected of those who trust and obey the "Great Captain" of our salvation.

For some time the fire increased, for the source was not easily found. Never have we more fully realized that our help comes always from God, and the twin thought, the need of effort that prayer may be answered. At last bales of burning cotton were cast into the sea, and a great cry of gratitude went up to God from every heart when it was announced that the danger was over. Soon after, all gathered on deck and sang, as never before, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

The next day the sum of $300 was raised by the passengers, to be divided among the sailors, and a Bible, purchased in London, was given later to Captain Stevens. We had hoped to reach Liverpool in time to be in London on Sunday, July 10, but as we arrived on the morning of that day, it was much enjoyed in the former city.

The next day the party proceeded to London, and attended a reception by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and in the evening a reception at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress.

The convention opened on Tuesday morning, July 12. Enthusiastic words of welcome were spoken by the Marquis of Northampton, Mr. Belsey, and Mr. Towers, of London, the latter being chosen chairman of the convention. Rev. Dr. Spalding, of Boston, responded for the United States, Hon. L. H. Blake, for Canada, and others for different countries.

For that day and evening reports were given of Sunday-school work in different countries. On Wednesday the sessions were held at Crystal Palace. In the afternoon a concert was given by four thousand Sunday-school children of London. White-ribboners will be glad to know that the temperance committee of London made a "stipulation that no alcoholic drinks were to be for sale" on that day at Crystal Palace.

On the next day Dr. Parker, of City Temple, who has spoken at that place for many years on Thursdays at noon, preached the Convention sermon. It was one of great eloquence and power. Among other topics, "The Home Department," "Bible Study at Home," "Grading and Management," "The Book, "The Teacher," and "The Child" received careful consideration during the convention. In the excellent report of Sunday-school work in the United States, by Mr. B. F. Jacobs, read by Mr. McCrilbi, of Providence, R. I., he says: "Our three giant foes are ignorance, intemperance and impurity. We are active in our opposition to ignorance, and have been half awakened to see the danger of intemperance, but are for the most part asleep as to the danger of impurity.

"We can not afford to omit the temperance question, and we urge upon the teachers of all our Sunday-schools, the importance of teaching and training our children and youth to be firm and consistent temperance men and women, and to be haters of the abominable traffic in every form."

Bands of Hope are connected with many Sunday-schools in London, Liverpool and other cities of England, and the last Sunday in November is observed in many places as Temperance Sunday.

This grand convention, in every way a success, cannot fail to be the means of strengthening the bonds of friendship between England and America, as well as of other nations, and must be far-reaching in awakening parents and teachers as to the grave responsibilities shared by all who in any way have an influence over the young.

"God Touched Her and She Slept."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The life on earth of Madam Ellen Louise Demorest is ended. The earnest and faithful white-ribboner is no more here to preside at Carnegie union, and when the New York state convention meets she will not fill the place to which she was elected as a delegate. On the evening of the 10th of August she fell asleep. The comatose condition into which she had several times fallen, was changed to the sleep that knows no waking. While she was quietly breathing her last in her beautiful city home, surrounded by dear ones whose hearts were sorrowful at her departure, a street musician beneath the window of the room where the solemn event was transpiring, all unconscious of its sweet and comforting significance, played upon the flute the well-known music of the hymn,

"Safe in the arms of Jesus."

The funeral services were held on August 13, at the Hotel Renaissance, and were very largely attended. Many came from long distances to be present. The officiating minister was the Rev. Phebe A. Hanaford, a vice-president of Carnegie union and a member of Sorosis with Madam Demorest for twenty-six years. Miss Clara Stutsman and her niece, Miss Floy Allen, with two other ladies, formed a quartette which sang selections, one of which was the familiar hymn, "Asleep in Jesus." Miss Stutsman is also a member of Sorosis. Her rendering of "The Lord is my Shepherd," touched every heart. Mrs. Demorest loved to hear her sing, and it was, therefore, a special gratification that she could be present. The address of the occasion will be published, and it is therefore sufficient to say that it had reference to the character and work of the departed, and recognized the loss which the family and the reform movements have sustained, while at the same time it spoke of the divine comfort, and encouraged the hope that Charles Wesley was right when he declared, "God buries the workman but carries on the work."

The precious dust of our sister in the W. C. T. U. was borne tenderly to Kensico, some thirty miles from New York city, and placed in the same tomb where rest the remains of her brave reformer husband, the late William Jennings Demorest. They labored faithfully together for temperance, prohibition and freedom, and won a high place in the hearts of all lovers of humanity. Now their forms repose in the granite tomb which crowns a hilltop in the beautiful cemetery. "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in death they are not divided."

Many and beautiful were the flowers which symbolized the love and hope of those who sent them. The county W. C. T. U. was represented by a beautiful bouquet; and wreaths, crosses, crowns and doves were manifold, representing other societies. Sorosis had its own large and beautiful wreath, with its memorial ribbon. On both sides the sea Madam Demorest will be mourned and missed, and Lady Henry Somerset, Anna Gordon and the National and World's W. C. T. U. were represented in those flowers, which are, as Longfellow said,

'Emblems of our own great resurrection,
Emblems of the bright and better land."

Thus another of those who stood by our beloved leader's dying bed has gone to join her in the heavenly home. Their work in the flesh is done, but Frances Willard and Ellen Louise Demorest will never be forgotten. "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." P. A. H.

WHEN a noble life has prepared old age, it is not the decline that it reveals, but the first days of immortality.—Madame de Stael.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty.—I John 5:4; I Cor. 1:27.

MRS. W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, vice president of the Temple Trustees, and from the first formation of the board one of its most able members, after an illness of almost three months, on the evening of August 10, closed her eyes on the scenes of earth and joined the throng of illustrious and promoted white-ribboners. It is with a sad heart that I write these lines, for I loved the strong, noble, outspoken, able woman, who always had the courage of her convictions. From the first inception of the Temple she was its zealous friend and advocate. She was among the number who came from New York to attend Miss Willard's funeral. After the sad rites we had a Temple Trustees' meeting, and Mrs. Demorest was made vice-president of the board, a position which Miss Willard had before filled. She was full of plans for the Temple, and was busy at work carrying them out when she was so suddenly stricken. A letter I received from her daughter the very day she died, contains the following: "I do know how much interest and belief mother had in the future of the Temple, and you would have her sympathy and support could she give it."

Chicago with its never ending distractions, has by me been left behind, and I have taken up my abode for a couple of weeks of much needed rest on the western shore of Lake Michigan. The restless waters of the great lake sing a continuous lullaby to my weary spirit which is most refreshing. But other voices than those of nature reach my ear from the outer world.

✠

Our brave Clara Parrish writes from Tokio, Japan: "Thank you so much for the beautiful, beautiful picture of Miss Willard. The women will canvass for it at once. Their enthusiasm in raising money for 'The House Beautiful' keeps up wonderfully well; many missionaries are contributing, so we hope to send enough to help a little."

The following extract is from a letter written from San Francisco, Cal., by Miss Murcutt, of Australia, who was a delegate to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention at Toronto last year. She is a fine speaker, and has been filling engagements with great acceptability in Canada since the Convention. She writes: "Enclosed please find $25 which I pledged to the Temple fund. Were my purse as large as my heart you would find the amount which would make this sacred building ours entirely. What more fitting monument indeed, could there be to the memory of our sainted leader than this expression in brick and mortar of the sentiments of her royal mother heart and the principles of her beautiful life? By all that is most sacred the building is ours, and now that the mortal remains of Saint Frances have lain there in state, the Temple has been sanctified to the great society for the work of which our Chieftain laid down her life."

Mrs. Annett A. Gibson, state president of the W. C. T. U. of Tennessee, takes a right view in regard to the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds. She writes: "The payment of the Temple Trust Bonds is a debt of honor, and should be met. . . I trust there may be hearty support of the plan the Temple Trustees suggest for raising money until the bondholders are paid off."

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Like a Man.

BY EVA JONES.

JACK and Fred, cousins and cronies, had been doing a splendid morning's fishing in one of the loveliest, shadiest nooks along Rocky Run, and now, with keen, boyish appetites, were devouring the good lunch their mothers had put up, along with one of the fish they had just been broiling.

"Prime, isn't it?" said Jack. "Pretty happy old world, any way," stretching himself along the grass, his lunch finished, "full of good times if you only know just how to take them."

"You and I have little cause to complain, I'm sure," said Fred, "only sometimes, when I see other boys and their fathers, I wish mine could have lived." For Fred and Jack were sons each of a widowed mother, John and Ferdinand Brownell having established homes side by side in the pretty town of Milford, only to go on to their better home before their only sons were fairly old enough to realize a father's help and care.

A little bit of silence, and then Fred continued. "We're both in our teens now, and going through school a flying, and before we know it, we'll be grown ups, sure enough. I hope when we come to be men that we can be as successful at what we want to do as we have been this morning fishing," with a satisfied glance at the shining basketful.

They did not know that another fisherman, Dr. Jamison, one of their best and most admired friends, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school which they attended, had also come to Rocky Run this morning, and was just settling himself comfortably for a half hour of sport on the other side of the ledge and big clump of alders which hid him from their view, and he had as little idea of their presence—when, after full five minutes of still thinking, Jack said,

"Yes, men we'll soon be and a real one I'm going to strike out for. Fred, now solemn truth and no fooling, do you believe that women know so very exactly always about what goes to make a manly man? For instance, there's mother—best mother in the world—I believe sometimes fairly wishes I were a girl. And if I were, I would not doubt but she could tell me just how to be the very nicest kind of a woman, for she is one herself. But you see I'm to be a man, and she has never just been there, and I can't take her for a copy then, and how should she know always just all about it? Now she is afraid I shall some time or other smoke cigars. But, Fred, look at the notion. Women don't smoke, and of course they look at it from their point of view. But men, the great majority of them, do.

"The handsomest, healthiest looking and most popular men in town nearly all smoke, more or less," Jack went on. "I've heard some of them say that it's almost awkward not to, the social practice of smoking together is so common. Some folks pretend to hate the smell of it, but I don't. I'm sure I could learn to smoke in no time at all, only mother begs me not. But some time I'm about decided I will, after a bit, when I've had plenty of time to explain the other view to mother. Why, the other day, in one of the campaign books of last year, a biography of President McKinley, I read that he did more hard, continuous, mental labor, at certain times in his senatorial work, than almost any one, sleeping but very little out of the twenty-four hours, and that he was only enabled to do it by the help of his cigars, keeping a box by his side, and having one in his mouth almost constantly. Now I mean to be a lawyer or a doctor some time, I've not quite decided which, and about all the lawyers we know smoke, and seem to find no harm in it, and a good many of the doctors.

"And doctors, now," Jack wasn't preaching, he was just lying on his back and thinking out loud, as he often did, when he had so dear and good a listener as Fred to encourage him. Jack had heard Fred on this subject before, and was answering, one after another, arguments he had heard Fred make. "And doctors, now—they of course know what's healthy and unhealthy better than any one else, and see how many of them smoke. And as for its being morally wrong, why, at the camp-meeting we went to this very summer, there were actually ministers, men of prominence there, who smoked, and there are plenty of church members in most any church who use tobacco in one form or another. Women, of course, don't want to smoke. They're women, and that settles it. I would not have Bess smoke any more than mother would, but—well, I'll tell you what I've made up my mind to. If Dr. Jamison, splendid, successful and good in judgment as he is, smokes, I'm not going to be afraid to try it, and see what help and pleasure there is in it. I shall take Dr. Jamison as my pattern. Of course there are plenty of worthless, low down men who use tobacco, and maybe half kill themselves with it, but so they eat bread and butter and pie and cake if they can get it, and sometimes make pigs of themselves, but I guess men like Dr. Jamison don't copy after them. If the low-lived truck alone used it, that would settle the question for me. But as it is, I'll risk trusting such examples as President McKinley and Dr. Jamison. Now, Fred, isn't that reasonable?"

Fred, who had done some wiser thinking, urged how General Grant and Emperor Frederick, with many less celebrated men, had died of tobacco cancer, and how insurance companies would not insure a man with "tobacco heart," how poisonous nicotine is, how selfish one grows using it, how insensible and indifferent to the disgust of others, and how even good men might make mistakes.

But Jack said, "Very good theory, but I'm sure such a man as Dr. Jamison would not go straight on setting the example to us boys and running the risk of injury to himself if some of these charges against tobacco were not overstated. He has tried it, and he must know, and if it were not more pleasant and good than it is dangerous, he would drop it. It stands to reason. No, when he condemns it, I'll believe it."

And what was the "man who must know" on the other side of the alder clump doing all this time? Not much fishing, I assure you. For you must know, in spite of his cigars, he was a Christian. At one time in Jack's talk, he had been upon the point of hurrying away in shame before he should be discovered and made to face what he always termed his "unfortunate weakness." But curiosity and a real regard for the boys had held him, and now brought him with rapid strides around the intervening rocks and bushes and into the presence of the astonished boys.

"Jack, Fred, my dear fellows, I never thought of you or of any boys looking at it in this way. It seemed to me that you could all see the truth, that I was weakly yielding to a bad habit which I myself regret and disapprove, though I have not often said so, for one does not like to condemn himself. And to think I have done the very best that I could to make smokers of all the boys in this town, and especially in our Sunday-school. Boys, will you forgive me, and will you sign a pledge with me, God helping us, never to touch the poison weed? For it is a filthy poison, and plenty of men who know better go on being slaves to it, started in the practice, perhaps, by the example of just such miserable weaklings as Dr. Jamison. Jack, it is not any sweeter or healthier or handsomer for a man to smoke than for a woman, and the physical and mental effect on either is the same, of course, or would be if women were fools enough to smoke to any extent. All the help that one gets by stimulation of that kind costs him dear in the long run, as most old users can testify. And the money gone for this indulgence! Boys, if I had my tobacco money that has been spent worse than uselessly in the last twenty years, it would put you both through college, or build that church needed in India that we were so interested in last Sunday, or buy a library for our little city and build a place to put it in. But, boys, I've smoked it up, to my shame, and the injury of any who are likely to follow my example. Help me, boys, to undo this last part of the evil result all you can."

And the next Sabbath, Dr. Jamison made a little talk to the Sunday-school they will always remember and honor him for. And mothers, sisters and fathers now are glad to have their boys say, "I'm going to be a man like Dr. Jamison," for Dr. Jamison now always remembers that he is responsible for the example he is setting.

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did you ever hear of the comfort bags that have been sent to the sailors of our navy? The W. C. T. U. to which I belong sent a dozen nice ones well filled with useful articles, and in each was a letter to the one who received the bag.

I have had a nice letter from one of the marines in answer to one I wrote and put in the bag. He had been on the United States steamer, New York, and had been wounded in the arm. After being in the hospital a while he was sent North, and was on the ship, Wabash, in the navy yard at Charleston, when he wrote. He was very glad to have the comfort bag, and was much pleased with the little Testament and copy of Gospel Hymns that were in the bag. He asked me to write to him again, and I am going to very soon.

Lovingly yours, AUNT MARY.

The Bible and Science.

PROBABLY no claim is more often made by infidels than that the Bible and science are in irreconcilable conflict, and that no candid and intelligent student of scientific subjects can believe in Christianity. No claim, however, could be more false. Sir J. William Dawson, whose reputation as a geologist is world wide, has said that the harmony between Genesis and modern scientific discoveries is so exact as to prove the Divine inspiration of the book, for unless the author had the facts revealed to him by the Creator, it would have been impossible to have stated truths which agree exactly with what scientific men have only recently found out. The book of Genesis was written at a time when most absurd views on scientific matters were held, and yet, although it enters into such questions as the creation of the world and the origin of man, it is in perfect agreement with recent scientific discoveries. The speculations of some scientists are, no doubt, in conflict with Biblical statements but with all that is demonstrated in science the Scriptures are in exact harmony.

A few months ago, Sir George Gabriel Stokes, the great mathematician, gave utterance to the following: "My attention has been called to a statement of the Indian papers that Christianity has lost its hold on the western nations; that it is now believed in chiefly by the ignorant and uneducated; and that scientific men always reject it. My own position and tastes have naturally brought me into contact with a large number of scientific men, with many of whom I am intimately acquainted; and I can say from my own knowledge that the above statement is far indeed from being true. . . . One can hardly be well acquainted with other people without getting to know something of their religious convictions. I am reluctant to speak of the living, able though I am to do so, but I know that men like Faraday, Kitchen Taylor, Parker and others were sincere believers in the Christian faith. . . I am aware that there are some scientific men who admire Christian morality but reject the supernatural element in the Christian religion. To me the supernatural element appears to be essential, and I know of many scientific men who think the same."

The Christian has not the slightest need to fear scientific investigations. No doubt, as in the past, theories will be advanced which disagree with the teachings of the Bible, but we can rest assured that future discoveries will not be antagonistic to Christianity and that demonstrated facts will no more conflict with the old Book in the days to come than they do at the present time. With mere theories we need not concern ourselves. Scientists disagree with scientists, and views are held by some scientific men to-day which contradict their opinions of but a few years ago. The fact, however, that the Bible is in agreement with all that scientists have established affords sufficient reason to assure us that it will suffer nothing from future investigations.

Schoolmasters and Schoolmistresses.

THE St. Louis Post-Dispatch lately said some good things, editorially, about schoolmasters. Quoting the remark that, "German victories are won by German schoolmasters," comment is made to this effect:

"Much the same thing can be said of American victories. The schoolmaster is abroad—very much abroad—in the land. By instruction and personal example, he has had more to do with the development of American character than any other one influence. He has taught the youth not only facts and figures, but he has taught them to think, and, what is more important, has taught them to be something manly and honest. The nation is in debt to the schoolmaster," etc.

The Bible and preachers frequently use the masculine noun in its generic sense, to mean both sexes. But this seems a case in which the feminine noun would be the proper one to represent the dominating sex engaged in the business, as more than ninety per cent of the teachers in this country are women; so that, in America, it would be truer to say, "American victories are won by American schoolmistresses."

But we inquire, if the schoolteacher is so capable as an educator along all lines of useful citizenship, how does it happen that the female scholars are not as capable of the exercise of the duties of citizenship (which may come within the range of her physical ability) as are the male scholars? There is but one answer to this and all other questions along the line of equal rights between the sexes, and that is the old-time one—"because."

If women continue to exist (and they most likely will), they will secure equal rights, but it is hard to have those who once espoused the cause, "go back on their sisters." Signs of repentance on the subject of equal suffrage have been seen in a number of states, not including New York, however.

A correspondent of the male sex writing on this subject, calls the men some hard names we would not like to quote, and answers his question of why women are willing to trust those who once betrayed their cause by saying it must be "the nature of women to love best those who treat them worst." This might do for the "old woman," but it won't do for the "new." And even the Dutchman's wife who said she knew women ought to be whipped some, added that she didn't think "they ought to be whipped so hard."

If women endure wrongs cheerfully it may be because there are things to be secured of even more importance than individual rights; it may be because they believe in the seventy times seven doctrine; it may be because they owe a big debt of gratitude to the men anyhow, and propose to pay a little of it off in this way; it may be because a woman's love is stronger than death and the grave, and therefore is not staggered by a general conference or a political party; it may be because she is well grounded in the old adage, "What can not be cured must be endured," but you may rest assured that she always makes it read, "must be endured—until it can be cured," and that she is looking about lively for the cure.

General Shafter's Opinion of the Canteen.

THE following letter from General Shafter was received by The Voice in reply to a communication calling his attention to General Miles' order (No. 87), on the subject of liquors for the soldiers. It is encouraging to find a high official giving such strong testimony in favor of total abstinence and against the flimsy excuses offered for the canteen system. We gladly quote General Shafter entire:

GENTLEMEN:—I have not seen the order, No. 87, to which you refer, but I am in full sympathy with it. I have always been strongly opposed to the canteen system or the sale of intoxicating drinks of any kind on military reservations, and have opposed it until absolutely overruled and required to establish a canteen at my post. I regard it demoralizing to the men, besides impairing seriously their efficiency. There are always, in every regiment, a number of men that will under any circumstances get and drink liquor, but the great majority are temperate, abstemious men; and it is to those that the evil effects of the post exchange system works the greatest injury, as young men who would not think of going away from the post for liquor will, when it is placed before them and every inducement offered them to purchase, do so, and thus gradually acquire habits of intemperance. The plea that it furnishes a large sum, which it does, to improve the table fare of the men, is, in my opinion, a very poor one, as the government of the United States is perfectly able to feed its men without any assistance from the profits of rum selling. I have absolutely prohibited the sale of liquor or the opening of saloons in the city of Santiago, and have refused permission for cargoes of beer to come from the states here. I think that the necessity of refraining from drink is fully realized by all the men, and of their own accord they would refrain from drinking.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) WM. H. SHAFTER,
Maj. Gen. U. S. Vol., Commanding.
Santiago de Cuba, July 30, 1898.

Secretary John D. Long on the Use of Spirituous Liquor in the Navy.

THERE appeared an article in both eastern and western papers after the battle of Manila ostensibly by gunner Evans, of the ship Boston, in which the statement was made that during the battle at Manila the men received a drink of whisky every twenty minutes, and that when they stopped for breakfast the men under him were called into his room and each one given a good drink of whisky. A page of a leading daily containing this story was sent to Secretary Long, with an inquiry as to whether there was anything inconsistent in the conduct set forth by gunner Evans in view of the rules and regulations for battleships. Secretary Long wrote in reply:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo, relative to the use of liquors in the navy, and in reply take pleasure in informing you that spirituous liquor is not allowed to be in possession of any of the officers or men on board ships of the navy, the regulations strictly prohibiting it. The only opportunities the men have of drinking such liquor are when they are at liberty on shore. Very respectfully,

(Signed) JOHN D. LONG, Sec.

It may be noted that the word spirituous is probably used in its specific meaning in Secretary Long's letter, and if so, would only include distilled liquors in distinction from fermented and brewed, as wine and beer. But as gunner Evans says whisky was given the men, either his story was untrue, or there was a direct violation of naval rules so flagrant that it ought to call for an investigation.

Concerning Our Questions to Local Unions.

THE answers sent by local unions to the five questions relating to THE UNION SIGNAL we had hoped to arrange in tabulated form, giving the name of each union responding. But while we have received a large number of replies—and they are still coming—we regret to say that so few have conformed to the rules laid down, that it is impossible to do more than summarize the result.

Nearly every state is represented in these replies, the largest number being sent by Illinois and Pennsylvania; New York and Massachusetts being not far behind. Some of the replies gave no state, a few neither state nor town, therefore could not be counted. Many unions answered all of the five questions, others only a part of them.

With regard to the most interesting and the most helpful parts of the paper, there was naturally wide diversity of opinion, consequently, it was almost impossible to obtain a majority vote in the unions upon Questions 2 and 3. Indeed, it appears that every department of THE UNION SIGNAL—even to the advertisements—has special interest and helpfulness for some part of our constituency—a fact which is, naturally, highly gratifying to its editors and publishers.

Replies to question No. 4—What subject would you like to have exploited more largely in our columns?—indicate that the subjects most in demand are, Christian Citizenship, Woman Suffrage, Non-Alcoholic Medication, Attitude of the Churches toward Prohibition, Sketches of Workers (with portraits), and above all, Helps for local work. Unions all over the country would like to benefit by the experience of others. They want practical suggestions on the "how to do it."

These questions were prompted by a sincere desire to know the mind of our subscribers concerning the World's and National organ with a view to making the white-ribboners' weekly "letter from home" as helpful and inspiring as possible to the sisters and brothers-in-law of the W. C. T. U. family the world over. We certainly were not "fishing for compliments," and yet the result is that we have received less than half a dozen criticisms—and these of the most kindly nature—and are overwhelmed with compliments. Were it not that we possess in an unusual degree the proverbial modesty (!) of editors we should probably fill a page or two with laudatory quotations.

It is encouraging, to say the least, that the consensus of opinion in the local unions, as far as heard from, is that THE UNION SIGNAL "can not be improved," either in manner or in matter, a verdict which the editors and publishers beg leave to accept with considerable discount.

The one discouraging feature connected with the replies is the small percentage of subscribers they reveal. True, some unions are doing nobly and the proportion runs up to fifty and sixty per cent. In one case it is reported as one hundred per cent! but then that is in a small union. In the majority of cases, however, the figure is distressingly low. We wonder what kind of a showing the W. C. T. U. state conventions could make upon this point! Will not the unions who say "increase the subscription list instead of the subscription price," aid in carrying out their own suggestion?

One Man's Reason for Not Drinking Beer.

A MAN past eighty-five years old, but hale and hearty as one of fifty, gives his observations in regard to the effects of beer on hogs as the reason for never drinking it himself. He is an intelligent attorney of Michigan. His father was a butcher in Lockport, N. Y., and did his own killing. The work of his son, Mr. J. H. Corbet, was, in his own words, "to riddle, or remove the fat from the intestines of the hogs." Many of the hogs were fattened on the refuse of a brewery and were purchased from the brewer. Mr. Corbet says he found it very difficult to handle his work as the intestines and stomach of the brewery fed swine were as tender as brown paper soaked in water, and the fat would hardly hold together and seemed to be more of an oily nature than otherwise, and that there was as much difference between the fat of brewery fed, and corn and grass fed hogs as there is between pressed lard and oil, and that in killing such, they succumbed to the knife much sooner than those fed on corn. The boy always contended that the meat was unwholesome and would not eat it. Neither would he use beer himself, taking the ground that if beer would rot the inwards of swine it would also destroy the same in a human being.

So far as we know this is the universal testimony. Some cities pass ordinances against such feeding, especially of milch cows, but say nothing against the swilling of human beings. Just now our government is allowing the army to have easy access to brewery products, as though an enervating southern climate and the yellow fever were not sufficiently devastating.

Alcohol is a Brain Poison.

IT is so to all intents and purposes. It seizes with its disorganizing energy upon that mysterious part whose steady and undisturbed action holds man in true and responsible relations with his family, with society and with God, and it is this fearful part that gives to government and society their tremendous interests on the question. Is not society, is not every individual who makes, sells, or patronizes the use of alcohol and leads the wretch to temptation and death, responsible? Must not alcohol be a subject of law? Surely it must. There has always been a jurisprudence of alcohol; there is still, and the necessity for it will continue. But the demand of the age is for a new, a higher and juster legislation, for more thorough and potential law, through which the most obiquitous and omnipotent energy of government shall be expressed for the protection of society.—E. L. Youmans, founder of the Popular Science Monthly.

THE following is among the last of the "F. W. Notes" sent in to THE UNION SIGNAL by Miss Willard. It is of especial interest now, in view of the bloodless battles of to-day and the possibilities of to-morrow for a part of the world not heretofore blest by the highest type of civilization, to put it mildly. The missionary, the merchant, the home and the school will soon be ministering to the development of Cuba and the Philippine Islands, and their inhabitants will in fewer years than fifty, "have a thousand susceptibilities of rational enjoyment where their fathers had one":

"The brain that has this day registered the largest number of serene and vivid thoughts is the best brain. In these latter days, our pleasures are more diversified than in the past; their symbol is no longer a jug and a mug. The Anglo-Saxon is the only race that thinks by nations instead of by railway stations. Where the English-speaking race gets in, barbarism goes out. What have the English done in Ashantee? They found an African tribe that fed on human flesh, slaughtered women without mercy, believed in witchcraft and every form of superstition. Without firing a gun, but simply by an ingenious campaign of firecrackers and skyrockets, which these natives believed to be supernatural, the tribe was conquered in a matter of three weeks, and an area of tens of thousands of fertile miles came under the rule of the Anglo-Saxons. The chief of the tribe kissed the foot of the English general, and promised complete obedience. Who will say that this was not a gain to civilization? Who does not know that the coming of the missionary and the merchant, the home and the school to that community will raise it so in fifty years that the children of those cannibals will have a thousand susceptibilities of rational enjoyment where their fathers had one?"

MRS. L. P. JOHNSON, candidate on the Prohibition ticket of the state of Idaho for governor, resides at Idaho Falls, Bingham county, in which community she holds a position in the front ranks of the reform and social life. She is a woman of high attainments, amiable disposition, and strong character, courteous and generous to those who do not agree with her, but positive and unswerving all along the lines of right and reform. Mrs. Johnson has been an active worker in the cause of temperance and morality all her life, her fight along these lines commencing while a resident of Blackfoot, in trying to have the law enforced in regard to selling liquor to Indians, and the enforcement of temperance laws generally, which fight she has at all times maintained. Since becoming a resident of Idaho Falls she has stood high in the councils of the Prohibition party, the W. C. T. U., the I. O. G. T., and all temperance and reform movements. Since receiving the nomination, Mrs. Johnson has aroused the Prohibitionists, and a large vote for her is assured.—Moscow (Idaho) Double Standard.

THE third specification in a total abstinence pledge of the Birmingham (England) Female Temperance Society was:

"3. We promise that all of us who are unmarried will not accept the addresses of any man who is not a member of a total abstinence society" (!!)

This society was organized sixty-two years ago, and we are persuaded that if the young women in general had taken and kept this part of the pledge alone, the drink problem would have a different aspect from what it has to-day. This is now a common doctrine with the Y's, and it should be kept well to the front.

WITH the July issue, The Woman's Journal of Canada appears under new management and a new editor. The paper has been purchased by the Dominion W. C. T. U. and has its president, Mrs. Annie O. Rutherford, for its editor. Beginning September 15 it will be issued fortnightly. We congratulate our sisters anew and welcome the Journal as an old friend in a new guise. Miss Scott, the retiring editor and proprietor, has earned the lasting gratitude of Dominion white-ribboners by her loyalty to the cause as shown in her self-sacrificing work as editor and publisher of the Journal. She carries with her the love and thanks of the sisterhood.

THE following is an extract from an act of Congress, approved June 13, 1890:

"No alcoholic liquors, beer or wine, shall be sold or supplied to the enlisted men in any canteen (exchange) or post-trader's store, or in any room or building at any garrison or military post in any state or territory in which the sale of alcoholic liquors, beer or wine is prohibited by law."

This is prohibition by act of Congress for the army in certain states. Is it not equally within the powers of Congress to prohibit such sales to the army everywhere?

Appreciation of our Y Missionary.

THE Y's who have contributed to the fund that enables Clara Parrish to carry on the work of the W. C. T. U. in Japan, will take a deep personal interest in the following letters, which express so beautifully the appreciation of her worth and work by those with whom she labors:

30 A TSUKIJI, TOKYO, JAPAN.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—Since Miss Parrish came to us the W. C. T. U. in Japan has been making history fast. With her own clever pen she has been giving brief glimpses of the encouraging progress of the work, but she could not tell you, if indeed she realizes it herself, how largely this new impetus along all temperance lines is the result of her own dauntless energy, faith and patience. There have been mountains of difficulty, valleys of disappointment, peculiar perplexities and vexatious limitations all along her path, and she has met them all in a spirit that has won our heartiest confidence and love.

Our blessed Chieftain never made a truer prophecy than when she said to "Anna," after reading one of Miss Parrish's letters, "This little girl has the true spirit; she will make friends for herself and the cause wherever she goes."

For months I have been wishing to write just this little message to some one at home who could pass it on to all her friends and to those who are yet to know and to love her. I cannot help regretting now that I did not write it to Miss Willard, but I trust others did. Still I know she would have been glad of my little word, too, and it would have been such a precious thing to remember that I had added one throb of joy to that Great-heart that knew no keener pleasure than the knowledge that her trusted ones were loved and appreciated by others.

But there are a host of other loyal friends who are prayerfully watching from afar the movements of our "Y's" little pilgrim, whose hearts I can still make glad with my message. However, it is not my message, but just a note from the chorus of appreciative expressions that I am constantly hearing from the lips of both Japanese and foreigners. I cannot forbear quoting two or three. One very prominent Japanese gentleman said: "Her sweet perseverance has won all our hearts." A gifted missionary gentleman, active in temperance work, remarked: "She is one of the pluckiest, most 'undiscourageable' little women that I have ever met." A dear sister worker, who has labored in Japan for many years, said of her: "Her unselfish devotion to her work is an inspiration to us all."

Yours for God and home and every land,
GENEVIEVE FAVILLE TOPPING.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—It is a pleasure to send greetings, and the more a pleasure because it is to add my word of praise for Miss Parrish. She has simply disarmed all criticism, and won to temperance work and to W. C. T. U. plans of work a sympathetic hearing from those most opposed, while she has captured the hearts of all of us, who wished for her the full success she has gained on this difficult field. The Japanese believe in and follow Miss Parrish as no other foreigner I know. HENRY TOPPING.

Canadian Y Notes.

A Y is to be organized at Moosomin, in the Northwest Territory.

OTTAWA Y's own a sewing machine which they lend to poor women.

THE Y's of Windsor, N. S., have opened coffee rooms on a small scale, and taken up other departments of work, despite the discouragement of having had all their books and literature destroyed in the fire last October.

World's W. C. T. U.

DEAR COMRADES:—The B. W. T. A. National Executive Committee has decided to observe as far as possible, December 23, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Crusade which led to the formation of the W. C. T. U. This important red-letter day was mentioned by Miss Willard at the last World's executive committee. I hope meetings will be held all over the world in November and December, to bring before our own members and others our historic Crusade. Also if collections or part of collections can be then made for our World's missionary work it would be a very practical way of strengthening our work. I would also remind our members that September 28, Miss Willard's birthday, is the day we have set apart for making a special Crusade for new members.

IRELAND:—Probably Mrs. Rowell (U. S. A.) will soon be able to visit Ireland on our behalf to specially work amongst the Catholic population. Mrs. Rowell received a delightful reception when she was here a year ago.

AUSTRALIA:—Mrs. Nicholls has now returned to South Australia after her extensive and successful tour through several of the Colonies.

VICTORIA has had a visit from Mrs. Lyle, the South Australian president, who received a most cordial and sisterly welcome. Over one hundred girls have joined the Frances Willard club, where classes in many different useful subjects are provided for them. Mrs. Kirk's visit to the World's Convention is bearing good fruit in many ways, and she is never tired of giving encouraging proof of that happy fact.

QUEENSLAND:—Mrs. Harris, the Australian Y superintendent, is now on her way to England. We shall all be glad to welcome her, especially some of us who have been in regular correspondence with her as an indefatigable worker the last few years.

NEW SOUTH WALES:—Mrs. Nolan's address is now Balmain, Sydney. Please note. Mrs. Harrison Lee has recently had a hearty welcome and has been stirring up the temperance workers by her earnest, whole-hearted addresses.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA has been making a special crusade against gambling. Several unions have vigorously taken up this important part of our work.

TASMANIA:—The president, Mrs. Rooke, who is also Australasian press superintendent, has sent a most loving letter expressing the great loss she feels at the death of our World's press superintendent, Miss Lodie Reed.

SWEDEN:—Miss Johannsdottir (president of the Iceland W. C. T. U.) was sent by the World's officers to represent the organization at the temperance congress which met in Sweden early in July.

AFRICA:—Miss Moody, the organizer for Cape Colony, has tried with great success a most novel way of reaching the masses and I pass it on, trusting others will also adopt the plan. One night, when neither moon nor weather interfered, Miss Moody, using a wall in a main street as her background, gave a magic lantern lecture. The slides came out splendidly and crowds watched with deepest interest; a man led the singing with an accordion. Bravo, Miss Moody! Many a man has been saved from ruin here by the work of the flower mission department. Our energetic World's superintendent is keeping the department well to the front. Mrs. Fehr writes that hundreds are wearing the white ribbon in South Africa. The South African unions have taken much trouble in making beautiful banners which are most faithfully used.

JAPAN:—Miss Parrish's last letter was written from Kanazawa, where Mary Allen West died. Miss Parrish was there doing pioneer work.

MADAGASCAR:—Mrs. Sherman, of Antanarivo, has sent a letter from the W. C. T. U. sympathizing with the World's W. C. T. U. in the loss of our leader.

INDIA:—Mrs. Phillips has, on account of the illness of her son, been obliged to leave and is now in San Francisco. Our work in India has, largely owing to her efforts, made such splendid progress the last few years that we trust her absence will only be temporary. The World's officers are in communication about a successor to Mrs. Phillips, and hope soon to make satisfactory plans. Now the temperance hospital is opened in Bombay our white-ribboners wish to see one in Calcutta, and are already agitating to bring it about.

NEW ZEALAND:—The annual convention of the National Council of Women met in Wellington in April, when Mrs. Ostler brought forward successfully the suggestion that the Minister of Education should be approached with a view to having scientific temperance included in the examinations for teachers' certificates, and made a compulsory subject of study.

FRANCE:—I am glad to report that I organized a W. C. T. U. in Paris last month, and enrolled twenty-five members. Of course, many more could have been secured, but we can only receive as members total abstainers, and in France total abstinence is unpopular. Madame Menos, the wife of the president of the Croix Bleu, and other influential ladies, joined us. We are in correspondence with the officials, trying to secure space at the International Exhibition of 1900. The applications have been numerous, and the arrangements for work like ours is limited, but we are doing everything that possibly can be done to secure the recognition we so desire.

BRAZIL:—Miss Moore, of Piracicuba, is now in England, and I hope to arrange to have a meeting with her soon.

GREECE:—Mrs. Zlatano, of Athens, now a resident in England, spent a day with me last week. She visited Harwarden Castle a few weeks before Mr. Gladstone died, and took him sprays of myrtle and laurel sent her by Grecian women to present to him in acknowledgment of his unceasing help to Greece. She is working away in England with rare heroism for the Thessalians, whose territory has been so despoiled by Turkey, and for the Cretans. She is one of the most self-sacrificing workers I ever met, and is a member of one of the old Grecian families. If any of our friends wish to help Crete, I shall be delighted to put them in communication with Mrs. Zlatano. She will spend the winter in Athens. If possible, she will help our work when she is there.

NORWAY:—I sail on August 2 for Bergen, and have a month's meetings in Norway, arranged by the National W. C. T. U. Fru Espenak will act as interpreter. Possibly other work may develop as a result of the work in Norway. Arrangements have been made for me to meet people from all parts of the country who will be attending the National Exhibition at Bergen. One meeting for national teachers from the various centers has been fixed for me here. In this way I trust many will be reached. I go to Aalsund, Flekkisfiord, Egesund, Kristiania and other towns.

Affectionately your comrade,
AGNES E. SLACK.

Queensland.

AFTER the Darlings Downs conference, Mrs. Britten, organizer, and Mrs. Johnson, president, made a round-the-district tour, visiting unions, taking pledges, holding public meetings and stirring workers to renewed efforts in the temperance cause. Anti-gambling pledges were left with the unions, and many appointed superintendents for this department, and with the great need there is for this work, we hope soon to have an anti-gambling league in Queensland.

The North Brisbane district annual conference was held at Sandgate, forty-two delegates answering the roll call. The president's (Mrs. Clough) address was an able one, full of wise counsel and encouragement. This was followed by a memorial service for Miss Willard and those who have been "called away." A letter of sympathy and loyalty was sent to Lady Henry Somerset. The prize paper on "How to Make Domestic Service Popular," was read, also one on "Mothers' Meetings." A model meeting was given, also parliamentary drill. Reports showed that unions in this district are doing steady, faithful work, many of them in spite of great difficulties. Mothers' meetings, Loyal Temperance Legions, press, flower and sailors' mission, Y unions, are some of the departments. All unions distribute educative literature in every direction, and all over Queensland boxes are to be seen at railway stations, labeled with the request, "Please take one." All these departments carried on by the W. C. T. U. can not fail to make our Colony a better place. An evening meeting was given of addresses, music, and three minute speeches by union presidents.

Mrs. Payne is organizing in the north. At Mackay she had a busy time; Wednesday night a formal welcome at the union's annual tea; Thursday afternoon spoke at the ordinary meeting, in the evening visited Walkerston; Friday addressed a large mothers' meeting, at night a meeting in Town Hall; Saturday night visited Homebush; Sunday morning addressed forty Hanakas at Mr. Stevens' residence; afternoon addressed united Sunday-schools, and Monday organized an L. T. L. of fifty-eight children, to be called the Frances Willard Legion. Monday night an interesting franchise meeting was held in Britannia Hall. His Worship, the mayor, presided, and the stage was decorated with graceful palms and flowers. Mrs. Payne was most cordially received, and spoke well, as she always does on this subject. Several prominent residents spoke strongly in favor of woman suffrage, and a unanimous resolution was passed, "That in the opinion of this meeting the time has now arrived when the franchise should be extended to women." This was forwarded to the Premier and the two members of parliament for the district.

The Mackay union is making preparations for a fair in aid of funds for a library; fifteen members have been gained.

Mrs. Payne also conducted a very successful three days' mission at Mount Morgan, commencing with a public meeting and entertainment in the Foresters' Hall, the local president in the chair; another public meeting at the Central Methodist church, when a graphic account of the commencement and growth of the W. C. T. U. was given, and touching reference made to our beloved leader's promotion to higher service. Ministers gave short addresses and the choir rendered several anthems in an efficient manner. A franchise evening (preceded by a short open air meeting) was held in the East Street church, His Worship, the mayor, being chairman. Mrs. Payne showed in a clear and decisive manner that the suffrage should be asked for, not as a favor, but because it is our right; at the close, the following resolution was unanimously passed and forwarded to the Premier and the district M. P.: "That in the opinion of this meeting, the time has now arrived when the government should bring in a measure granting the franchise to women." An afternoon purity meeting was also held when a number of women received an "arrest of thought" from Mrs. Payne's earnest words.

During the meetings sixteen pledges were taken, but the lasting results of this mission in a busy mining place can only be revealed in eternity.

The Thompson Estate union has started a sewing class to reduce the debt on the Hall; they recently held a very successful tea and public meeting. Miss Brentnall has been granted a three months' leave of absence from her duties as treasurer.

THE twelfth annual convention of the Manitoba Provincial W. C. T. U. was held at Rat Portage, a beautiful summer resort on the shores of Lake of the Woods. The time occupied was somewhat longer than usual, being from July 6 to 11, inclusive, but every hour was fully utilized, the Sabbath included, as on that day quite a number of our ladies filled the various pulpits of the town. The delegates in attendance, with the officers, numbered fifty-five, and deep interest was maintained throughout all the sessions.

The report of the corresponding secretary showed a large increase in membership, owing largely, no doubt, to the work of the Emerald Quartette, who labored so faithfully in the work for several months of the year just closed.

The treasurer's report brought out a good balance on the right side, and the reports of superintendents of the twenty-four different departments of work showed very successful effort.

The annual address of the president was strong and forceful, and her almost unanimous re-election was proof of the esteem in which she is held.

It was a very great pleasure to the convention to have Mrs. Rutherford, the Dominion president, with them. She came almost as an entire stranger, but made many friends before she left. Mrs. Rutherford gave valuable assistance at every session of convention, and conducted two Y conferences, an afternoon school of methods, gave an evening address, occupied one of the pulpits on Sabbath, and conducted a memorial service. At the latter she spoke in a beautifully touching manner of the obsequies of our promoted Chieftain, held in Willard Hall.

On one evening of the convention a silver medal contest was held, which is always educative in results. The medal was won by Master Roy Weidman, although the young girls were very close contestants.

The beautiful L. T. L. banner donated by Dr. Yeomans goes again this year to Manitou. The Doctor conducted a model mothers' meeting, and at the close formed a Baby Band consisting of seven members.

The plan of work committee brought in an excellent report, which, if carried out, will tell grandly for the cause. Its suggestions and recommendations for plebiscite work will be taken up at once, as that is our most pressing work at the present time.

The resolutions endorsed by the convention "speak volumes" which we hope will be crystallized into deeds.

When matters relating to Lady Henry Somerset came up for discussion it ended in the convention endorsing the action of the Dominion executive upon this question.

On the closing evening of the convention Lady Aberdeen, who was passing through the town and expecting to meet the Local Council of Women, kindly addressed the meeting. She dwelt upon the links that bind the two societies together, and gave a sketch of the work of the Victorian Order of Nurses.

On Saturday afternoon the delegates were treated to a trip on the lake on board the magnificent steamer, Kenora, the local union having chartered the boat for this purpose.

It was felt by all that the convention was a good one, and all are hopefully looking forward to the work of the coming year being blessed abundantly by the Master, "whose we are and whom we serve."

The third annual convention of the Prince Edward Island provincial W. C. T. U. met in Charlottetown from July 6 to 9 inclusive. Mrs. C. W. Strong, the esteemed president, occupied the chair, and very efficiently conducted all the sessions.

Very encouraging reports were read of departmental work, and the report of the corresponding secretary showed progress all along the line.

On the first evening of convention Mrs. Brennan, Summerside, gave an excellent reading on "Prenatal Culture," followed by an interesting discussion in which ideas were exchanged, regarding the two great forces in character building—heredity and environment. Miss Lillian M. Phelps being present, took a prominent part in this discussion, and proved by actual fact the force of environment in the downfall of ancient Rome and Greece.

On the evening of the second day a public meeting was held, at which Mrs. Strong presided. The Baptist church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with cut flowers and blooming plants. The children of the Loyal Crusaders sang beautifully a royal welcome to the delegates and visitors. Addresses of welcome were given by representatives of the various temperance organizations of the city, and from the Ministerial Association and Temperance Alliance. Rev. B. Chappell, returned missionary from Japan, brought greetings from the W. C. T. U. of that far-off country. Mrs. R. T. Holman read greetings from Mr. J. Hale Ramsay, the esteemed life member of all the provinces and also of the Dominion.

Mrs. Dr. Sprague, of Summerside, very gracefully responded to all greetings given. The president gave her annual address, which was pointed and comprehensive. A pleasing feature of the meeting was an address by Miss Phelps, on the work of the W. C. T. U. This talented lecturer has the wonderful power of transmitting enthusiasm, and the audience appreciated to the full her stirring words.

On the third day Lady Henry Somerset was discussed, and after several members of convention had spoken favorably Miss Phelps championed Lady Henry's cause and in a lucid, forceful and satisfactory manner swept away all prejudice and misunderstanding regarding Lady Henry's attitude toward the temperance reform, and proved beyond doubt that she was the true friend and champion of not only the cause of temperance but also of the cause of the Master.

At the close of this discussion Mrs. Poole and Miss Phelps were appointed a committee to wire greetings of confidence and loving sympathy to Lady Henry Somerset, from the Provincial W. C. T. U. of Prince Edward Island. A memorial service was conducted by Mrs. Dr. Sprague, and touching incidents in the life of Miss Willard and Gen. Neal Dow were given by several members of convention.

On the evening of the last day Miss Phelps delivered her lecture on "Rome." The audience was delighted, for never before in the space of two hours was there given in Charlottetown such a display of oratory, eloquence and art in portrayal, as that which constituted the lecture on "Rome." Canada has a right to be justly proud of Miss Lillian Phelps. Previous to the convention she toured a part of the island and organized three new unions.

A sad and touching incident occurred on the morning of the last day of convention. Rev. Mr. Sutherland, a staunch friend of the W. C. T. U., a man of God and an admirer of Miss Willard, passed away to greet our Chieftain in the unknown beyond. The sad circumstance cast a gloom over the closing part of our convention, and our W. C. T. U. and citizens generally deeply mourn his removal. But there comes to us, when our comrades drop by our side, a peculiar stimulus to go forward and gather up the threads that have dropped from tired hands and weave them into palms of victory. On Sabbath afternoon while the remains of our beloved friend lay in Zion Presbyterian church, the members of the local W. C. T. U. just previous to the burial service, filed past and each one dropped a white rose on the casket in tender and loving token of esteem.

News from the Field.

Massachusetts.

OUR soldiers and sailors is one of the main topics of interest to our unions at the present time. Our new superintendent of this department, Mrs. Charlton, ably fills the place of our Mrs. Livesey, who was called up higher just before Miss Willard went home. Thousands of comfort bags have been sent to the boys in the navy, many of them of considerable value. These contain about every convenience needed, and in almost every case a Testament or Bible, Gospel Hymns, a pledge card and a personal letter.

Several letters have been received at headquarters, returning signed pledges and grateful acknowledgment of these gifts. One writes: "May you keep the good work going. I will do my utmost to honor the thoughtfulness that reached me at a time when I was tempted on all sides. I have been a drunkard, but I will drink no more," etc.

It goes without saying that our women have also helped in the Volunteer Aid Association, and for the hospital ship, Bay State, and only a week ago or so our state president sent out a letter asking the unions to help the Army Christian Commission of the Y. M. C. A. to supply ice-water to the soldiers in our camps. Already more than $150 have been received for this purpose. Many of our departments touch this of soldiers and sailors, evangelistic, purity, the press, literature, legislation and petition, narcotics, Sabbath observance, etc.

Interest in the army and navy is not allowed in the least to interfere with the work of the flower mission. The work of this beautiful department is at its height just now and headquarters is a busy place every Saturday, as Mrs. Simpson, with her corps of co-workers, opens the boxes and distributes the thousands of bouquets sent by the different unions. Most of the express companies deliver the flowers free of charge. We doubt if any state has done better service in this special line of evangelistic work than Massachusetts.

The work in the department of legislation and petition is generally of a kind that cannot be reckoned by figures. Many petitions have been sent to Washington from state, county, and local unions. More has been accomplished in the way of protest at the state house than by petition, perhaps, but even where we have failed to get what we asked for, we shall long gratefully remember brave men and true who have stood by us, and spoken as grandly as if they expected us to win. We have succeeded in getting the clause "of chaste conversation" stricken from the "age of consent law," and Massachusetts now stands among the states having the best of these laws.

Mrs. Fessenden has been called West by her mother's death. We all deeply sympathize with her in her sorrow, especially as she did not reach the bedside of the loved one until she had passed away, but we know that the heart of our dear state president is stayed on the "God of all comfort" and He will be now, as He has ever been to her, "a very present help."

And what shall we say of the Temple? We are all sorrowful of course, but with all the inquiries and regrets that come to headquarters, there has been no word of censure, or criticism, or blame, of the recent action of the General Officers or executive committee. We all feel sure they have been led of God, and that they have done only what is brave and right and true. Neither is anything but love and sympathy expressed for Mrs. Carse. We shall rejoice indeed if God shall show us a way yet to redeem the loved building before November. But God knows what is best for us and He will do that best.

Our state convention is to be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, the second week in October. The Massachusetts Temperance Congress, composed of many of the clergymen of the state, have asked that they may unite with us and we have agreed. The pastor and two delegates from every church of all denominations are to be invited. There is to be also a union of all the young people's societies on one evening. We hope it may mean a closer relation between the churches and the W. C. T. U.

Sunday-school Work.

Dear Sunday-school Workers: The time is at hand when we should begin preparations for the lesson of Sunday, September 11. The quarterly temperance lesson is found in Amos 6: 1-8. Title, "Sinful Indulgences." This lesson will suggest to Sunday-school workers: 1, The sinful indifference of many Christians to the cause of temperance; 2, Sinful habits which undermine health and lead to ruin for time and eternity; 3, Lack of true patriotism in those who have no sincere regard for the moral welfare of the nation; 4, God's woe is pronounced, His punishment is certain.

We believe that much good will result if the pastors are everywhere invited to emphasize the temperance truths of the lesson in a short address before the Sunday-school on September 11. Brief temperance applications may be given voluntarily by teachers and members of adult classes. These with other temperance exercises will help to fix the temperance lesson in the minds of all. We expect our workers on every quarterly temperance Sunday to distribute suitable literature and to seek to aid all local church committees in preparations for special temperance exercises. The Crusader supplement is calculated to be helpful to Sunday-school teachers. Send to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, for copies. Price 65 cents per 100.

The special work which we would urge for Sunday, September 11, is pledge signing. Our National Sunday-school pledge chain will be displayed at the coming National Convention, and we are anxious that it should assume as large proportions as possible in order to correctly represent our pledge work in the Sunday-schools. We ask that unions will provide our red, white and blue pledge cards for the Sunday-schools. Since the same pledge has been signed by all whose names appear on the pledge roll of honor or on the class pledge rolls, these names may be copied on the cards in order to make a complete chain from the Sunday-school. New names should also be secured. Our ambition is to have the pledge chain correspond with our pledge statistics, and we feel sure that this is also the ambition of all state superintendents. The cards are to be tied together with white baby ribbon to form the chain. Local superintendents are asked to make the chain for their respective towns, sending the same to county or district superintendents who in turn will make the chain for the county or district and send on to the state superintendents who will have charge of the state pledge chain. State superintendents will forward chains to the National department. In every case the expressage should be prepaid as this divides the expense among the workers. It is expected that the pledge chain will continue, and so we urge that a beginning be made in every town where there is a W. C. T. U. Send at once for cards to S. B. Irvine, St. Paul, Minn.

Because the National Convention is to be held in St. Paul, we ask all state superintendents west of the Mississippi River to send their pledge chains to the secretary of the department, Mrs. Della R. Mandigo, 810 Third Ave., North, Fargo, N. D. Those east of the Mississippi River will send to Mrs. Dora Butts, 345 Swan St., Buffalo, N. Y., our department associate.

Again we urge our workers to get the resolution favoring the Quarterly Temperance Lesson into the Sunday-schools everywhere. Enclose postage to me (5 cts. per 100), and receive printed copies free. Also we wish the resolution relative to the same thing presented at every Sunday-school convention, and other conventions as well. Will not the unions respond to this appeal, and let us have signatures of Sunday-school workers everywhere?

In closing, let me urge every local superintendent to send her report in at once, and give state superintendents an opportunity to have a complete report of the year's work to send to me not later than September 15. This will give time to embody all items from the Quarterly Temperance Sunday, September 11. Please be prompt. Send statistics and detailed reports as far as possible. This will encourage those who have labored so earnestly this year to bring the department up to higher ground and enlarge its field of endeavor. The general items of report are as follows: Sunday-school membership, pledged Sunday-school membership, pledged families, pages of temperance literature used in Sunday-school, temperance books in Sunday-school libraries, pages of literature used in department work, concerts, addresses, mass-meetings and Sunday-school temperance rallies, universal Temperance Sunday, number of coworkers secured. Report blanks will be furnished for postage. Send at once, that you may have a full list of questions to be answered.

Hoping to meet many of our department workers at the coming National Convention, and praying always for you, I am yours in service,

Stella B. Irvine,
St. Paul, Minn. Nat. Supt

Work Among Foreigners.

Dear Comrades:—I omitted in my recent official letter to give my address—Chanute, Kan. I am still receiving letters directed to Kirkwood, Mo., and even to Lawrence, Kan., where I have not lived for five years. I intended also to say "the literature sent to Ellis Island costs ten dollars a month." I omitted the word month.

Flower Mission.

Beloved Comrades:—Everyone who loves our sainted Chieftain, and whose heart is filled with thanksgiving for the benediction of her beautiful life, must surely long like myself to make the anniversary of her birth (September 28) notable by some deed which shall redound in blessings to others, but the question is, how can this be most effectually accomplished?

Now, the answer suggested to me is in a form of action whereby we may not only bring happiness into the lives of some now steeped in misery, but also give joy to the spirit of our promoted leader, beloved Frances Willard. We are assured that "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth," and so I write to urge my dear fellow workers in the beautiful mission of flowers to organize, wherever possible, a pledge crusade for that day. First, meet and ask a blessing upon your endeavors, and then by house-to-house visitation, or, as opportunity may offer, induce men and women to sign the total abstinence pledge and take up work for God, home and humanity's needs. Present to each person a bouquet, small or large, with a few words appropriate to the gift impressing upon the minds of the recipients the fact that our service is one of joy and beauty as well as of peace and safety.

Praying that our Heavenly Father may direct your path and bless the undertaking with great success, I am, beloved comrades, yours in the sweetest of bonds as well as in our common sorrow,

Amelia J. Pemell,
World's Supt. of Flower Missions.
Newton, N. S. W., Australia.

P. S.—Please make special mention of the pledges taken September 28, in your annual report.

Treasurer's Corner.

Only about eight weeks before the books of the National treasurer close! How short a time remains to us in which to gather in the dues, that shall tell their story of loss or gain at our annual Convention. The states have sent in their dues more promptly this year than ever before, and yet some states have sent nothing. The books of the National treasurer will close October 25. This will give only two weeks for the auditing, making up the report and getting it printed ready to place in the hands of the delegates at St. Paul. Now, sister treasurers, will you not this year, see to it, that the dues are all in by October 25? All states that hold L. T. L. dues should send them in early so that arrangements may be made for L. T. L. delegates. Mrs. Rice will have have something pertinent to say on this subject.

We are receiving good reports of the humane work done by our women in the military camps and in the hospitals. These are coming to us from many directions and it is a comfort to think that the dollars we send, will, without waste, all be changed into food, medicine, ice, fruit, literature and nameless comforts and delicacies for our sick, brave boys so far away from home and mother. Mrs. Thacher will tell in another column of her work. No money that comes to the Corner is more welcome than that sent for soldiers' and sailors' fund. Mrs. Baxter is doing heroic work in Utah and Colorado. Salt Lake papers speak in highest terms of her ability as a speaker and of her work. She has sent in $142 and writes me there is more to follow. It can not come too fast nor too soon.

We have our ear in a listening attitude to hear from the states that have this year made the 500 net gain. One state has been reported in this honor roll, and others will come. Next month comes the birthday of our departed leader, September 28. Miss Willard's wish always was that her birthday might be membership day, and all unions are asked to hold a meeting on that day and solicit new members. What a beautiful tribute to her it would be if every union would add to their membership. One added to each union would give nearly 10,000 new members. Five to each union would give us 50,000 women added to our ranks. Let every union hold a Willard membership birthday meeting, and give to our promoted leader the very highest honor and the best evidence possible of our love and loyalty, for nothing could show our loyalty to her like an effort to build up and strengthen the organization for which she gave the richest, ripest years of her life—years freighted with the greatest wealth of intense thought, of earnest prayer, of constant, devoted labor, of most brilliant and eloquent speech that was ever given to the building up and enlarging of any society that has for its object the redemption of fallen men and women and the protection of the weak! I repeat, if we will honor her precious name, let us work for the society for which she gave her heart's life. The one who would weaken or neglect the W. C. T. U. is not a safe leader nor a friend to her whom we mourn to-day. Don't forget to ask for and secure new members on September 28.

ONE of the women inmates of the states prison at Stillwater, Minn., was converted flower mission day during services held in the woman's ward. The white-ribboners were entertained at the prison for luncheon.

MRS. H. A. GORDON, president of the union at Corsicana, Tex., may take courage from the experiences of the union at West Concord, Minn. She writes of only four old members and their discouragements and of their financial condition on account of losses during the Civil war; but that she still clings to the thirty-seventh Psalm and quotes: "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed." Her union has a monthly prayer-meeting, and they read and distribute literature.

THE Central union of Duluth, Minn., sent a delegation to the city council lately to protest against any modification of the existing liquor laws.

THE Edom, Iowa, W. C. T. U. had the full management of the Fourth of July celebration at that place. Among the speeches there was one on temperance and one on equal suffrage. Eight thousand people attended, coming many miles. There was no gambling, no wheels of fortune. It closed with a naval battle on the river, and was pronounced a great success.

MRS. RUFUS C. ELDER, the president of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, W. C. T. U., writes: "I have been much interested in the Honor Roll of the no-canteen regiments, and the request for names of the colonels. 'My regiment' is the fifth Pennsylvania volunteer, which has never had a canteen and has been on the list from the first. Theodore N. Burchfield, Altoona, Pa., is the colonel. This regiment now has Francis Murphy, the original Murphy, for its chaplain. I am personally interested in the command, as my husband has been with this regiment for twenty-one years, and is now serving as lieutenant colonel."

AUGUST 10 was W. C. T. U. Day at Piasa Bluffs Assembly, Illinois, and was fairly well attended by white-ribbon women who felt they had a rich treat in the address of Miss Brehm, on the subject, "The Mission of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." The different topics treated during the three days institute, conducted by Miss Brehm, were presented in a plain, practical manner, and will be very helpful to all W. C. T. U. workers. A local union was organized to be known as the "Chautauqua W. C. T. U." It is composed of white-ribbon women from any county, district or state. The object of this union is to secure more interest in the work of the W. C. T. U., not only at this place, but at home as well, and thus to make their day at Chautauqua of such interest and profit that more will attend. The W. C. T. U. building at Piasa Chautauqua is pleasantly located and furnishes a nice resting place for weary W. C. T. U. workers, or any one else that wishes a pleasant, homelike place.

FOR several years the union at West Concord, Minn., consisted of two elderly invalids who persisted in sending their dues and thus maintaining the organization. A revival of interest came and this is what they write now:

"We have thirty-two members, and all our meetings are well attended, especially the mothers' meetings. In the last year we held nine public meetings, had two lectures and four socials. We have twelve department superintendents, all doing good work. We use the responsive reading and department and purity leaflets. Our W. C. T. U. was represented in the street parade the Fourth of July, by a wagon draped in white and five girls dressed in white with white banners with our mottoes on them. We also placed a barrel of ice water in a public place, and sent ten dollars for the Temple, and held two memorial meetings for our beloved Frances E. Willard. We have responded to all calls made on us and hope with God's help we may continue to do so. A Y is just started with fourteen members, which we hope will prove a success and a blessing."

MRS. THACHER writes in a private letter: "I have been to Camp Alger. I went down in the hottest weather that we have had, and I never experienced such before, it was simply dreadful. I spoke in the Y. M. C. A. tent of the third New York, and found the boys so ready to hear and Chaplain Brainard such a noble man. I took over four dozen oranges, but I found over two hundred sick men. Fortunately I had just enough to hand out in two tents among the sick. Oh, it made my heart ache to see so many ill and so little had I to give. The boys told me that they do not get what is sent, the nurses and others use the delicacies. But I am so glad to tell you that all we give is delivered into the boys' hands by our own women. I have been very jealous of every cent of money and only send it where I know the things will reach the boys. Over one hundred in Camp Alger and our own state Camp Voorhees have signed the pledge. How I wish I had comfort bags for them all. I do not send mine now in a bulk, but send to the boy who signs the pledge and gives me his name and address. I also give them a little song book. I am trying now to arrange to have one struck off for us with our name on the outside, and two or three songs that we use and like and a pledge in the back to be signed and sent to mother or sweetheart, and a coupon to tear off and send to me. I have no money for it, but if I can get it done and pay as the orders come in to me, perhaps it will pay for itself."

THE members of the Newport News, Va., Woman's Christian Temperance Union wish to thank the local union of Chillicothe, Ohio, for the fine barrel of delicacies and substantials sent them for distribution among the sick soldiers camping at this post. If the ladies could have seen how appreciative these poor, sick boys were, they would have needed no other thanks for their kindness. We also extend our thanks to these Ohio sisters who helped us care for the poor sick boys. We have administered to their wants, and done what we could to make them comfortable, have supplied thousands of pages of literature and distributed housewives which the ladies of Wisconsin W. C. T. U. were so kind as to send. Two of our merchants gave us a barrel handsomely painted pale blue with a band of white around it, and our letters, W. C. T. U., in gilt on it. We have kept it filled with ice water daily for the camp. We have also furnished several hundred meals to the boys, and found several young men who were not abstainers but had white-ribbon mothers. One young man from the Fifth Illinois regiment (Colonel Culver's) called on me yesterday to know where our temperance meeting was to be held. He said his mother was a member of the W. C. T. U., and that she had died since he left his home, and he wanted to attend this meeting for her sake. We invited him to dine with us, and we hope the president of the local W. C. T. U. will look after him and all these dear boys when they return to their various homes. While looking after the soldiers sent here ready for embarking on the steamers, we have not forgotten our own "Huntington Rifles," Fourth Virginia, camping at Cuba Libra, Jacksonville, Fla. Our union sent them a large box containing hams, canned goods, catsup, pickles, lime juice and fifty pounds of fruit cake, which we learned was most thoroughly enjoyed by the boys. Our union disbanded before the troops began to arrive, consequently the work has all been done by a committee of four. We wish we could have done more, as there was such a rich harvest here, but we were not physically able.

The Home

Quits.

Said a young and tactless husband
To his inexperienced wife,
"If you would but give up leading
Such a fashionable life,
And devote more time to cooking—
How to mix and when to bake—
Then perhaps you might make pastry
Such as mother used to make."

And the wife, resenting, answered,
For the worm will turn, you know,
"If you would but give up horses
And a score of clubs or so
To devote more time to business—
When to buy and what to stake—
Then perhaps you might make money
Such as father used to make."

Small Ills.

It is often easier to bear a great sorrow than to endure small ills and remain of even, sweet disposition. It is the misfortune of women to be more delicate in their nervous structure than men, and to be more often the victims of petty annoyances such as rasp the nerves and temper. It is peculiarly woman's duty to attend to minutiæ. Housekeeping demands strict attention to small things. If the housekeeper has trouble in her work it is a petty matter to talk of. It comes from the petulance of servants, the failure of the yeast perhaps to rise, or the stupidity of some one who has left the oven door open and upset all her plans for dinner. Some one, perhaps, has carelessly stopped the plumbing, and a large bill is incurred from this source, which makes it impossible for her to buy a much needed winter bonnet for herself or new coats for the children. The matters essential to health come first, and at any cost the water pipes must be repaired.

It is just such petty things as we have named which wear one's patience out and sometimes make the middle-aged woman a hopeless scold or a nervous invalid, when she should be a placid, even-tempered, happy woman. The power to endure small ills, however, can be cultivated. It is an easy matter at the beginning of life to look upon things philosophically, and check the frown or hasty word which rises to the lips. If a mother would only remember that her whole future happiness depends upon the restraint she exercises on such occasions it would save her. More than her own happiness, the happiness of her children and that of all who love her depend upon it. It is an effort that she must make, at whatever cost. The habit of self-restraint and self-repression grows upon one who practices it. Finally it becomes second nature to speak a gentle word instead of a fretful one when an annoying blunder occurs. A word fitly spoken without temper will do more to prevent another blunder than all the sharp utterances of anger.

Unhappy fretfulness also grows with the indulgence in the habit until the person becomes an unbearable companion and sometimes drives all her friends from her. This vice is by no means limited to women. We have known men who were chronic scolds, and who rendered their homes and offices abodes of misery by fretting over small matters, though this is not often a masculine fault.

MAGAZINES FOR THE MONTH.

In the August REVIEW OF REVIEWS the editor discusses some of the problems likely to arise from the annexation of Hawaii, our duty in the Philippines and the Ladrones, our prospective relations with the European governments and other timely questions.

It is a long time since THE FORUM has had a number so varied and generally interesting as that for August. The topics range from the Spanish War to spiritualism, and, without exception, the authors write with the force and freshness of men who are thoroughly interested in their subjects.

Short stories by Rudyard Kipling, Rowland E. Robinson, William Allen White, Cutcliffe Hyne, and several others, make MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE for August especially a fiction number. All are interesting, cheerful, and wholesome, affording a diversion that is both nutritious and palatable.

The extremely important question of the education of women for domestic life is discussed by Mary Roberts Smith in APPLETON'S POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for August. Mrs. Smith shows that a special training is just as desirable and as necessary to efficiency in domestic life as it is in any of the other professions.

An important feature of the August CHAUTAUQUAN is a strong article by Rev. Anna Howard Shaw, on "Women in the Ministry," in which she says that women not only must equal, but they must excel men in the ministry before they will be recognized. The article is well written and shows portraits of some of the prominent women of the profession.

The complete novel in the August issue of LIPPINCOTT'S, "The Last Rebel," is by Joseph A. Altsheler, now well known as a writer of war stories. The scene is a lonesome post in the southern Alleghanies, held for the Confederacy by a chivalrous monomaniac after the unpleasantness of 1861–65 had ended. The action deals with the experiences of a Northerner, who unadvisedly wandered into those parts and found himself a prisoner.

The ATLANTIC, for August, is largely a fiction number, and contains a group of short stories and sketches of unusual variety and quality. The quaint drollery of Mrs. Ritchie's "Ah-Chy"; the "Kiplingesque Lake Sailors," of Morgan Robertson; the sentiment and pathos of Mrs. Earl's "Tinkling Simlins," and H. P. Whitmarsh's "Driftwood," with the rollicking humor and strong characterization of Florence Ingersoll's "The Commodore," produce a combination of uncommon variety, brilliancy and interest.

The midsummer number of ST. NICHOLAS is full of seasonable and timely articles. It opens with a story of the navy, "Margery and the Captain," by Anna A. Rogers. Mr. E. B. Rogers, U. S. N., contributes an article on "Big Guns and Armor of Our Navy," telling about the weapons of offense and the means of defense which are so much in evidence these days. Mr. Rogers describes in brief the manner of making and testing guns and armor, and gives an account of the first time that a monster thirteen-inch cannon was fired.

Wilhelmina, who is to be crowned Queen of the Netherlands on September 6 next, has personally sent to Mr. Bok, the editor of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, himelf a Hollander by birth, one of her private portraits for publication in the next number of his magazine. It is the last portrait which will be taken of the little lady before her coronation, and will be printed in connection with a specially prepared sketch, showing the personality of the first Queen of Holland from every point of view.

GODEY'S MAGAZINE for August presents several bright topics for pleasant midsummer reading. Among these are the illustrated travel stories, "Fisher Folk of the Gulf of Mexico," by Leonora E. Ellis, and life among the Germans at "Freiburg in Baden," by Katharine F. Reighard, that tell of the lives and customs of certain people little understood by American readers. An article on "The Lebanon Shakers," by Charles S. Haight, is also of marked interest.

The August number of the CENTURY has a number of features of special timeliness. Mrs. Mary Bradford Crowninshield writes a striking romance of a Spanish-American dictator, the title of her story being "Sangre de Cristo." Frederick A. Ober, late commissioner in Porto Rico for the Columbian Exposition, contributes a paper on "The Island of Porto Rico," in which he describes the characteristics of the land and the people, and tells of the vast resources of the island. The destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay is described by three eye-witnesses, there being narratives by Col. George A. Loud, Dr. Charles P. Kindleberger, junior surgeon of the Olympia, and Joel C. Evans, gunner of the Boston. There is also given Colonel Loud's diary, written during the battle.

Take Notice.

Miss Cornelia M. Dow, Portland, Me., custodian of the Willard fund for the payment of the Temple trust bonds, will receive all contributions offered by those who are interested in the effort being put forward by the National Woman's Christian Temperance union to help retire these bonds. Miss Dow is a woman of well-known financial ability and does this work gratuitously. As the daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, this loyal white-ribboner has the highest esteem and regard of all connected with the movement, and it was by cordial agreement with Mrs. Carse and at the request of Miss Willard that she accepted the foregoing trust.

Palmyra Springs Sanitarium.

The thoughts of worn, weary and sick people naturally turn to a quiet place where all things are conducive to health and rest. Such places are ideal but they exist. To find beautiful springs with healthgiving properties; a lake with arms stretching off between the green hillsides, and alcoves filled with water lilies; to find a sky of softest tints spread like a canopy over fields and flocks, hills and valleys; to find a commodious house with perfect sanitary conditions — light, airy, well furnished, scrupulously clean, with walls tinted in oil, long, broad halls, wide verandas, gas, electric bells, elevator, etc., and wearing a homelike, hospitable air that makes one drop the traveling bag with a sigh of relief at having reached a place of comfort heretofore existing only in dreams—go to Palmyra, Wis.

One may seek this place simply to be built up by generous, healthful food and the best of water, to drive, to row, to fish, to take Turkish, Russian, vapor, salt, or electric baths with massage treatment; to exercise in the gymnasium and Swedish movement rooms; or one may go there any time of the year, for skillful medical attendance. The name of Dr. Lawrence H. Prince, as medical superintendent, with a large consulting staff, aided by trained nurses, promises to sick people, and those convalescing from illness or severe surgical operations, all that skill and devotion has to offer. For illustrated descriptive pamphlet write to the sanitarium, or to Charles A. Birney, 912 Venetian Building, Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

Personal.

If it is important to have your letters reach the business manager direct, kindly mark the envelope personal. The mail which does not bear this mark is opened in the business office, classified, sent to various departments, and faithful clerks employed to fill orders, ship publications, etc. Complaints should in all instances be sent direct to the business manager and marked personal. If you have special requests to make, please send these direct to business manager, marking envelope personal. Strict business letters should be addressed to Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Room 1110, The Temple, Chicago, not to the editors or National officers, as this frequently causes long delay in filling orders, etc.

"A Wheel Within a Wheel, or How to Ride a Bicycle."

This is the season when not only the son and daughter enjoy a daily outing on the fascinating wheel, but often father and mother and entire families indulge in the fascinating exercise. Miss Willard's devotion to the "silent steed" was well known to all white-ribboners and she believed it to be a means of soul as well as physical development. Her reflections as she mastered her "Gladys" are given to the world in her own inimitable style in the little book, "A Wheel within a Wheel," and she was very desirous it should be in the home of every white-ribboner where the bicycle was admitted, and in every one where it had no welcome.

It contains a number of excellent pictures of Miss Willard which do not appear in any other book and as the price has been reduced to 40 cents postpaid, it should at this season of the year meet with a large sale. If you have no interest in the "wheel" you can not fail to be interested in the adroit and inimitable way in which she "draws a moral" even from so ordinary a matter as riding a bicycle. Price 40 cents postpaid, W. T. P. A., the Temple, Chicago.

Our friends who order small amounts of literature, promising to remit by return mail, often stating they do not know the price, etc., can not understand the annoyance of carrying these small memorandum accounts or they would be more prompt in remitting.

We ask as a favor that those reading our leaflets, will forward to us their opinions of any particular one which has been especially helpful in their union, their neighborhood or to some friend. This will materially help others in selecting appropriate literature.

Memorial Number.

We can not believe any one would intentionally neglect the payment for the Memorial Number, but many individuals who asked as a special favor a little time until they could dispose of them, have evidently forgotten their indebtedness, and we hope early attention will be given to this matter.

As the time for annual state conventions draws near, and those in charge of programs are selecting appropriate music, we have decided to offer our Convention Hymnals—which are an abridged form of The White Ribbon Hymnal—at 15 cents each, 25 copies $2.50, (no discount) These books contain a choice collection of music selected by Miss Marie Brehm. The cover is manila and sufficiently strong for convention purpose. For local unions no better investment could be made than in a number of these Convention Hymnals. Price single copies, 15 cents; 25 copies, $2.50.

The topic for the SEPTEMBER RESPONSIVE READING is "W. C. T. U. Literature," and is written by Miss Helen L. Hood, National superintendent of that department. We are told why the department is an important ally—or rather a necessary aid—to all other departments; how to push it; what helps are needed and where to procure them. Methods of circulating literature are given, also suggestions for furnishing the "wherewithal." Local superintendents of literature should see that this Reading is read and discussed by the unions generally.

BIBLE READING FOR SEPTEMBER. "Have Faith in God," by Mrs. Dora Webb, general secretary of the Reform Legislation branch of the purity department. The subject is treated under the following heads: (1) How can we obtain intelligent faith? (2) Saving faith; (3) Working faith; (4) A comprehensive faith; (5) An overcoming faith; (6) A steadfast faith. And the whole gospel of Christian faith is summed up in the words of the Master: "Believe that ye receive and ye shall have."

Again we must remind our readers to write the name of the state at the heading of all letters. Envelopes are often mislaid or destroyed, and frequently we can obtain no clue to the writer of a letter, who is naturally offended because her requests do not receive prompt attention. Please, dear friends, put the name of the state always in your letters, as there are many towns of the same name in different states.

We are about to prepare a list of religious books of especial value to ministers and teachers, also a list of boys' books, which we can sell at greatly reduced rates to those desiring to add to their collection of books. As the supply is limited we cannot distribute them promiscuously, but shall be pleased to send them to those desiring to purchase new books at a reasonable rate.

We are glad to send sample copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Crusader for free distribution at conventions, but from friends who do not even send stamps to cover postage, we hope for some especial effort to secure subscriptions both to the official organ and to the young people's interesting monthly.

LORD ROBERTS says that the total abstinence movement in India is worth £600.000. "Give me a tee-total army, Mr. Caine," he once said at Calcutta, "and I will take it anywhere."

MOUNT VESUVIUS is now in a state of eruption from a new crater. The eruption is supposed to be connected with the seismic disturbance felt at Messina and in southern Italy.

DR. JOSEPH PARKER, who has preached for twenty-four years, three times a week, in the City Temple, London, enjoys robust health, eats plenty of plain food, is very partial to oatmeal porridge, drinks neither wine nor beer, and abominates tobacco.

COUNCILLOR JOSEPH MALINS, as the head of the Good Templar Order, has been visiting the Grand Lodge of Denmark and Germany, in which countries the Order, after a long struggle, is now making much headway. Denmark has 120 lodges, and Germany 155, and more are being formed every week.

MILLS Hotel No. 2, the second venture in practical philanthropy by Mr. D. O. Mills, of New York city, has recently been opened to the public. It contains some important improvements, evolved by the experience of No. 1, and has accommodation for 600 respectable men at twenty and thirty cents a night.

DRUNKENNESS does not decrease for the simple reason that we are in the drunkard-making business as a nation, and no sane man has a right to expect that "moral suasion" can cope with the evil when the government ("we the people") is systematically extending and enlarging the opportunities for "immoral suasion."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

THE Jewish World (London) announces that the Universal Peace Union of the United States of America has decided upon the holding of a Peace Congress in Jerusalem at the beginning of the new century. The Sultan of Turkey has notified his willingness to permit the congress being held in the Holy City, and a committee has been selected to make the necessary arrangements.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made by the English war office to provide at each camping ground in the new manœuvre district in Wiltshire a marquee, with bar, to be used as a temperance tent for each division. These will be supplied with hot coffee the first thing in the morning, and with all kinds of refreshments at popular prices. Provision is to be made for writing letters, etc., and the contractors have expressed their intention of making them as attractive as possible

THE Londonderry Temperance Council has opened another coffee stand. The Council was formed in 1877. Two years after it made its first venture, which was so successful that it has now inaugurated its fourth The mayor performed the ceremony, and Mr. A. M'Vicker, J. P., gave an address, in which he stated what the Council had been doing. It had been a pioneer in the matter of providing cheap and useful refreshments. It had disseminated information as to the nature of alcohol it had spent during the past year £65 in prizes to children exhibiting proficiency in the scientific aspects of temperance, and it was projecting other plans for more effective work.

Notes and Comments.

IT is always gratifying to THE UNION SIGNAL when the honors of other Christian societies fall upon white-ribboners. We are therefore pleased and proud that the Christian Workers' Union, at its annual meeting recently held at Old Orchard, elected Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens as one of its board of directors. The president of the association is the Rev. Mr. Bates, now pastor of the Bromfield Street M. E. church, Boston.

THE Rev. Dr. George Boardman, of Philadelphia, says: "I like an Anglo-Saxon alliance as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough, especially if it means a military alliance, offensive and defensive, against other nations. The alliance I believe in is a pan-human alliance, a terrestrial alliance, an alliance with all the nations of earth." That is the kind of an alliance we believe in, but we would like to add that we believe also in a celestial alliance, an alliance with God and all the nations of heaven.

THE murder of a woman in one of the saloon dives of Chicago has once more called attention to the all-night saloons and aroused the public to the dangers of these "crime-breeding" places. Consequently, another spasmodic effort is being made by the authorities to enforce the midnight closing ordinance. Give the police "sufficient positive instructions," say the newspapers, and it can be done. Perhaps some "legal male mind" will explain why it is necessary for the police to wait for special instructions before making arrests for flagrant violation of law!

AN indignant public has been clamoring for an investigation of the military methods, which have resulted in so much needless suffering and many unnecessary deaths among our soldier boys. The war department has at last become convinced that it is time to "do something." An official inquiry has begun, and a congressional investigation later seems certain. The most potent argument for this tardy move is, without doubt, the fact that democrats are beginning to make political capital out of the maladministration of the war department, with every hero's grave at Montauk and other military camps and every starved and emaciated soldier as an object lesson.

A CERTAIN organ which is the mouthpiece of the liquor trade is inclined to commiserate instead of congratulate the people of Porto Rico upon their adoption by the United States. They would not be so eager to become "Americanos," it opines, if they knew about our civic federations and kindred American institutions. "After they have a trial of local option," it adds, "get 'temperance' instruction in their public schools, have a W. C. T. U. and a prohibition paper in every town, they may think Alfonso XIII was not so bad after all." Seeing that life in the United States is so irksome to the poor liquor seller, how would it be for him to seek a more congenial clime under the governmental and educational institutions of Spain? We are sure we are willing.

IT was a woman, after all, who was the moving power in the investigation of army abuses. After seeing for herself how things were at Montauk, Mrs. John A. Logan proceeded, in her characteristically forcible manner, to "go after" the war department. She went to General Alger and informed him of the drunkenness, incompetency, and general criminal neglect of those in authority, telling him more truths in one evening, says our informant, than he could have obtained from the official reports in a lifetime. When she got through with him the secretary packed his grip and started on a visit of inspection to Camp Wikoff. What soldier, sick or well, will deny that Mrs. Logan would herself make a most efficient war secretary? The full privileges of a citizen should at least be extended to her—to be exercised or not as she saw fit.

IT is said that since July 1, two hundred and fifty-three Chicago saloons have closed, and that the city collector expects at least three hundred more to go out of the business before January 1. The increase of the tax on beer is given as the reason for this decrease. The brewers are not patriotic enough to submit cheerfully to the additional one dollar per barrel for war revenue, and they add it to the price at which their product is sold to the retailer. The keen competition in the crowded districts of Chicago as to which saloon shall give most beer for a nickel makes it impossible for the saloonkeeper to charge up the tax to the customer, hence those places which depend mostly upon the sale of beer for their profits are, they claim, forced to retire from the business. We do not wonder that the retailers object to having the newspapers say "the brewers are doing nobly." But while saloon men complain—and justly so—that the brewers "shift the taxes onto the other fellow," they must remember that the public is quite aware that the "other fellow" would do the same thing if he could.

DR. FREDERICK D'EVELYN, of San Francisco, has, for months past, been making experiments with a view to learning the effect of alcohol upon vegetable life. He has demonstrated that while it may preserve specimens in which life is extinct, it is the great destroyer of life when administered to the living plant as nourishment. His experiments sustain the theory of hereditary drunkenness. From potatoes and onions, fed with a low percentage of alcohol, he has raised other potatoes and onions, and has found that the effect upon the cell life of the parent plant is not lost until the fourth and sometimes even the fifth generation, and then only in cases where the plant has been fed on less than six per cent of alcohol. The change that takes place in the vegetable cell is, says Dr. D'Evelyn, similar to that found in the blood corpuscles of an habitual drunkard. Alcohol has a wonderful affinity for water, as everybody knows, and it is the power of the alcohol to dehydrate, or take the water out of the plant or animal cells, that makes it so destructive. Its continued use, he claims, dehydrates the blood to such an extent that the corpuscles do not furnish sufficient nourishment to the nerve system, and it is the craving of the nerves for food which creates the appetite for stimulants. Truly, medical science is showing itself to be more and more the handmaid of temperance. The policy of prohibition and the principle involved therein has everything to gain by investigation and education.

Current Events.

The Canadian Plebiscite.

STUDENTS of sociology all over the world will watch for the coming vote in regard to prohibition in Canada. The time is set for the latter part of next month. This will be the first time of its use in the national sphere and applied to a great issue. There is a disposition to raise the question above parties and partisanship, and to deal with it solely from the standpoint of good citizenship.

It is asserted that an overwhelming proportion of the people of Canada believe strongly in the effectiveness of legislative action following upon and securing the fruits of temperance work, but on the other hand it is acknowledged that there are still some who oppose prohibitory legislation on the ground that the state has no right to dictate to the individual as to what he shall eat or drink, and that it is the abuse of liquor that constitutes the evil, etc. These arguments are advanced by those who oppose vaccination in the public schools and sanitary laws, or by those engaged in the business, and it is believed that they constitute but a small part of the people of Canada.

It is already true that the cutting off of licensed houses and the refusal of the commissioners to give licenses in the residence districts have made it possible to walk miles along the uptown streets of Toronto without passing a saloon. In large sections of the Maritime Provinces there is practical prohibition now.

In a notable speech in the House of Commons, Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointed out that throughout whole tiers of counties in the Province of Quebec there were no houses licensed to sell liquor, and that Quebec, through its devoted clergy, was in the forefront of temperance reform. The important question is said to be, not the justice of such a law, but whether temperance sentiment is strong enough to enforce such a law. Prohibition in Canada will necessitate the levying of some $7,000,000 of taxation that is now obtained from liquor upon some other articles of commerce, or the raising of it in some other way, and the tendency of this will be to lessen the popularity of prohibition.

The Toronto Globe closes an interesting article on the subject by saying: "Looking at the question as a whole, however, and recognizing its difficulties, but recognizing also the advance in moral and material well-being that would unquestionably follow effective prohibition, we can not see any reason why temperance men at the supreme crisis in the history of the movement in Canada should fail to record their votes for prohibition. To stay away from the polls means moral cowardice. To vote against prohibition, even when one has doubt as to whether the time is fully ripe for it, will be wrongly construed both at home and abroad as a vote against temperance. Every vote for prohibition, on the other hand, even if the measure is not adopted, is evidence of the strength of temperance sentiment, of the ripening of public opinion in favor of prohibition and of the desire that Canada should occupy a high place among the enlightened nations of the earth."

Military Notes.

THE American navy is assembling at Hampton Roads, and the American volunteer army is gradually being mustered out.

GENERAL MILES and staff are expected daily to sail for New Orleans. General Brooke will be left in command of Porto Rico.

GOVERNOR HASTINGS has appointed Francis Murphy, Pittsburg's famous temperance advocate, chaplain of the Fifth Pennsylvania regiment at Chickamauga. Mr. Murphy takes the place of Chaplain Joseph F. Hartman, of Altoona, who resigned a month ago to resume his church duties.

SECRETARY LONG has issued a permit to the Army and Navy Christian Commission to work among the Spanish prisoners near Portsmouth, N. H., and two men who can speak Spanish are already on the way, fully equipped for the same class of work which is being done among the boys on deck and in the camps of the navy and army.

AT Manila:—General Merritt has assumed governmental duties. Two more transports have arrived with American troops. Aguinaldo, the insurgent chief, has declared he is satisfied with America's occupation of the fort, and has notified this government that the Filipinos are disbanding.

IN addition to the $50,000 appropriated by Congress and distributed by ex-Consul General Lee for the relief of the people of Cuba, the Central Cuban Relief Committee appointed by the President, distributed foods, medicines and general supplies to the poor and suffering Cubans to the cash value of $321,619. Of this amount $175,032 was in cash contributions and $146,587 in supplies. The total shipments of supplies was 2,942,102 kilos, or 3,236 tons, of which quantity 2,856,833 kilos were food, 66,753 kilos were clothing, 13,652 kilos medicines and 4,864 kilos were miscellaneous supplies.

Temperance.

OHIO saloons have increased 861 since January 1. The Dow tax law is doing its business for that state!

GENERAL WOOD has issued an order in Santiago, forbidding the sale of whisky, beer and wine everywhere, and provided severe penalties for infractions of the rule.

THIRTEEN lager beer breweries in Chicago have formed a combination, under the laws of New Jersey, called the United Breweries Company. The capital is $5,600,000.

"THE committee of entertainment in Honolulu paid out hundreds of dollars for lemonade, ice cream, fruit, etc., but not a cent for liquor," for the receptions recently given to the American troops en route to Manila.

THE attention of every Grand Lodge of the I. O. G. T. in the United States has been called to the action of the Good Templars of Waukesha, Wis., who petitioned the Hawaiian commissioners to give those islands a prohibitory law.

MR. JOHN M. SMYTH has directed public attention to the fact that there are thirteen pieces of school fund property in the heart of the city of Chicago on which saloons are located, and that the school board has, with one exception, leased this property with full knowledge of the character of the business to be carried on by the lessees.

ANDREW DEES, a saloon-keeper of Geneseo, Ill., has been fined $600 and sent to jail for 260 days for selling liquor to minors. He gave liquor to a boy who had a written permit from his parents. The court decided that the state protects a boy until he is twenty-one, and that he could not have the liquor, permit or no permit.

About Women.

MRS. MARGARET F. EADS is the first woman to take advantage of the new voluntary bankruptcy law by filing a petition in the United States district court.

QUEEN WILHELMINA of Holland is to be sworn in with proper ceremonies at Amsterdam on the 6th of September. She will be eighteen years old on August 31, and a fortnight of jubilation will begin on that day.

MISS ELSBETH PHILLIPS, of Somerville College, Oxford, England, has been elected to the Geoffrey Fellowship at Newnham. The electors are the Associates of Newnham College, and the Fellowship is tenable for three years.

MISS EDITH SHAW, who was commissioned to prepare the resolution of condolence to the widow of the late Hon. W. E. Gladstone, passed by the Toronto city council, has completed her work, and it is said to be handsomely executed.

IN a Russian district, comprising some fifteen square miles, the public affairs are said to be administered entirely by women. During the greater part of the year the inhabitants are almost exclusively women. In the early spring all the able-bodied males emigrate in search of work to the large towns and remain absent nine months or more, leaving their wives and daughters to cultivate the fields and manage local affairs, generally under the presidency of a mayoress.

Abroad.

THE first railway mail service in the island of Cuba was started August 24.

THE British flag has been raised over Santa Cruz and the Duff Islands in the Pacific.

A MOVEMENT for the annexation of Jamaica to America is rapidly spreading in that island.

THE queen regent of Spain has signed the royal decree convening the cortes for September 5.

THE work of the Red Cross has doubled the last two weeks. About $4,000 a day has been spent.

THE people of Havana are said to be divided upon the question of annexation to the United States.

IT is understood that the Spanish American Peace Commission will be the guests of the French government.

THE report is confirmed of a massacre in Porto Rico, by Spaniards, of about one hundred native women and children.

THE leaders of both parties in New South Wales having declared for "adult suffrage," the women will soon vote.

ON Sunday, August 21, for the first time in the history of the island, there was a public Protestant religious service in Porto Rico.

A. P. LOW of the geological survey of Canada has gone to Labrador to study the geology of that almost virgin territory and make a geological map of it.

THE steamer Heligoland, with the Swedish polar expedition which set out to search for Professor Andree, has returned for repairs. The rescuers went to within 600 miles of the pole, but found no trace of the explorer.

ON August 16 the final transfer of the sovereignty over the Hawaiian Islands took place, and the stars and stripes, amid impressive ceremonies, took the place of the flag which for eighty-five years had been the flag of an independent nation.

SPAIN has named her military commissioners. For Cuba: Major General Gonzales Parrado, Rear Admiral Pastor y Landero, Marquis Montero. For Porto Rico: Major General Ortega y Diaz, Commodore of First Rank Vallarino y Carracco, Judge Advocate Sanchez del Aguila y Leon.

AUGUST 23 a second daughter was born into the Curzon family. Mr. Curzon, it will be remembered, is the newly appointed viceroy of India, and his wife is the daughter of L. Z. Leiter, of Washington, D. C. The interesting event took place at The Priory, Surrey, the beautiful home which the Curzons rent of Lady Henry Somerset.

LORD SALISBURY is said to have obtained concessions from the Queen which enables him to change the entire attitude of England toward Russia. The ministry has made definite proposals to Russia relating to British supremacy in the Yang-tse-Kiang valley, and if satisfactory answers are not forthcoming, the British fleet in China waters will make a formidable demonstration.

GENERAL KITCHENER, with his army of twenty-five thousand trained warriors, is preparing to make a grand advance on Khartoum. It is said that the capture of Khartoum will not be the culmination of the campaign. When the final rout of the dervishes is completed, Kitchener is to leave his Egyptians with their British officers to hold the fruits of the conquest, while he pushes on with his English troops to the Uganda, with the possible subjection of Menelik and occupation of Abyssinia as a side issue.

THE Spanish steamer Alicante, with the first of Spain's repatriated soldiers from Santiago de Cuba, reached Corunna, August 24. The queen regent sent a message to the troops congratulating them upon their conduct in the field and saying that she proposed to be the first to welcome them home. The reading of the dispatch was received with great enthusiasm. There was no yellow fever on board, though sixty died of other diseases during the voyage.

Liberty.

BY CORA E. SEBERRY.

[Recited at the Temperance Congress at Prohibition Park, July 4.]

DEEP down within each human heart
Though worn by earthly strife,
There is an aspiration born
Which leaves us not with life,
Born in the bond, as in the free,—
The yearning after liberty.

The flower pent within the seed
Must burst its cell or die.
The winds that hold us in their power,
The river rushing by,
Proclaim in forceful signs, not few,
That Nature seeks her freedom, too.

And so the cry of serfdom's pain
Echoes in manly breast—
For principle, men give their lives,
When not themselves oppressed—
They feel it God's divine decree
That all men shall have liberty.

Freedom from tyranny and chains,
They urge, is but man's due;
And is he white or brown or black,
That truth is always true;
So lives go down in war's red sea
That 'neath our flag man may be free.

And as we gaze upon that flag,
Emblem of mighty powers,
Our bosoms swell with love and pride
That such a flag is ours.
Where'er it waves, on land or sea,
It is the type of liberty.

Yet let not patriotic pride
Completely fill the heart;
Our dear, old, honored, blood-bought flag
May speak a better part;
Oh, may it emblematic be
Of larger, nobler liberty!

When this great government of ours
Shall bruise the head of Sin,
Shall set its heel on legal crime,
Shall cleanse itself within,
Shall on the side of justice stand
And earn the name of "Christian land";

When men shall prize each other's souls,
And fight as well as pray,
To lead them into righteousness,
Not in temptation's way;
When they shall feel no force of earth
Can equal that which right gives birth;

When man shall rise in conscious might
No plaything of the hour,
And prove through sovereignty of will
The strength of moral power;
When he shall by his acts proclaim,
That truth will not be gagged or slain;

When woman stands beside her mate
As human, not as clod,
Both working in that sexless sphere
Of mental growth for God—
Then will our flag symbolic be
Of God's unbounded liberty!

So shall it speak of better things
Than Abel's blood to men—
A country pure and just and true,
Eden won back again,
A people from sin's bondage free,
Who know the perfect liberty.

Levi.

In Three Chapters.

BY ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS.

CHAPTER II.

IN the meantime, quite a "building boom" began in the vicinity and Levi had no difficulty in securing plenty of work, for the rude style of building required little better than the so-called "hammer and saw carpenter."

The mother caught the boy's enthusiasm and worked harder than ever at the tubs that she might help pay for the lots and so own their home debt free. So hard indeed did she work, that one day in midwinter, a sudden "misery in the back" caught her sharply and laid her helpless upon the bed. Then all Levi's wages were needed for food and medicine. His face grew anxious and careworn as he hurried between his work and the cabin where his mother lay helpless. For a few days at the onset of her illness, the husband stayed at home and pretended to care for her; but saloon and prospect hole soon claimed their victim, and truth to tell neither mother nor son were sorry to see him go.

Levi prepared his mother's breakfast each morning, and made her as comfortable as he could for the day, leaving water and medicines within easy reach, and then went heavy-hearted to his work. He engaged a neighbor woman to look in upon her occasionally during his absence, and at noon cared for her again, scarcely taking time to eat sufficient food himself. His sleep, too, was so disturbed by anxiety and nursing that he often found it hard to keep awake during working hours.

So the winter dragged along and springtime came to the calendar but not to the mountain town, for at these altitudes winter holds its own during portions at least of April and May. The doctors gave the invalid no hope of ever being able to walk again. It was a serious spinal trouble brought on by overwork and heavy lifting. If a hospital treatment could be had, she might in time be able to sit in a wheeled chair, but that was all.

Poor Levi! Boy though he was, he grew old and stooped in appearance, but became more than ever "joined" to his mother. Finally there came, one day in May, a letter with a Missouri postmark. It contained news both sad and joyous. The rheumatic grandfather was dead and granny was coming to live with them, and take care of mother! She would follow her letter in a week, and told them upon what train to expect her.

What a busy, happy week that was to Levi! He felt neither weariness nor cold, but was up before daylight each morning, and worked until late at night preparing for granny's coming. He partitioned off one corner of the living room into a cozy bedroom, with its door just opposite mother's bed. In this he placed a comfortable cot with white coverlet, and a stand for her Bible and spectacles, just as she had them at home. He partly covered the rough pine boards of the partition with evergreen boughs and trailing kinnikinnick. A strip of rag carpet, saved from the Missouri stock, was spread between the cot and mother's bed.

The end of the week had come and everything was ready. Granny was to arrive next morning. Levi went to his work that afternoon whistling so cheerily that his mother declared she could feel new strength creeping into her back. Then came the fire!

Fire, whisky, dynamite! This was the dread triumvirate which held sway over the town of Cripple Creek, Col., during that never-to-be-forgotten night in the spring of 1896, and nearly wiped the world-famed mining camp out of existence.

From the hillside where he worked, Levi could see, late that afternoon the smoke and flames from the burning saloon where the fire originated; he could hear the shouts of the men who labored in vain to stay the progress of the flames. A stiff breeze was blowing and the air was full of angry sparks and live coals blown from the burning mass. Soon cries from another direction, fresh smoke ascending, the hurrying of the crowd to a new quarter announced that another building had caught fire. This was presently followed by another. The workmen on the hillsides threw down their tools and ran to the scene of disaster, all excepting Levi. He hurried home to his mother, fearful lest the tumult had reached her ears and alarmed her.

The fire department, none too well organized and with scant water-supply, were powerless to subdue the flames. Most of the buildings were light wooden structures which burnt like shavings. Night settled down and still the wind blew and the flames surged on and on. Homeless families sought shelter where they might, on the mountain sides; some with a few hastily gathered goods, others bereft of all except the clothing they wore. Men with teams or any means of transportation, reaped golden harvests in a few hours, such exorbitant prices were asked and offered for moving valuables to places of safety. A saloon-keeper mounted a barrel in front of his door and shouted:

"Free drinks to whoever will help move my stock!"

Instantly the room swarmed with volunteers, the saloon was cleared as if by magic, and a crowd of drink-crazed men returned to the surging mass without. Other liquor-sellers followed this example. Finally, one upon whom the fire pressed so closely that there was no time to save his stock, rolled his barrels into the street and shouted as he knocked in the heads:

"Boys, help yourselves! Don't let this cursed fire burn up good whisky!"

Pushing, struggling, shouting, swearing, the crowd pressed about the barrels. The scene in front of Le Farge's wine shop, so graphically depicted in "The Tale of Two Cities," was re-enacted in the scorched, smoke-filled streets of Cripple Creek on that fatal night; only the poison thus freely circulated was more deadly than French wines.

In the meantime, hoping to stay the progress of the fire, orders had been given to blow up some buildings adjoining the burning ones. Miners are at best somewhat careless in the handling of dynamite, which becomes to them a daily companion and friend, but who can describe the horrors of unlimited dynamite in the hands of an excited crowd of drunken miners, together with the tramps and offscourings of the whole country—yes, of the world even—who at that time swelled the phenomenal population of this mining town! For now the firemen, and even the police themselves, were besotted, and the whole town was at the mercy of an infuriated, irresponsible mob. Men rushed hither and thither, dynamite in hand, and attacked whatever buildings lay in their way regardless of situation. Usually they shouted to the inmates to clear the way, sometimes gave a few moments grace for the removal of valuables, but in some awful instances, so reckless was their drunken haste that lives were sacrificed with property. It is the opinion of men who retained their sober senses during this reign of terror, that as much, if not more, property was lost through the reckless use of explosives as by the fire itself.

As for Levi, but one duty presented itself to him; to stay by his mother and protect their home should the fire reach the outskirts where they lived. He darkened the windows to keep from the invalid's eyes the glare of the burning town; he filled every available vessel with water and put the blankets from his bed in soak, ready tc spread upon the roof should the sparks come near. Fortunately the cabin was isolated from other houses and the fencing of barbed wire with wide apart posts. Near midnight when the carnival of destruction was at its height the wind shifted so that the smoke drifted directly toward them, and as he opened the door a wave of heat struck his face. He shut the door quickly that his mother might not feel it, but the smoke filled the room.

Surrender?

BY ERNEST AVERY.

WHY tolerate the continued rampage of the red-faced monstrosity, the rum power, which besides sowing an annual crop of degradation, and filling our nostrils with the stench thereof, is laying low by assassination some of the bravest heroes that ever unflinchingly went out to do battle with a remorseless foe? It is far from a wise business policy to nourish the vampire that is sucking our best blood. Do we then find it so difficult to suppress the anarchy of the villainous interest that will, law or no law, brew misery and death, distil crime and sin, kill hearts and hopes, that we fain would rid us of further contest by licensing the traffic? If we thus surrender and leave the field, then it is the first time that this people have blotted the bright page of American history by signing an ignominious peace; the first time that they have laid down their arms at a conqueror's feet, or yielded the sword to a victor. Never have the American people fought for a cause that was finally lost. And the indomitable nation that has never cried "enough" to a foreign enemy, ought not to acknowledge itself beaten by this domestic craven. The banner which has floated over every opposing rampart hitherto should not be allowed to stop at the bulwark of the entrenched liquor power.

And it is not really a valiant, gallant foe against which we have to contend; it is not a jolly, rollicking band, proud of its cause that is arrayed over against us. They do not march to the inspiring sound of martial music, and they are ashamed to fly their dismal colors. Any bravado on their part is the sequence of our hesitation; what courage they do possess is a present from us. Accusing conscience makes cowards. They venture out only under cover of our cupidity. There is really very little to fear from a class that skulk in alleys and retreats into the darkness, that approaches brave and honest men from behind. It ought not to be very difficult for a majority to intimidate a minority that blush at the mention of their own calling.

Then what is the matter? It certainly is not lack of the desire. That it cannot be want of courage time past has abundantly demonstrated. What then? It is a shortage of mental and moral vigor and valor. We do not seem to know how to foil their persistence, or do not do it. We do not present a united and determined front to a compact and alert foe. But we must do so; safety requires it; interest demands it. While the emblem of freedom, the stars and stripes, waves over our land, its integrity ought to be maintained and rescued from the grasping red hand of greed. It is time that we proved our courage and stature and capacity to hold the fort, that we vindicated our virility and stepped determinedly to the helm. If a minority is the power it is false to float the flag of democracy; if the majority is not to govern, why not? Submission to the soiled, heavy hand that is dragging us down, down, and trailing the star-spangled banner in the mud is not necessary.

And as the institutions that are, and so long have been, sowing our soil with virulent disease rise in mid air, with the sound of the explosion will mingle the huzza of the victorious army of men and women really emancipated, the death-rattle of much crime and poverty; when the gloomy structures that have so long and so disastrously hid the sun of blessing from America's millions topple to their fall, they will drag down the black ensign which has so long, so conspicuously and disastrously hung over its cities. When broken bars release their hapless prisoners, these may flock to the house of praise; when the saloon no longer obstructs the view men can better see the spires; if the dram-shop gets out of the way Christianity can stride forward. King Alcohol must be dethroned if King Immanuel is to reign.

Exercise.

BY DR. GEORGIA MERRIMAN.

TO limit the word exercise by prefixing the word physical is to fall short of our aim. We intend to include motion in every muscle cell, every brain cell and every tissue cell. To exercise a faculty is to use it, as much as to walk, which involves motion or contraction of muscle, means growth of the same. It is a generally conceded fact that if we inherited perfectly healthy bodies, were enabled to make, by our diet, perfectly normal blood-cells, and by the circulatory apparatus to bring this life-giving fluid to every tissue, we would have a perfect human machine which would run until these conditions were changed.

The first step towards that millennium is to let the electric ether wave of thought play around the physical culture necessary to carry oxygenated blood through the larger blood and lymph vessels to the different tissues where it is distributed through the capillary plexes of nerve and blood vessel. The first inarticulate cry of the infant is nature's method of starting the machinery in its daily revolutions and the air cell receives its power to respond by inflation, to the change of surrounding media.

The general circulation of the blood first receives attention from a careful diagnostition and later the circulation in fixed areas; therefore it is well in physical culture to maintain an equable temperature throughout the system and develop from that basis the local massage. The first essential to rapid movement of blood cell in every tissue is the entrance through pneumonic passages or causeways of plenty of pure, oxygenized or ozonized air, and this the new methods of locomotion are making possible to many heretofore unable to obtain it.

Special pneumonic gymnastics develop the power of inspiration and the increased rapidity gained in change of blood cell from blue to red color, quickens all the secretive functions stimulated thereby, and thus the whole physiological circle completes itself. The lungs supplied liberally with their kind of fuel and the gastronomic mill turning out good products, only localized centers of aggregation must be smoothed out, to enable the human engine to make its mile a minute which the gait of the century seems to demand. Muscle massage completes the circuit of exercise. A bath usually precedes face, arm or leg massage to prepare the skin for greater cell activity. The smallest as well as the largest muscle in the body may be subjected to skillful muscle pinching with advantage, and will be followed by warmth and increased contractile power. The professional massageur understands the anatomical purpose of the muscle he manipulates and its attachments and can more quickly attain than the non-professional what they are both striving for, an increase of heat and potential energy in the muscle thus treated.

The strongest point made by physical culture teachers in favor of their systematic training and its value over and above productive labor taken as a developer of brawn and force, is that almost all of the avocations of both men and women are becoming mechanical, done by machinery, which leaves the switchman's duties only for man to perform, and this limit to muscular activity makes all work sedentary. This makes physical exercise imperative in the play hour, if man would long maintain any degree of usefulness or comfortable well-being.

This generation must meet its new environments with some relief to nerve tissue and throw more work on muscle tissue, or give up the race for intellectual supremacy.

Case "4198."

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

"FOUR thousand one hundred and ninety-eight!" shouted the prosecuting attorney. "Four thousand one hundred and ninety-eight!—Mabel Smith!"

There are times when the significance of one's life is expressed in a number—that is to say, when a man becomes a "hand" or a policeman or a criminal. Mabel Smith had become a criminal —"4198" on the docket.

When her name was proclaimed in the court-room, she ascended the steps from the cell-room and confronted his honor the judge, and his honor the prosecuting attorney, and "203"; "203" was the patrolman.

At her side stood her "counsel"—one of the most brutally degraded, sodden, police-court lawyers whose practice blackens the page of law.

"Mabel Smith—drunk!"

"It's her first appearance," pleaded the lawyer.

But "203," being duly qualified, testified that "4198" was drunk on Wednesday afternoon, and that he had made the arrest. His testimony was bare, heartless, official; but it was not all of the truth.

The facts were these: On Wednesday, Mabel Smith emerged from a "house," went to a saloon sitting-room, bought a bottle of whisky, and drank its contents. Went to another saloon sitting-room, bought another bottle of whisky, drank its contents, and then went upon the streets—one of the city's best residence streets, which runs parallel with one of the city's worst streets. Her black, curly hair uncovered, her loose, long robe unbelted, she staggered along the pavement under the hot June sun. Suddenly entering another "ladies' sitting-room," she remained in its screened mystery a few minutes, then emerged, and reeled along the streets, until, pitying the unfortunate, two colored women took her arms, and turned her face towards 428 George street; 428 George street is a "house"; it was her "home."

It was then that "203" appeared. He seized her, conducted her through various thoroughfares to the patrol box, passing "ladies' sitting-rooms" as he bore his prisoner along, rang up the patrol station, and in a few minutes two policemen appeared. Mabel Smith, profane, reckless, drunk, was on her way to jail. She became "4198," and her case was called on Thursday morning.

When "203" had given his testimony, and the counsel had presented his plea, a citizen suddenly appeared as witness for the defendant. He averred that, though "4198" was intoxicated, she was in charge of friends who would have conducted her to her "home."

Her case was dismissed, and "4198" became Mabel Smith again. But a brief interrogatory disclosed the fact that Mabel Smith's story has its crisis in Victor Hugo's words in "Les Miserables:" "And the unfortunate girl went on the streets." She had come from West Virginia. She was only nineteen years old; but for a year and a half she had been an inmate of 428 George street. Deceived, she was "abandoned"—floated like a derelict upon the seas, upon the rocks—the wreck of a soul.

Having been abandoned by a man, she sold herself to men. Having been abandoned, she abandoned herself; and the unfortunate girl went on the streets, that June afternoon, to buy drink. And the city, finding her drunk, marks her "4198," and arraigns her for crime. But the villains who abandoned her one by one, the saloon keepers who had sold her drink and thrust her upon the streets; the thugs who bore her through the thoroughfares to jail—there was no law against them, although every one of them had violated all the letter and all the spirit of the laws of God and man.

"Four thousand one hundred and ninety-eight —Mabel Smith; drunk; arrested by '203;' dismissed." That is the entry in the police court record.

When "4198" passed out of the court-room she met her "landlady" and a saloon-keeper. They were her only friends. The minister who asked her age, the names of the saloonkeepers who sold her the drink, and pleaded with her to return home, was not her "friend." He only exposed himself to newspaper assaults upon his fair name.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

WONDERFUL testimonies of the saving power of the Christ are heard every day. One said: "He saved the Magdalene, and He saved the thief on the cross, and He saved me; no case is too hard for Jesus to save." A man, who, two years ago, came direct to Willard Hall from Joliet prison, where he has spent much of his life, said he went out of the hall that day a freed man, and had been kept all this time by divine grace from yielding to temptation. A night captain of the city police said he needed such a meeting to help him deal with humanity tenderly, and he often gave up his sleep for a day that he might attend.

Requests for prayer are many and tender; that strength and hearing might come to a mother; for the conversion of a son; for more power in his religious work, a wife writes for her husband.

An old man, seventy-six years of age, had just heard of a job six miles away, and came in before the meeting to sign the pledge, for he wanted the pledge card in his pocket, and he asked for a fresh card to carry for "some other feller to sign." He was going to walk to the place, and needed God's blessing. So many are thankful for work which has come in direct answer to prayer.

A sister, with five brothers, asks prayers that they may be converted. A mother, with eyes sunken from weeping and lips trembling with emotion, asks help for her son, a man of twenty-seven, who, even with the help of a mother, three sisters and a beautiful home, can not let liquor alone.

A solemn stillness reigns as the invitation is given: "If any one in the room desires forgiveness for sin, and will hold up the hand, we will gladly tarry and pray with such." A dear sister, a brother brokenhearted, because his wife had left him; a lad who has slipped in the pathway of life, remain with a band of faithful, loving, Christian workers, and God mercifully answers their prayers.

Oh, sisters, work and pray; we must overcome this destruction of loved ones. Ask God what shall we do next; lean on Him a little harder and work more perseveringly.

The Soldiers' Rest at Chattanooga.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I feel impelled to write to you of the wonderful work being done by the Chattanooga W. C. T. U. I formerly lived here, and was treasurer of the local union, but have not been here for several years. Coming back, three weeks ago, expecting to stay but a few days, I found the ladies here overwhelmed with work, and have been with them since. About the first of June they rented rooms near the railroad station, and established the "W. C. T. U. Soldiers' Rest," where we have reading matter, writing material, ice water, fans, comfortable chairs, a wash room, cots, where sick or tired soldier boys can lie down and rest. We have nothing for sale, just a quiet resting place for soldiers when they come into the city—the only place of the kind here. There has been from 40,000 to 60,000 soldiers at Chickamauga Park, and from 1,000 to 2,000 visit the city daily. The saloons reap a rich harvest. From ten to a hundred men visit the "Rest" every day. Some come in, in an intoxicated condition, and many a mother can thank these devoted women for sobering up her boy and getting him safely started back to the park on the train, rather than leave him to be taken in charge by the "guard" and sent back to camp in disgrace.

Our Chattanooga W. C. T. U. is literally "mothering" the boys of the nation. We receive letters from white-ribbon mothers all over the country, asking us to visit their sick sons. Many have been sick and many have died. Poor women have come here from their distant homes, hoping to nurse back their boys to health, and have taken them home in their caskets. I attended two soldiers' funerals in one day this week; one from Illinois, whose mother came to take care of him and found him dead; she was an entire stranger; several of our ladies attended the funeral services. It was an impressive sight, the casket, draped with a silken flag, around which passed the members of his company, with clanking swords and solemn march. The mother said: "I never belonged to the W. C. T. U., but I will join, and shall never forget this kindness." One poor sick boy from Vermont, to whom I had taken fruit, flowers, etc., said: "We have a W. C. T. U. in our town, but I never paid any attention to it, but if I live to get home, I will do anything I can for it and will bless the name of the W. C. T. U." Every woman engaged in the work can record countless incidents of this kind. While there has been less sickness in the camp at Chickamauga than in any other, considering the greater number here, yet there has been much suffering from want of delicacies and proper care. Mrs. M. L. Welles, superintendent of the Soldiers' Rest, has received over two hundred temperance pledges from soldiers, and she has them divided into tens, and writes to "her boys" wherever they are. Unions from almost every state have sent boxes containing hospital supplies, comfort bags, literature, etc. In some cases requests have been made that the articles sent should be delivered to certain companies, and these have not, in all cases, been complied with. With so many pressing duties, so little help and so little means at command, it has not always been possible to prevent confusion. Over one thousand comfort bags have been delivered. Hundreds of sheets, pillow cases, nightshirts, etc., have been distributed, hundreds of sick boys visited and comforted.

The ladies here have realized that this is the opportunity of their lives to do good and to sow the seeds of temperance. We have distributed thousands of leaflets and hundreds of testaments. Some friends have unwisely paid charges on old papers and magazines which can not be used at all. The soldiers eagerly read up to date periodicals, but we have received boxes and barrels with nothing later than 1890 and some as old as 1872. We beg our friends not to waste their money and have us pay drayage on this old literature, notwithstanding the prospects are that a large number of soldiers will remain at Chickamauga Park for some time. This has been a hard but a blessed work for the W. C. T. U. and we expect much future good to result. We only wish that the whole nation could realize as we women here do, how much of the sickness in camp and the neglect of sanitary measures and lack of care for the sick is due to the intemperance of both soldiers and officials in charge. The press freely criticises the gross neglect of duty but fails to mention the almost universal cause. MRS. K. P. JONES.

A Serious Inquiry in Regard to the War.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—I have received a letter from an active white-ribboner, expressing regret that there has not appeared more by way of plea for peace, in the midst of so much that is supportive of war, and desiring some presentation of the former subject.

While we profess to be actuated by humane considerations in making war with Spain, it is well to look around us and observe the extent to which the process made use of is promotive of the spread of mercy and humaneness among our own people. I thought it not a happy token the other day, in looking over the pages of a farm journal which makes special claim as to the exclusion of harmful advertising (and for that I have been glad to heartily commend it heretofore), to see the displayed advertisement of a "Dewey's jack-knife," the blades of which, as stated, are etched with the words, "No mercy to Spain. Remember the Maine," while the further information is given that "thousands of these are now in the hands of our soldier boys. Blades are finest razor steel, hand forged, keen as a sword." It seemed like a sympathetic sort of coincidence that these no-mercy knives should be made at a Toledo, in Ohio, for at the city of the same name in old Spain were fabricated those famed "Toledo blades" which were the delight of the sword-conquering Moors, and later, of the Spaniards.

While walking along a busy street in Philadelphia a few days ago, my attention was attracted to a wagon drawn up to the curb, rudely lettered placards being displayed upon the sides of the vehicle, one of which read "Remember Santiago!" The owner of the vehicle, a dealer in flags, seemed tobe doing a thriving business in disposing of small-sized patterns of the nation's emblem. The flag should stand for rightly understood patriotism, but it is to be feared that the boy of this generation will interpret it as symbolizing hate and revenge.

The story was told, several weeks since, of one of our soldiers brought home from battle, who had been struck by a Mauser bullet as he was in the act of firing his revolver. "Strange to say," says the newspaper account, "he will not die, but he swears he will make his way back to Cuba and score at least ten dead Spaniards for each of his gashes." How fully does this agree in its hateful impulse with the sentiment of the published war song:

> "The stars and stripes our oriflamme,
> The Maine our battle cry,
> We'll swift avenge our shipmates' death,
> Spain execrate at every breath,
> And fight her till we die."

It is said of Lieutenant-Commander Wainwright, of the converted yacht Gloucester, formerly in command of the Maine, that upon sinking one of Cervera's ships, he made the remark, "Now the Maine is avenged!" Very many religious papers have referred with favorable comment to the unique incident of the captain of the Texas calling his men together when the result of the naval encounter was assured, and giving thanks to the Almighty for the victory. Despite the awful surroundings, the devout spirit of the commander asserted itself. I have yet to see, however, that companion incident mentioned, and the moral properly pointed in those papers, concerning the captain of one of the other battleships, who, being signaled as to the progress of the fight, replied: "I left the Christobal Colon to the westward an hour ago, and the Oregon was giving her hell!" "The negro troops," said a special from Tampa, concerning the first assault on the entrenchments of Santiago, "are said to have fought like demons." And over and over again, descriptions of the various contests have reiterated that the men fought like "demons" or "very fiends." Evidence such as this ought to convince all thoughtful people that the present method of settling the controversy with Spain is, as the venerable Dr. Cuyler has characterized it, "a wretched business"; and likewise that General Sheridan's forcible definition of war in three words, so often quoted of late, is altogether consistent with the truth.

The chaplain of a battleship, addressing a large congregation in New York the other day, on his return from the scene of war, said "that God was with every shell that left the side of an American ship. Not alone that, He was in the eyes and the arms of the gunners, for every shell did its duty." But by whose authority does this man thus definitely declare the high purposes and thoughts of the Omnipotent One? Have we not read, in the detailed accounts of the battle of Manila, that "the hoarse cry of the gunners as they fired the death-dealing shot was, 'Remember the Maine!' that it rung out for defiance and revenge . . . and now that the moment had come to make adequate reply to the murder of the Maine's crew, every man shouted what was in his heart."

We are not, as a people, I feel, commending by this war our religion to the Jews. Many of them, indeed, have been delighted at the present opportunity to wipe out old scores with Spain, which so persecuted their people in the past. For notwithstanding this retaliatory sentiment, an eminent Jewish physician of Philadelphia was severely scored by his brethren in the same profession. The Jewish Rabbi, of Richmond, Va., with whom I had some conversation early in the war, had a while before delivered a discourse on peace, wherein he had reached the humiliating conclusion (as I felt it to be), that all the Christian nations—Germany, France, Italy, Great Britain, the United States, and the rest—which declared that the Jewish religion was in every way inferior to that of their Christ, were, nevertheless, either now or had been, recently engaged in wars among themselves.

There is something in the Good Book several times repeated, against the seeking of honors, the highest places, and the like, but what a record the past three months have made of jealousies, quarrels, heartburnings, and all the ugly list, from the head of the department of war and the admirals and generals, down through all the grades of service. With sundry praiseworthy exceptions the "war for humanity" has the aspect of a race for self-honor and glory.

And how does temperance fare in the fight? The captive Spanish admiral, who is lauded as a most courteous gentleman, had to permit the vessel's stores of wine and spirits to be given out without stint, before the men would consent to go to their posts. They drank the liquors as they served the guns. The scene on the doomed ships was described by eye-witnesses as "a saturnalia of the damned." And on our own side what of the government-protected canteens at the brigade and regimental camps, where volunteers of a few weeks, it may be, are detailed to serve as bartenders for their fellows? It would be a very long chapter, indeed, that would detail the demoralization and immorality following this iniquity. May we not all say as did Sir Charles Napier, in the midst of his triumphs in India, "Accursed war, may I never see another shot fired!" JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

Temperance Progress in Sweden.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having seen in your columns many items about the progress of the temperance cause in Norway and Finland, I thought that a few words about the same work in Sweden might interest the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. Great temperance demonstrations have been held lately in my native land and the best speakers have occupied the platforms where such demonstrations have been held. Processions amounting to several thousand people have been out marching the streets of large and small cities and a general "rousing" is going on all over the land, promising still greater things to come. Here are some interesting figures that speak louder than trumpets: The last statistics in Sweden show that the increase of the population from 1863 to the end of 1896 is one million, making a total of more than five million people in the whole country. The temperance army of Sweden exceeds at present 250,000 people. The following figures show the number of members belonging to the different temperance organizations: Good Templars, 97,000; Blue Ribboners, 70,000; The Templars, 40,000; the National Good Templars, 25,000. The rest belong to smaller organizations of different names and some are independent temperance people. To these we can add the members of the Free Church of Sweden, which, as a rule, all work for the promotion of the temperance cause. That the Swedish temperance army today numbers in round estimation half a million people is certain, says the last report.

Just imagine one-tenth of the population strictly temperance people! Is it not glorious? It is not in vain to work for the grandest cause in the world next to that of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. The victory is ours.

Yours, for God and home and native land,

JOSEPHINE PRINCELL,

The Need of Scientific Temperance Leaven.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I send the copy of a letter received by me some time ago which will, I think, be interesting to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. It indicates plainly what I have long felt to be true, that in the foreign lands especially, the first step toward getting temperance work started is the instruction of the children in the schools. You will see that Mrs. Prestwood says, "Parents are willing that their children be taught temperance truths, though they themselves drink and have no intention of giving it up." If we can get this leaven fairly to work in the distant lands, surely it will show rapid results; and we want to impress this fact on the minds of the people here as well as on the mission workers.

Very sincerely, MARY H. HUNT.

PARTS OF THE LETTER FROM BERMUDA.

DEAR MRS. HUNT:—Thank you so much for the parcels of literature safely received. I begin to see a "rift in the cloud" but it is a very tiny rift as yet.

I will tell you as briefly as I can the situation, knowing you will counsel and help. My husband is the pastor of the Methodist church in Hamilton. We have five circuits and pastors in Bermuda, forming a district attached to the Nova Scotia Conference. So we are Canadians, and have had our home in these semi-tropical islands a year and eight months. Wherever we go we always try to help on the cause of total abstinence and prohibition as much as possible. At home in Nova Scotia there is a public sentiment upholding one's endeavors, and right thinking and right living with regard to temperance is in the ascendency. It grieves me to find so different a standard in these sunny isles. Wine and all forms of alcoholic drinking are as common as is pure cold water with us. It is kept on table and sideboard and is offered upon all occasions.

Up to this time we have not succeeded in forming a union. I believe it will come by and by. The only perceivable result of my efforts is a spirit of inquiry about this new movement. If we could only have the right round-the-world missionary come to us, who could stay long enough to explain and win and teach, how grand it would be. I have not time nor strength to do what my heart prompts. I had written to Miss Willard about it only the last day of January, but suffering and death claimed the busy hand and heart.

I hope very shortly to send you orders for several copies of the School Physiology Journal. At least two teachers have promised to subscribe with me for it. I wish I could plan some way of sending it to each of the seventy or so of teachers in Bermuda. I have had two long conversations with the inspector of schools.

The color question prevents there being a public school system such as we have in the North. There are many private schools, and each teacher would have to be consulted personally. They use whatever books they see fit. Many of the teachers who cannot give the temperance lessons themselves because they use "stimulants," would, we think, be willing to have some one give half-hour lessons once a week. As a leading gentleman said to me, "Many parents who use liquors themselves would," he believed, "be very glad to have their children taught differently." The inspector told me he took his wine, etc., every day, and did not expect soon to give it up. A prominent medical man, interested in temperance, will, if convinced, when he reads these books, help the cause very much. He said it was a new thought to him to teach the children, that he would consult "Waddington" about it, by that meaning the principal of the most aristocratic and the largest of the boys' schools here.

Dr. Harvey said he took his glass of wine at every dinner, and had no intention of giving it up. The principal of the high school for girls has had some of my literature twice, and believes it to be a good thing, yet takes claret every day. She is open to conviction, I believe. I sent literature and a note to the bishop, and he became interested and said he would look further into the matter. It was a new idea to him. His coöperation would be of inestimable value. Personally he is an abstainer, but it is hard even for a bishop to take a stand for this cause when his people, his officials, and his clergymen are all wine users and "wine and spirit merchants," etc.

If I could get our temperance literature in the hands of our teachers, doctors, clergymen and editors, it would accomplish much. Please help me all you can. I am but one poor little W. C. T. U. worker, away out in the Atlantic, but it is a lovely spot and well worth saving.

In much love,

(MRS.) VICCIE LEWIS PRESTWOOD.

Temperance Demonstrations in Norway.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Friday, June 17, the W. C. T. U. in Christiania had a meeting to dedicate the new flag, a white silk banner, with the union's name and motto embroidered with dark grey silk. The hall was full, and warm, heartfelt words were spoken for the cause and for the world-wide union working for God and home and every land.

Sunday, June 19, about nine thousand temperance people were gathered in the midst of the capital of Norway to demonstrate against the use of strong drinks. The bright regiment of children, with waving flags, led the procession singing national hymns, and next there came the white ribbon (the new flag) carried by white-dressed girls and followed by brave, bright looking women and men, and all the other beautiful flags dedicated to the same cause. In almost tropical rain we marched on more than two miles, and all along the wayside there stood thousands looking and listening in wonder. A Norwegian poet has said, "When the thousands go onward the world must hear it." We shall, by God's help, be millions, and the world shall hear us and recognize the truth.

In the Lutheran missionary house, the Bethlehem church, in Gotaborg, about five thousand people were gathered from morning to evening, July 1–3, to listen to the conference of the Scandinavian Temperance Convention. Five temperance societies were represented. The W. C. T. U. in Norway, by Miss Hulda Tande, Christiania. One of the last speeches was made by Miss Elizabeth Lindquist, who in warm, strong words appealed to the women in Sweden not only to admire in silence a woman like Miss Willard, but to follow after her as far as they could. The convention was followed by the meeting of the Grand Lodge in Sweden, the largest grand lodge in the world.

How gladly we reach out our hands to men and women from all unions and nationalities. We shall never loosen the grasp. Hand in hand we shall go on to help and save and encourage.

Yours faithfully,

OLAFIA JOHANNSDOTTIR.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small. My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. He shall call upon me and I will answer him. I will be with him in trouble. I will deliver him and honor him.—Prov. 24:10; II Cor. 12:9; Psa. 91:15.

AMONG the elect women that have held high office in the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, none ranks higher than Mrs. Delilah A. Leaverton, Palestine, Ill. She was present that memorable day in Willard Hall, when that child of faith, brave, heroic Eva Shontz, called a meeting for prayer for the Temple. Among those who pledged to give $100 was Mrs. Leaverton; on account of illness, she was not able to pay her pledge until a short time ago. She writes: "I send by this mail $100, to help pay off the Temple Trust Bonds. I trust all friends of temperance will see the propriety of making the Temple a memorial to our beloved leader. Nothing that could be erected could more appropriately represent her busy, useful life, with its Willard Hall, where precious souls are daily taught to love God and live temperate lives, and from which center the work of the W. C. T. U., which she so loved, could reach out and bless the entire world."

Mrs. T. M. Fuller, territorial president of the W. C. T. U. of Indian Territory, writes: "Temple trustees' letter received. . . . I am with you in your efforts to raise the amount necessary to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds by the next National Convention. It is little I can do, but with my prayers I send $5. Credit the amount to the L. Jane Staple memorial tablet, for which the Territorial W. C. T. U. has pledged $100. I think we will be able to raise the entire amount by the National Convention." Mrs. B. L. Scovell, state president of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, writes: "I wish we might start a $5 pledge for 100,000 people that they will pay $5 when 100,000 have pledged to do so. This would give us $500,000 which would buy up a big bunch, and while that pledge is being taken, let others work as they are now. I will pledge $5 on that ground—to pay when 100,000 persons have thus pledged. I have worked on this plan for two years and have put $20 myself into the Temple." I agree with Mrs. Scovell, only the $5 should be sent in at once on faith. God's children should not hesitate or wait for others. This is the cause, I fear, of our leanness. It is well enough to get conditional subscriptions from those outside our ranks.

The W. C. T. U. of Northampton, Mass., have set a good example of what may be accomplished by sending out the 50 cent subscription cards. They have just sent in $40, of this amount $25 came from sending out fifty cards. Let all members of unions holding the cards send them out to friends. Let it not be said when we come up to our memorial convention in November at St. Paul, that we were not each willing to put forth a little effort to secure that for which Frances Willard dedicated her fifty-ninth year. In this way, at least, we can show our love for the memory of our departed leader.

A sweet letter comes from Mrs. D. Irene Holt, the president of the Pasadena, Cal., union. She writes: "The Temple trustees' letter received. . . . We are rejoiced and thank God for your courage and we will every one of us stand by you. . . . Oh, how I long for money now, but we have pledged $100 here from our little union. I wish it were many thousand times as much." A ringing resolution comes from the convention just held by the fourth district, Iowa W. C. T. U., expressing sympathy and pledging financial support.

✠

All money from Wheels, subscription cards, tablets, pledges from unions, etc., should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, and drafts should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer Temple Trustees. All orders for supplies for the above should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Room 1118, The Temple, Chicago. Also orders for Miss Willard's picture or application for agencies for its sale should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Our Children.

Our Harvest Home.

[Used by kind permission of the Young Crusader.]

THE 28th day of September has long been regarded by Legioners as their very own. By vote of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss Willard's birthday was thus set apart as the Children's Harvest Home.

With beautiful and pathetic appreciation, she wrote to the National L. T. L. secretary, "I will try to be a better woman for such a beautiful tribute as this," and we know the world is better because she lived.

It is our earnest desire that every Legion shall observe Harvest Home Day this year. Let it be a day of sacred memory, in which we shall study the beautiful life of Frances E. Willard, gathering from it an inspiration, higher living, a steadier purpose, a more earnest resolve, and a deeper consecration to the cause for which she spent and gave her life.

We are sure these suggestions from Miss Anna Gordon will be helpful to those planning an observance of the day:

"You will tell them how we all want them to specially remember the day, not only for its original significance of harvest home, but to gratefully remember the life and the work of our beloved leader, and to try to build up the cause she so dearly loved. They will sing her songs, read from sketches of her life, and why would it not be nice for them all to bring flowers that day and have an exercise in which they should place them all in front of her picture, which might be on an easel, with the understanding that after the meeting they were to be taken to the sick and poor by the children themselves if possible. They might also each bring some fruit if thought best, for the same purpose."

Use the usual Harvest Home decorations, adorn the walls with mottoes from Miss Willard's sayings, and place portrait of our departed leader on an easel, in prominent place on the platform. Copy "An Honorable Record" (Memorial number Young Crusader), in large letters, upon heavy drawing paper or muslin, frame and place above or below the portrait.

Wise Words.

THE following quotations are for recitation in Harvest Home exercises. Others may be gleaned from the two leaflets suggested by Miss Gordon, "Scientific Temperance Instruction in Public Schools" (National Leaflet No. 9); "Turn on the Light."

"I want my children's brains to be full of the best thoughts that great minds have had in all centuries."—Madam Willard.

"I thank God for my mother as for no other gift of His bestowing."

"What the world most needs is mothering."

"The fight for a clear brain is a fight for Christianity."

"We believe in prohibition by laws, prohibition by politics, prohibition by woman's ballot."

"I want to be right at whatever cost."

"Woman, like man, should be freely permitted to do whatever she can do well."

"Woman ought to have the power to close the dramshop over against her home."

"May God lead us all into lives and deeds of tenderest charity and divinest toil for the weak."

"Let us go forward."—Frances E. Willard.

"Why don't people do more to make the world good?"

"Tell everybody to be good."—Mary Willard.

Honor thy Father and thy Mother.

MISS WILLARD gave public adherence to this commandment, in the many tributes lovingly paid to the parents who so wisely guided her youth. Very beautiful is the character of the mother, which the daughter paints for us in the following selections from her writings:

"Mother's prayers and singing always made her children glad. In the thunderstorms of that new west, I was wont to hide my face upon her knee and say, 'Sing "Rock of Ages."' Somehow I was never afraid while mother's soul was lifted up to God.

"A little group around my mother's knee, studying a book, and afterward going with her into my father's flower garden, where she plucked rewards of merit for us in the shape of pinks and pansies, is my earliest memory as a student. . . From her lips I learned much of Coleridge, Cowper, Thompson and other great interpreters. . . I thank God for my mother as for no other gift of His bestowing. Perhaps because I need her more, I am very proud of her, and few women I have ever seen have satisfied me as she does."

In those delightful glimpses of the dear home life, Miss Willard tells us that her "father's heart beat close to nature's own. The ways of birds and butterflies, the habits of gophers, squirrels and ants—he used to know about them, as a farmer might, and he taught us every day to learn them; to know the various herbs, and what their uses were; to notice different grasses and learn their names; to tell the names of curious wild flowers. He always carried his little spy-glass, a folded two-foot measure and a pocket thermometer, teaching us how to use them. He carried a tape line, too, and was fond of measuring the girth of trees, and he taught us to make a thorough study of the weather as well as of the woods.

"He said, 'The children must have habits.' He never said, 'good habits,' so I grew up with the idea that there were no habits except good ones! He decided that no calls or visits should be received on Sunday, which was easy enough to observe, as there was nobody to come but the birds, and nowhere to go except to the fields and pastures. For himself he would not shave or black his boots; he would not read or write a letter; he would not so much as look into the dictionary for a word on the Sabbath day."

Strict he might be in the observance of what he deemed right, but he was comrade as well as counselor, as is evinced when Miss Willard tells us, "He made each of us girls a tall, cone-shaped paper cap, which Mary trimmed with peacock's feathers and symbols of hunting, according to father's direction. He fitted us out with fresh arrows, taught us how to fly a dart, made a wonderful kite and sent it up over the fields, imitated perpetual motion with the saw boy that he carved with his 'drawing knife,' balanced with a stone and set at work with a wooden saw. He went with us to watch the sheep, and to carry lunch to the men at work in the fields, and took us out to ride when he had to go on school business." Well might our great leader say, "Thanks to parental wisdom, I passed my childhood and early girlhood in perfect quietness, simplicity and the holiness of nature's company."

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A great many of you belong to the L. T. L., but you do not all subscribe for The Young Crusader, so I am giving you a program for the observance of the Children's Harvest Home, September 28, which appears in the September number of the L. T. L. paper.

Miss Willard's birthday was, as you know, set apart as Membership Crusade Day, and is kept as such by all members of the W. C. T. U., but the children have always made a special effort to observe it, and I am sure you will now have a double incentive to honor the memory of the dear leader who has passed on. The program gives you full directions for the carrying out of a successful meeting, and the songs and back numbers of The Young Crusader mentioned can be obtained of the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, and if you commence your arrangements at once, there is ample time for preparation. Let us make this such a Harvest Home of new members as would give joy and encouragement to Miss Willard were she still with us.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl thirteen years old. My mamma is the president of the W. C. T. U. We live in a college town. There is a lake not far from here in which I like to wade, and when papa has a boat I like to hang on to the end of the boat and float while he rows. While down there, one day, we went across the lake, and papa went for water-lilies and left my cousins and myself on shore. There were horses and cows there, and my little boy cousin was afraid of them and cried, so we waded out in the water so they wouldn't get him.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I thought I would write to you, as I have just got home from my vacation. I have been out in the country to see my brother, who lives with my auntie, for our mamma is dead, and I live with my grandma. Brother lives on a big farm, where they have lots of cows and horses and chickens, and I fed the chickens and got the eggs. My brother's name is Charlie, and he rides the horse's back. I go there every vacation, and I have a nice time.

The Open Door.

THE absorbing question of the hour is, "What shall be done with the Philippines?" The arguments used largely by the politician and statesman for and against their retention by the United States are from a commercial standpoint, —money and the advantage of trade, set over against the prospective expense of maintenance of control.

To the close student of "God in history," a more potent argument obtains. To him comes the prophetic announcement made centuries ago, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door," and with that open door comes a glorious opportunity to this nation. For centuries those islands have been under the rule of Spanish oppression. So far as civilization goes, they occupy the same position that they did hundreds of years ago. They, with the other colonies of Spain, have been in a state of almost hopeless insurrection for years. Now, in the providence of God, the door to this dark region has been thrown open to the most beneficent, liberty loving Christian nation of the globe. We did not seek this war; in fact, we believe every reasonable means to prevent it was exhausted, and it was not until the cry of oppressed humanity became so loud and importunate that we dared not refuse to give help, that this nation took up arms in defence of poor, starving Cuba.

In a most remarkable and unexpected manner the Philippines were thrust upon us. Now the question before this great nation is, shall we give to these millions of illiterate, oppressed semi-barbarous peoples, the inestimable blessings of a free government and the hope of a higher civilization in the future, or shall we shut this open door and remand the suffering millions back to their former darkness and utterly hopeless condition? When the iniquity of Pharaoh was ripe, God stretched forth His hand to give relief and liberty to Israel. Who can doubt that the iniquity of Spain has reached a degree of maturity that has led God in His wisdom and mercy to reach out a hand of help and if He has seen fit to choose this nation as His instrument to save these distant, benighted islands and lead them out into the light of a Christian civilization, who shall dare to forbid it?

To us the burning question is, dare we in the light of the dawn of the twentieth century withdraw our help, and thrust these oppressed multitudes back into the darkness and death of mediæval tyranny, and shut this open door in the faces of those who are looking for light and are reaching out their hands and with beseeching cry calling upon us for deliverance? Think for one moment what another century shall bring to these people. Under their former rulers no one would expect to find them on a higher plane one hundred years from now. But under the fostering care of a free government, protected in their industries, with the blessings of education, civilization and a free gospel, we can imagine the great advance that would come to them thus aided by the United States. If for humanitarian reasons we took up this war, that so many of us deprecated, let us not stultify ourselves and belie our motives by refusing to acknowledge the great responsibility that has come to us, to break the chains of oppression and set these people free. We must not forsake them, nor drive them back to darkness.

Printers and Drink.

"I WAS graduated at a printing office," was the proud reply given by a young man who had applied for admission to New England's foremost theological seminary, when asked the name of his college. The authorities of the seminary wisely recognized the high standard of his alma mater, and promptly admitted the applicant. Printers are, as a class, the most intelligent workmen in the world. Housed up in some great building, bending over their exacting task, little is seen of them by their neighbors, yet these men and women too, nowadays, are engaged in a work, the least item of which will be eagerly scanned a few hours or days later, by myriads of eyes. Shy and taciturn before strangers your journeyman printer may be, especially when off duty, yet he is apt to be voluble and even brilliant when in his native habitat, the composing room. Alas, that it must be added, our friend too frequently attempts to heighten the value of his good time when off duty, by resorting to strong drink. The pendulum that is forced far in one direction by the exacting nature of his work, tends to swing as violently in the opposite direction.

Direct testimony, therefore, by one who belongs to this large and important class, as to the ruinous effect of alcohol as a stimulant, is of peculiar value. An old time printer recently told something of his experiences, in our presence. He has long been identified with all branches of the business, and is therefore entitled to a hearing. He said, "Twenty-five years ago the drink habit was almost universal among printers, 'of whom I am one of which,' as Artemus Ward might say. I served my apprenticeship of three years in a country office, and well do I recall the weekly sprees of the 'boys' from foreman down. Beginning early Saturday night they would seek out congenial companions and, attired in their Sunday best, wander from saloon to saloon, playing cards, billiards and other games, drinking all the time. I recall one young man who boasted that upon a certain occasion he drank no less than fifty-two glasses of beer between sunset and sunrise. On Sunday afternoon in the beer gardens or Turner halls the debauchery was usually renewed, and great was the frolic and happy were the hours, from their standpoint, which were enjoyed by these nimble-witted printers. Each week they fairly succeeded in 'painting the town red.' But you should have seen these men on Monday morning. They presented a sorry spectacle. Fortunately for me, my parents discouraged all participation in drinking bouts, so that the new week found me strong and ready for work. But the beer guzzlers came slouching in bleareyed, unsteady of nerve, husky of voice, stiff-jointed, irritable of temper, and usually 'dead broke.' It was not until about Wednesday noon that 'Richard was himself again,' and the terrible effects of the 'Katzenjammer' had quite disappeared. I have been associated mostly with German printers, and this word Katzenjammer suggests a world of horrors to them. The word means 'cat lamentations,' and if you have ever listened to the wails of a lost cat, you can form some conception of how these topers feel when sobering up after a big drunk. I have known a German compositor piteously to beg on Monday morning for a dime to get 'a bracer,' as he called it, before going to work.

"But it was not until I took a position on a great daily," continued the speaker, "that I saw the full measure of the drink evil among compositors. We went to work at six o'clock in the evening, and usually got in the last dispatches shortly before three in the morning. All was smooth sailing during the first part of the night, but after the last street-car had ceased running, and midnight tolled over the sleeping city, the drinking men began to feel the need of their favorite stimulant. There was a standing rule prohibiting the use of beer during working hours, but this rule was easily evaded, and after a glass or two, the 'click-clack' of the type went on merrier than ever. During a short period I was invariably distanced by these thirsty souls, but long before one o'clock came the ebbtide of their strength, making of the last hour a terrible grind. Though not stronger than others, my weekly earnings were larger, solely, I think, because I let the saloon severely alone. Occasionally I still meet some of the 'boys,' and though many of them were once well-favored and talented, they now appear anything but good-looking and seem prematurely old and decrepit."

We have only to add that could the bottom facts be known, doubtless the more thoughtful and observing men of other occupations could give similar telling testimonies.

"Zeal Without Knowledge."

ONE of our prominent religious journals thus rings out its warning voice: "A woman, an educated physician, has offered herself as a candidate for the post of army surgeon. This act may be charitably taken as an instance of zeal without knowledge," etc., etc. Then is reiterated, with some asperity, the announcement that the government does not employ women as nurses in the war. Finally, giving a thin, reluctant compliment to the Red Cross Society, our journalistic sentinel issues a loud-voiced permission to the weaker sex to work at home as much as they please for the army, and to gather and send hospital supplies to the relief committee at headquarters.

The world is full of instances where women have taken and held positions which seemed just as foreign to their natures as the one in question. Whatever the most conservative mind may think regarding the unsuitableness of women as surgeons and nurses, the late trying scenes of our war prove how sorely the help of woman was needed. When our boys lay sick and dying from mere lack of comforts and attention, what miracles she might have wrought for them! Hundreds of our soldiers owe their lives to-day to the noble women who volunteered as aids to the few surgeons employed by the government. Hundreds of other lives might have been saved by the hands that were refused service.

In their attitude toward our volunteer nurses, the authorities at Washington were doubtless actuated by the generous desire to shield them from unsupportable hardships of hospital and climate. But this theory of inability stands disproved by the scenes of Siboney alone. There, where our strongest men were able to endure only six hours of the unutterable strain, our few women bore uncomplainingly the service of twenty-three hours of the twenty-four. Woman's usefulness must be the key to unlock all closed doors to advancement. Her field is where she is needed, even though it be the battlefield.

A Horrible Thing.

ARE canteens to be opened at Montauk Point? This would be a burning shame, and a menace to the liberties of the people. It would be well for the residents of that locality to look to their doors before the prohibition horse is stolen. A correspondent writes:

The war ships are all anchored off Staten Island, and when the boys are given shore leave they have to cross our ferry, and fully seventy-five per cent of them are under the influence of liquor as they return, many of them drunk. So many of them are only boys and that makes it all the worse. Then the soldiers all have to come to New York on their way home, and every saloon is open, while many of the churches are closed and the good people away on a vacation. And now the word comes that canteens are to be opened at Montauk Point in defiance of the local option prohibition law. I have written President McKinley, General Young, Secretary Alger and Secretary Long. We held a service on the U. S. S. Harvard two weeks ago, the first service they had had in over two months. Why not ask President McKinley to issue an order forbidding a soldier in United States uniform entering a place where liquors are sold? That would help wonderfully.

Language is inadequate to express our indignation toward the whole canteen business. To read of the awful condition of these boys when they arrived at Montauk and of the lack of everything for their health and comfort—no place for many of them, no tents, no beds, no change of clothes, no food—nothing, absolutely nothing but the bare ground or the crowded vessel and hard tack, and they sick, emaciated, starving, too weak to walk, or staggering along, almost bereft of reason—conditions which made even experienced surgeons wring their hands in despair—and then furnish them with a poison to complete the ruin that a Cuban campaign has not quite accomplished. Shame that our sons starved because some one was inefficient! shame that our boys died for lack of surgeons and nurses! but ten thousand times more shame that they went away bright young soldiers and come back broken, debauched drunkards! Who made this horrible thing possible? Is the President alone responsible? Is the war department? Is the voter in this free government of ours? Let every man answer whether or no he is a partner in this business of breaking, blasting, debauching the bodies and souls of our boys.

Political Freedom.

THE discussion whether the inhabitants of our neighboring islands have sufficient intelligence, self-reliance and morality to be worth our war is placing public attention upon a minor point. It is often said that these alien races are not worth the fighting for. This may or may not be so. But the status of political freedom is worth fighting for. In the Revolutionary war we fought for our own political freedom; in the Civil war we fought for the freedom of the blacks whether we knew it or not; now in this Spanish war we are fighting for the freedom of our neighbors. The people launched into the present war with their attention and design turned towards the goal of freedom. May American ambition still pursue this course and the seductive policy of imperialism be thwarted. Providence seems to call us to be the western warder of the contiguous islands of the sea and to acquire justice and political freedom for the neighbors at our door. May they be the recipients of this great boon—political freedom.

Deep down below and within all the commotion which is shaking monarchical dominions, lies the thought which produced the present upheavals. This thought is embodied in our own Declaration of Independence. That marvelous document planted the seed which is destined to great fruition. Belligerent uprisings may not cease until the nations which prove unyielding to this underlying thought power shall have passed away, giving place to more pliable conditions, conditions that will yield readily to the principles of race growth.

While the nature and morals of republicanism do not interfere with the policy of national expansion, yet the essence of political freedom conflicts decidedly with wild schemes of conquest that contemplate the establishment of a colonial empire. Is it not unwise to introduce a policy hostile to our tradition—that of governing without the consent of the governed? It is due to our existing theories to foster the principle of self-government wherever within the sphere of our influence that principle becomes manifest.

Circumstances are changed. This nation can not be put back where it was three months ago, and the people are called upon to decide its future policy. Women's societies ought to discuss this question. The problem is here and women should contribute their part and share in the labors of its solution.

From Our Contemporaries.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer speaks our sentiments exactly in an editorial.

"This war has brought out and emphasized anew the ancient and not very honorable fact that it is almost impossible for men to concede woman's right to the ballot on simple, plain, old-fashioned justice, without any mixture of selfish expediency. A woman's right to vote is entirely independent of anything she thinks, or says, or does, and, in this respect, it is precisely like a man's right to vote. The disabilities which the law recognizes as an obstacle to man's voting are the only disabilities that should bar woman from the ballot box.

"American statesmen declare war untrammeled by the opinions of American women. And how do these women deport themselves under such trying circumstances? First, they say good-by to their husbands, sons, brothers and sweethearts, and then they set about organizing Red Cross Auxiliaries and Army and Navy Leagues, and furnishing hospital ships, and they carry the American army and American navy on their hearts and brains night and day until peace is declared. Would men do as well under similar conditions?

"Let us suppose that women held the reins of government, and that one day a belligerent congress of women declared war without asking the consent of the disfranchised men. And suppose these helpless citizens had to sit still and see the wives, mothers, sisters, cousins and aunts of the nation called out for volunteer service, and marched off to Cuba and the Philippines. How many sinews of war, think you, would be furnished by these bereft and disfranchised male creatures? No doubt in less than forty-eight hours the land would ring with a cry of 'Let us have peace at any price.'

"Women love peace, but when they find themselves face to face with war they are patriotic and philosophic enough to accept the situation. If woman suffrage is to come as a reward of woman's merit, and through man's chivalry, it should come now that the war has closed. Women who are faithful to their country's interests whether in war or peace, ought to have a voice in declaring war and maintaining peace."

The Interior:—Even men of the world are coming to accept the fact as indisputable, that differences between individuals or nations can be adjusted by counsel rather than by war. The old notion that a man of honor must be ready to fight "on the drop of a hat," is put by for the more reasonable one that men of good sense and common honesty can either reach an agreement or a peaceable separation by the exercise of patience and kindness. If statesmen and soldiers can maintain self-control and sit down amicably to the adjustment of their differences, ecclesiastics should be able to do as much.

The Independent:—We are glad to see that in Pennsylvania the Hon. Wayne McVeagh has come out for Dr. Swallow for governor, and it looks as if Mr. Wanamaker and his friends were turning that way. Indeed, the leading papers of Philadelphia, such as the Ledger, Press, Times and Bulletin, are either actively supporting Dr. Swallow or are giving him the passive support of attacking the candidates of the parties of the rings. The days of the rings in Pennsylvania are nearly numbered, we hope.

Clara Bewick Colby, editor of the Woman's Tribune, writing of camp life at Chickamauga Park, speaks of the motives brought to bear on the soldier to make him good, but says: "On the other hand the regimental canteen outweighs all the other influences, and not only engulfs the soldier's money, but leads to the disorders that cause him to be fined, and also make him tenfold more liable to sickness and to fatal results than are those who do not drink. No one makes any excuse for the canteen, save that here only beer is sold and that that is not so bad as the vile whisky that would otherwise be smuggled in."

The Woman's Journal does not find Clara Barton opposed to woman suffrage as some have asserted. A late number has this: "Clara Barton appealed to the veterans to vote for woman suffrage, many years ago, as follows:

"'When you were weak and I was strong, I toiled for you. Now you are strong and I am weak. Because of my work for you I ask your aid. I ask the ballot for myself and my sex. As I stood by you, I pray you stand by me and mine.'"

A Message from Clara Parrish.

MY DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—Few things have influenced my life more than the last address which I heard Miss Willard give, and I want to pass a thought from it along the line to you, believing that it will "touch and tender" your heart as it did mine, and cause you to make a deeper consecration.

It was at the Woman's College, Baltimore. A thousand young women composed her audience. You know that the girls who attend this excellent school are from the very best homes in the land; I mean homes of wealth as well as refinement, and realizing as she did that such girls are sometimes indulged till they become careless of others' comfort, our matchless leader evidently planned to give them a lesson in unselfishness.

She spoke first of her own school days and then of their superior advantages; of how lovely it was to be permitted to come to that charming place, and study music and painting, French, German, etc. Then in conclusion she said: "But that isn't what I want to know about you. If I were looking for a young woman to be associated with me, I shouldn't ask whether she could read French or German; I shouldn't ask how well she could play the piano nor how exquisitely she could paint. I should not even inquire whether she were polite to her classmates; what I should want to know, is, how she treats the servants in her home, the newsboy, the dog upon her doorstep." These were her exact words and they burned themselves into my conscience never to be effaced. Indeed, if it had not been for the new determination that came to me then I doubt if I should have had the courage a few months later to deliberately turn my face from all I held dear, and try the unknown sea of faith and hope alone.

What a wonderful heart of love hers was! Love for even the brute creation. And she always took time to express that love, whether it was what was in her own soul or whether it was of the faith of some friend.

In one of her very last letters to me, speaking of the great distance that separated us, and thinking to encourage me, and drive away all loneliness she said: "But you are really with us in thought; only the waves divide, and they are nothing; thought, affection and purpose are the only things and no wave ever touched them, not even the wave of death." This, to me, is one of the most beautiful things she ever said. Heaven became more real at once, and now I feel that not even the "waves divide" since she left the land of her birth.

Young women, let us pray fervently, constantly, that the Father may give to each one of us a part of the spirit that He gave her in such large measure, so that together we may finish out her years.

With a love which separation strengthens,
I am always yours,
Tokio, Japan. CLARA PARRISH.

Death of Miss Allen.

IN THE UNION SIGNAL of August 18 a letter from Clara Parrish contained this reference: "I have just heard that Miss Belle Allen, of Tokio, has organized her tenth L. T. L., which puts more than a thousand children under this instruction in her district alone. It is a marvelous work for Japan. The daily papers of almost the same date contained the news of the accidental death of Miss Allen, with a companion, Miss Maud E. Simons, the result of a collision in the harbor of Yokohama, where they had gone to bid Godspeed to some departing friends.

Both young women were graduates of the Chicago Training School for home and foreign missions. Miss Allen went out six years ago and had returned once on furlough. Miss Simons entered upon her work in the Orient eight years ago and had not since returned to this country. Miss Allen was born in Darbyville, Ohio, November 11, 1862, and prepared for College at Bellefountain, where her family moved. She was one of the happy results of Christian college training, for her conversion took place during her senior year at Ohio Wesleyan. She served first at Fukuoka, then at Nagasaki, where she was the principal of a girls' school for three and one-half years. Then two years at Tokio, afterward at Yonezawa, at Sendal and back again to Tokio for her last service. Besides her trip to America, she had one vacation of three months, which was spent in Siberia.

That to the arduous duties of a foreign missionary she added a personal effort for the work of the W. C. T. U., especially among the children, is evidenced by Miss Parrish's letter. A large circle of earnest young women will learn of her death with sincere regret.

World's W. C. T. U.

A New W. C. T. U. Missionary.

MRS. E. SPENCER LARGE, of Tokio, Japan, has been appointed by the World's executive as a resident missionary, to succeed Miss Clara Parrish, and will enter upon her duties in September. Mrs. Large is a Canadian by birth, and the following personal sketch of her will be of general interest in view of the position to which she has been appointed in the World's W. C. T. U.:

"Mrs. E. Spencer Large is the widow of the late Rev. T. A. Large, B. A., whose death, at the hands of murderers, in Tokio, Japan, on the night of the 4th of April, 1890, has not yet been forgotten by the Canadian public. Mrs. Large was born in Toronto, and is the daughter of the late Rev. James Spencer, M. A.

"Before entering the mission work in Japan Mrs. Large had been for several years engaged in teaching in Manitoba. She taught in the Methodist college in Winnipeg, also in St. John's Ladies' College. She organized and taught the first public school in the town of Selkirk, Man. Successful as she was in this, it was not what she desired as her life-work, and when the call came for her to enter the mission work she gladly responded. Mrs. Large went on duty in Japan in February, 1885, assuming the principalship of the Jo Gakko, at the beginning of the next scholastic year. Her education, culture and traits of character not only made her specially fitted for this position, but won for her the respect, admiration and love of the Japanese, thereby affording her unusual opportunities for winning them to Christianity. In the summer of 1887 she was married to the Rev. T. A. Large, who was a teacher in the boys' college in connection with the same mission.

"The incidents of the terrible tragedy which resulted in the death of Mr. Large and the severe wounding of his wife are too well known to need retelling here.

"Having been at home, in Canada, for two years, she returned to Japan accompanied by Mrs. Gooderham, late president of the W. F. M. S. of the Methodist church in Canada, to take up mission work on independent lines, and it was while thus engaged that she was appointed to the position of World's W. C. T. U. missionary in Japan."

News from the Field.

Michigan.

THE welcome rap of THE UNION SIGNAL is heard again at our doors, and we read with a new meaning of what that world's and national paper is to our better living, better doing. It gave the Michigan general officers great pleasure that our plan of work for 1898 was approved by the National, and in furtherance of that plan the state president has been six weeks in the field, visiting twenty-five places up to date, holding one conversazione, attending two conventions, holding two parlor meetings and giving ten public addresses and many parliamentary drills.

Our corresponding secretary is in her office, editing our state paper and state reports, while the rank and file, in spite of the heat, the war and the consequent worry thereon, are advancing step by step, of which I will tell you by strata, leaving you to determine what this geologic formation is we are making.

FIRST DISTRICT:—The unions in Detroit have had their thoughts and hands turned to the soldier boys, as the recruiting camp was within their limits.

SECOND DISTRICT:—One union meeting at Ann Arbor was carried on by the university Y's with fine papers by the young women. The union gave a hygienic reception. From three to four, sixteen little ones were served, later the older ones. At Erie, by petition last year, places of business and saloons were kept closed; white-ribboners are trying for the same this year. At Adrian, Mrs. Humphry's prize contest was held in the opera house. Subject of prize essays, "The Effect of Alcoholics and Narcotics on the Human System." The papers were written by eighth grade pupils, and showed great care and earnestness. At the Industrial Home, where we have a union, Flower Mission Day was carefully observed; one of the girls rendered the fine solo, "Gracious God, thou knowest," in a most feeling manner. The Reporter says: "Educate the children aright and the tax-payers will have less reformatory institutions to support."

THIRD DISTRICT:—At Coldwater on a special occasion, seventy-five were present. Battle Creek held joint service with the Salvation Army. They are also contributing two papers to the Bureau of Exchange. They with Tekonsha union issue printed programs of the year's work. The latter have recently sent a barrel of literature, comfort bags and cash to our lumbermen. Eaton Rapids, on Flower Mission Day, sent bouquets to the sick and aged.

SIXTH DISTRICT:—Holly union held a gospel temperance meeting, Mrs. Young's paper, "Our Aims and Objects," the chief feature. A weekly paper of that place recently had a very fine autobiography of Mrs. Garner, our former district president, headed by her picture. At Fenton at their last public meeting, a collection was taken for the benefit of sick and wounded soldiers. Why not? Let white-ribboners ever remember that a Michigan woman, Mrs. Moffatt, our then state superintendent for soldiers and sailors, was the one who originated the idea of "our flag" from the school houses. At Parshalville, our president held two meetings with great acceptance. Mrs. Calkins, who is president of the fourth district, and our other state appointed field worker, is ill at home and therefore could not meet with Oak Grove union.

The unions of Oakland county attended W. C. T. U. Day at Orion Assembly grounds. Clio recently held a matrons' contest. Howell held a successful mothers' meeting; subject of papers, "The First Three Years of a Child's Life," "The New Sentiment in Foreign Lands." Flint, North Side, gave a farewell tea to Mrs. R. A. Carmen who, having lost her husband, leaves us for a new home in Tennessee. She has been a faithful worker on many lines, her special field being jail and almshouse work. Your reporter has spoken at the union open air meeting, and also on Temperance Sunday for the Epworth League.

SEVENTH DISTRICT:—The Capac union has taken up a course of study in scientific temperance. They also have Dr. Mary Wood-Allen's books for mothers' meetings. In connection with the Christian Endeavor society they supply a wall pocket in the depot, also the jail with literature.

Two members of the Berlin union are members of one of the district school boards. One was elected moderator at the recent annual meeting, and another has been twice re-elected as director. Almont union has presented the public library with Miss Willard's book.

EIGHTH DISTRICT:—Since the state convention the unions of Saginaw have formed a union of unions, with Mrs. Dickenson as president. Contests for gold and silver medals have been held by Chesaning union, and a young ladies' oratorical contest, also a matrons', will soon be held.

NINTH DISTRICT:—Hart and Shelby have held one joint meeting; the former visited the county farm, holding service; the latter observed June 9 as memorial meeting in honor of their own dead, decorating graves of the same. Big Prairie sent petition of signatures to Major-Gen. eral Brooke and Chief Surgeon Hartsuff against the canteen system. Big Rapids Senior L. T. L. participated in a flag raising at the home of Captain Roben.

The union held its last monthly meeting in the kindergarten room of the public schools. Their school of methods meetings are very profitable, with Mrs. Lucy Morehouse as leader. Evart has been working for our soldier boys and our state missionary, Rev. Odle, has preached for the union three times. Marion held a gold medal contest and is adding new members. Reed City was favored by a lecture from state president, also held a parlor meeting, receiving new members.

Bear Lake served ice cream at headquarters on the Fourth, with an attractive resting place for tired mothers and babies; two helpful addresses were by Professor Caton and Mrs. Minore. The latter was also at the county convention at Sherman, lectured at three places in a district where there was no union. At one of these towns they are now holding mothers' meetings.

Our comrades sow beside all waters. I was at a district home missionary meeting of the M. E. church where one of the county presidents, Mrs. Baldwin, of Livingston, had a paper upon "Highways and Hedges." She digressed to speak of our missionary in the lumber camps; only a word, yet at the close of the meeting one of the teachers slipped a five dollar bill in her hands to help.

TENTH DISTRICT:—The Bay City union has established a "mission station" in another part of the city. It has held one meeting there, and gained three new members, who agree to act as a committee to work up meetings and distribute literature.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT: Atwood union has recently held a contest. One feature of their year's work is increase of membership from ten to thirty-four. Charlevoix and Lelenaw have each held county conventions, both successful; matrons' contest at each; the former has been at work for the soldiers.

Mrs. Benjamin spent a month in the district, added new members to the unions and gave fresh impetus to the work. Some places were disappointed in not having her on account of the midsummer National executive called at Chicago.

TWELFTH DISTRICT:—The first county convention of Marquette county was held at Marquette. The sessions were divided into five meetings, and all were well attended by earnest workers. A fine paper by Mrs. Hixon was upon "Parental Responsibility." Parliamentary drills were given by Mrs. Law, who presided at the evening meeting, making the opening remarks. The L. T. L. hour was a pleasing feature, and all did well.

Mr. Trowbridge Johns spoke on behalf of the L. T. L's, and at the conclusion of his remarks presented the local union with a portrait of Miss Willard, the work of one of the inmates of the Branch prison, who had been converted through the visits of the W. C. T. U. The convention closed with a matrons' medal contest, Mrs. Mollay receiving the prize.

Of the many papers that come to me, The Harbinger, from this same upper peninsula, is fine. In one letter in its columns these two paragraphs occur: "Speaking of prohibitionists, I am not only one of the 'has beens,' but I am one of the 'am yets.'" "By using no ammunition stronger than God's grace, and no bullets harder than votes, the extirpation of the licensed saloons can be accomplished."

WHAT to choose from the wealth of accumulated news on my desk is a puzzling question. As well try to skim condensed milk as to try to get "the cream" from the condensed reports sent from some of our counties, whose writers are fast learning the "boiling down" process, and whose reports are so excellent they ought to be included verbatim, but for the very limited space which is my portion in "News from the Field."

New York white-ribboners are having a busy season. Summer assemblies, conventions, conferences, Chautauquas, etc., are in full blast as I write. The W. C. T. U. is en evidence wherever there is an open door, and, thank God, many doors are open to us nowadays.

Perhaps the very best of all the good things of the summer, at least that which interests the whole state, was the annual convention of the state Loyal Temperance Legion at Auburn. The great First Presbyterian church opened its doors for the young folks, and in the beautiful parlors of its fine new Chapter House, a delightful reception was tendered the incoming delegates and visitors, the evening before the convention.

The keynote of the whole convention was struck at the uplifting consecration service on the opening morning, conducted by the gifted young president of Pennsylvania Senior L. T. L., Charles Wesley Burns, himself a shining example of what L. T. L. training can do for a boy, he having been a Legioner from childhood. The corresponding secretary's report showed growth and improvement in methods. The reports of department superintendents gave the best idea of what this five-year-old society has set itself to achieve. Their flower mission work, systematic giving and press work follow the same general lines as do the same departments in the mother society. The report of the anti-gambling department showed a broad field for reform in which these zealous young temperance workers will find plenty of practical work. Their department of Junior L. T. L. promises a solution of the vexed question as to where teachers for the Loyal Legion are to be found. The hopeful, enthusiastic address of the president, Fred D. L. Squires, was also filled with practical suggestions as to future work.

The first evening was well filled with good things. There were the welcomes from everybody who could have the slightest claim to the privilege of giving a welcome, headed by Dr. Hubbard, pastor of the church in which the convention was held.

To all these greetings, fitting response was made by Prof. John W. Greenwood, of the Buffalo Normal School. The address of the evening was by Charles Wesley Burns. His subject was, "The Edge of the Future," suggested probably by the motto of the Seniors, "The Future is Ours."

Thursday was a busy day with the election of officers, plans and preparations for the ensuing year. The officers are: President, Mr. T. B. Roberts, Ithaca; vice-presidents, Florence E. Corey, Owego, and F. D. L. Squires, Cortland; corresponding secretary, Elma May Bowerman, Brockport; recording secretary, Vernie Eldredge, Hoosick Falls; treasurer, W. Ernest Gillespie, Odessa.

The commencement exercises were held the second evening and were a fitting close for this brilliant convention. I have not tried to describe the decorations of the auditorium, leaving to your imaginations the beautiful combinations of flowers and flags. But one new feature must be described. On the platform a lofty arch of evergreens held two golden gates, closed and securely tied with ribbons of pink, white and green, the L. T. L. state colors. These gates were swung open to admit alumni and new graduates, as they finished the grand march around the auditorium and passed through the "golden gates" to their places, the former in the audience, the latter to seats on the platform, while they sang,

"Swing wide, swing open, O century's door,
While we march stronger than ever before."

Then came the presentation of one hundred and twenty diplomas to the class of '98, by the state general secretary, Mrs. H. A. Metcalf. Following this impressive scene were the salutatory by Miss Anne Van Schaick, of Sharon Springs, an oration by Miss Nina McCarthy, of Cortland, the first state president of the Seniors; a beautiful vocal solo by Miss Hubbard, of Cortland, of the class of '93; the valedictory by Mr. T. B. Roberts, of Ithaca, and a brief address by Mrs. F. W. Graham. The four general officers of the state W. C. T. U. were present, each in her own way contributing to the interest of the occasion.

A beautiful memorial service was held at the grave of our beloved state president, Mrs. Burt, just after sunset. Touching and tender were the words said there, and the grassy mound was covered with a snowy pall of white carnations.

I must not omit mention of the vesper service, held the first evening at seven o'clock, the L. T. L. hour of prayer. Mrs. T. M. Foster (Faye Huntington) was the leader, her topic, "Life a Battlefield."

A new departure in Senior work is the publishing of the state report this year, separate from that of the W. C. T. U. Besides the full report of the convention this tasteful little pamphlet will contain pictures of the six officers, names of the graduates on the "Roll of Honor," and some interesting historical facts and data, making a very desirable little souvenir, to be obtained of the general secretary.

The convention at Auburn was the largest yet held in this state. Three hundred and sixty seals were won this year. There are now 1,000 graduates in the state Legion. May the number be doubled another year.

Richmond and Sullivan county Senior L. T. L's held their conventions in June.

W. C. T. U. Day at Prohibition Park was a grand success under the auspices of the five county unions of Greater New York. On the platform were flower-draped portraits of Miss Willard and Mrs. Burt, and a beautiful memorial service was a feature of the afternoon, at which Mr. Burt and his son were both present.

New York state W. C. T. U. was also well represented at the International Temperance Congress held in the same place. The state president, general secretary of Y work, five county presidents and three state superintendents were present.

Many county conventions have been held since my last letter, and some reported to me that were held in the spring. At all of these a memorial service for Mrs. Burt is reported, and in some instances for Miss Willard also.

Yates county has raised seventy dollars for the Elmira Anchorage, and has placed a drinking fountain on the most frequented corner of the main street in Penn Yan. Allegheny county made a success of W. C. T. U. day at Cuba Temperance Assembly. There was a prize rhetorical contest, and addresses by Belle Kearney and Lou J. Beauchamp. Hornellsville, Steuben county, has secured a curfew ordinance, for which the W. C. T. U. has labored two years. All the churches, including the Roman Catholic, participated in the last vigorous campaign which resulted in victory.

Wayne county has completed twenty years of organized labor "for God and home and native land." The "History of Two Decades," written by one of their members, was published in full in one of the county papers. Miss Rhena Mosher has been doing excellent work in Broome county. Onondaga county has two new unions in Syracuse. Oswego county has had a "white-ribbon wedding." The bride was the secretary of Palermo W. C. T. U., the groom an honorary member. The parents on both sides and the officiating clergyman are all white-ribbon wearers, as were many of the guests. The village of Oneida, in Madison county, is working hard for a curfew ordinance, 1,283 signatures having been secured for their petition.

Several unions have celebrated the "silver jubilee" for which our president planned the program early in the year. But I fear the majority of our unions feel that this is not exactly a "jubilee" year, and will wait till their hearts are a good deal lighter before they undertake it. Still the need of earnest work is just as great as ever, and funds must be secured to carry it on.

THE time for the district conventions is at hand, and the state convention cometh on apace. Only one short month remains to bring up reports and summaries which tell whether we have sat loitering by the way, or are bravely marched forward, losing neither the time nor the step in the pace set for us.

Our president, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, has been constantly in the field since the close of her remarkably successful Bay View Institute. Monticello had a fine address from her. Two days were given by her to the Chautauqua at Cameron, Mo., which she pronounces a gilt-edged assembly in every particular. Geneseo had a Sunday at which speaker and audience were at their happiest, and signally helped each other. The DeKalb county convention was splendidly attended, a medal contest and an address by the president being leading features. Reports showed a most satisfactory year's work. Mrs. Rounds gave one date to Darlington, Wis., also attended the fifteenth district convention at Carthage. On September 5 she goes to Buffalo, N. Y., to address the New York Labor Association, Col. Geo. W. Bain being the other speaker.

The W. C. T. U. institutes held under the auspices of Miss Hood, at Pontiac and Lythia Springs, were both of great interest. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman was the speaker at the former.

Piasa Bluffs has changed its name to Chautauqua, and here a three days' institute was held under the leadership of Miss Marie C. Brehm. Miss Walker, our state corresponding secretary, had charge of the literature. A symposium on "Total Abstinence and its Relation to Prohibition" was very helpful. A talk on the canteen system, by Mr. Barnes, a soldier from the regular army, followed by Colonel Sobieski, brought the institute up to the highest pitch of interest. Miss Brehm gave an address on "The Mission of the W. C. T. U.," and an hour devoted to "When, Where and How to Work" brought out practical discussion on public meetings, literature and press work. Work for young people's societies was discussed, and the Fourth of July parade for the L. T. L. and Y's was approved, also other lines of spectacular instruction.

Illinois is proud of the fact that her faithful President Reiley, of the fourth district, won the second prize of seventy-five dollars, for the collection of wool soap wrappers. It encourages us to go on eagerly in this plan of increasing our revenue. Let us also send in the T. & T. coffee coupons.

The Central union is resting for the summer months as usual. The summer kindergarten at Bethesda Mission is flourishing, with fifty-six children enrolled, and the day nursery was never better patronized. The Anchorage is overflowing. Mrs. Robt. Greenlee and Miss Alice Bond are planning a picnic at Lincoln Park for the little people at Bethesda.

An interchange of social visits between local unions is a great inspiration to the advancement of our work. The Harvey union recently entertained the LaGrange union in an all day party. Luncheon was served at noon, and the afternoon was spent in discussions of matters timely and helpful, the chief topic being the conditions of the girls in department stores.

The Ackermann union of Chicago is having a series of temperance addresses. Mrs. Helen M. Barker was their last speaker, and was received by a large audience.

Miss Brehm has spoken at Mendon, Ill., in the Asbury church, Chicago, and in her own church, one Sunday morning, filling the pulpit for her pastor.

Contest work in Illinois is always on its feet, owing to its being the home of the progressive National superintendent, Mrs. A. E. Carman. She reports Mrs. Margaret McQ. Milne, of Monmouth, as having organized classes in seven churches in Monmouth, which after competing for silver medals, united in a gold medal contest. One hundred dollars was cleared in the series. Mr. Bennett Taylor is making a success of medal work in Bushnell. A diamond medal contest will be held in Willard Hall in September, the contestants all Chicago young people.

Mrs. Mary Barnes, of Lacon, and Mrs. Mary Metzgar, of Moline, are prohibition party nominees for trustees of the state university. Illinois white-ribboners will all cast their votes for them.

THE second district reporter, Miss Roberta Grout, of Patterson, has collected items of news from the field, and kindly forwarded the same to the state reporter. Her example, followed by all the district reporters, would greatly facilitate the work, and would be appreciated.

The faithful members of the Patterson union have held two gospel meetings and three socials. Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson was there during her southern trip, and delivered an address. Eight young men, who have signed the pledge and joined the union as honorary members, are especially helpful to these devoted women. The L. T. L. is in a flourishing condition, and the financial status of the union at Patterson is gratifying.

The Y's at Crowley celebrated Flower Mission Day. The L. T. L., under the management of Miss Perkins, gave a public entertainment at the Presbyterian church, with select readings, recitations and songs. The Rev. Mr. Knickerbocker delivered an address, and a collection was taken for the purchase of temperance literature for distribution.

The Y's of Morgan City held a Fourth of July celebration, with patriotic recitations, songs, including the reading of the Declaration of Independence. Refreshments were served, and the reporter adds, "All went home patriotic citizens." The superintendent of the L. T. L. has promised a party for all the members who attend the meetings with a degree of regularity during the heat of summer. Miss Carrie Miller won the medal at the contest.

The mothers' meetings conducted by Mrs. H. C. Pharr, are gaining in interest and general attendance. The subject is announced and essays pertaining to the matter are solicited from the members. At one of these meetings Mrs. Hitchcock was present and gave a pleasing account of the work of the local union at Ramos.

A pretty gavel was presented to the president of the Morgan City union by Mr. E. W. Driebholtz. Tied with a white ribbon, a note was attached, saying, "May every tap of the gavel bring a new member." The press reporter, Mrs. M. L. Gray, is the right woman in the right place, and the temperance cause would be promoted by such a reporter in every town in the state.

Miss May C. Walker, of Baldwin, state superintendent of Sunday-school work, is sojourning for the summer at Lexington, Mass. She has, however, written all of the district presidents and many of the local presidents, urging the importance of this department of temperance work.

The laundress is sure of satisfactory results in her work if she uses Ivory Soap. Linens are of immaculate whiteness; no dirt or streaks anywhere. There's no room for criticism in the work when brought home.

Ivory Soap is cheaper than common soaps in the end.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

THE WHITE CROSS AND THE ARMY.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—In THE UNION SIGNAL of August 4, Dr. Wood-Allen wrote you of the opportunity that has come to us for promoting the White Cross work among the soldiers. On my return from Europe, she turned over the work to me, and I pledged myself to do all I can in His name. The most that we can do is to distribute the White Cross leaflets through the Y. M. C. A. tents located in each camp, and for this we appeal to you for help. I have just come from the naval hospital, where I took the pledges and leaflets to the men who are suffering for their bravery. One said: "My mother is in Chicago." Another showed me the comfort bag that had come to him on shipboard made by white-ribbon fingers, and into the sweet, motherly letter enclosed, at the boy's request, I put the card which pledges men "to treat all women with respect."

At Camp Black, which I am visiting personally, there are five thousand men, many of them sons of white-ribbon mothers; but one poor fellow, as he listened to one of the W. C. T. U. party sing, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" said, as the tears rolled down his face, "I have no mother." To all these camps excursion trains are running frequently, each one carrying vice as well as virtue, and this together with the ubiquitous canteen is making camp life more deadly for our boys than the shot and shell of the battlefield.

Through the blessed influence of the Y. M. C. A., hundreds of men are being withheld from the vices of camp life, but to us the Y. M. C. A. looks for the purity leaflets needed in this work. One great package of White Cross literature has already been sent to Mrs. Welles at Chattanooga, and another to Mrs. Thacher, but I wish to send them much more. The camps from Santiago to the Philippines are open to this work and the demand is great.

Dear ones, will you coöperate and enable the White Cross department to furnish these leaflets? Do not despise to send any amount however small. The Master's work is in haste, immortal souls are in peril, and the example of the widow's mite encourages us all to do what we can though it be but little. If any of you are making comfort bags or sending war testaments I will gladly send you White Cross pledge cards to enclose. Will those who desire to respond to this appeal please state, when sending contributions to the National superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors, that the donation is to be so applied?

In loving service,

White Cross Societies.

Will any state, district, county or local superintendent of purity or W. C. T. U. presidents who have acquaintance with or knowledge of White Cross Societies existing in their community, or of a Y. M. C. A. having a White Cross sub-committee, or of any effort that has been made to promote this work during the last year (whether successful or otherwise), kindly report the same to the general secretary of White Cross work at once? If the number of members and name of president of local societies can also be given, it will greatly add to the interest of the work. This is the season for annual reports, and as last year showed great advance in White Cross work over preceding years, I am very desirous that this year's report should prove that progress is our watchword. The following list of questions has been sent to all local superintendents of purity:

1. Has your union organized any White Cross Society?
2. When was it organized?
3. How many members has it?
4. How often does it meet?
5. What is your opinion of the value of this work?
6. President's name and address?
7. Corresponding secretary's name and address?
8. Have they followed the course of study as laid down by the general secretary in the New Crusade?
9. Are the pastors in sympathy with the work?
10. How many White Cross sermons have they given during the year?
11. What has been the increase of membership?
12. If there is no White Cross Society, why is there not?
13. Have you ever written the general secretary for suggestions?
14. Have you ever tried to interest the Y. M. C. A. in the White Cross work?
15. If not, why not?

This outline will be useful to any one having knowledge of local White Cross work in reporting the same to the general secretary of White Cross Societies,

MABEL L. CONKLIN.

SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION!

By vote of the National W. C. T. U. Convention of 1888, Miss Willard's birthday was set apart for all the years to come as the L. T. L. Harvest Home. It seems most fitting that our translated leader's first birthday in heaven should receive universal recognition from us who still toil in the earthly vineyard.

I therefore call upon all L. T. L. superintendents to arrange for a special recognition service upon Wednesday, September 28, if possible, or, if that is not available, upon the nearest convenient date. Let each Legioner be asked to honor the memory of Miss Willard by securing one new member for the W. C. T. U. whose name may be reported at this birthday gathering. We believe that many mothers and other friends of the children will respond to their appeal to join the union for Miss Willard's sake.

It is hoped to have ready for distribution at these birthday celebrations memorial cards, bearing upon one side a picture of Miss Willard, and on the other a fac simile of a pledge written by her own hand, to which each child receiving the card shall be asked to secure at least one signature. Watch THE UNION SIGNAL for advertisement of such cards.

In the Young Crusader, also THE UNION SIGNAL, will be found an exercise, prepared in part from suggestions made by Miss Gordon, for use at these birthday gatherings.

Let us not lose this opportunity to enshrine in the hearts of our Legioners the memory of one who loved them so well, and who conserved their interests with such tender care.
